The Great Collegian Put-On

You don't need a mirror to read the back page of this section; just an iron.

The red ink in this section only of the Back-to-Campus Collegian is 'heat sensitive' and will transfer onto a polyester-cotton blend when ironed if you follow the instructions accompanying the back-page graphics properly.

This is a first for the Collegian and a first for our printer and we hope that you'll be in on it too. We decided to print the Collegian's logo and the 'Singing Ink' graphic from Below the Salt' the newspaper's weekly fine arts supplement because this really is your paper; bought and paid for with student funds, owned by and operated for students. It was difficult deciding what else to run in transferable ink so we decided to print a 'No Nukes!' to give the silent majority a recognized voice if they so wish. The tomato graphic is something we hope that you will find amusing.

Remember that all of the red ink in this section ( page one, centerfold, and back page) is heat sensitive and is a potential iron-on.

New Fine Arts Center Season Promises Plenty

The Fine Arts Center has announced its schedule for the 1977-78 Concert Series. The series includes various special events planned throughout the year. This marks the third season for the Fine Arts Center, which opened in 1975 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert. Seiji Ozawa and the BSO will be returning again this year to the FAC Concert Hall, as well as many other familiar names and faces from the world of entertainment.

Broadway Theatre Series

Broadway's newest hit, Bubbling Brown Sugar is the first of four Broadway shows of the Broadway Theatre Series at the Fine Arts Center.

Bubbling Brown Sugar opens the series with a 3 p.m. matinee on Sunday, September 18. The evening performance is at 8 p.m.

Bubbling Brown Sugar takes its audience on a musical tour of Harlem during the period when the cafe society crowd from downtown went uptown to the Cotton Club, Small's Paradise, Connie's Inn and all the "in spots."

A whole new music was discovered by visitors from 'round the world: the music of Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Fats Waller, Eubie Blake, to mention just a few.

A whole new kind of dancing was going on at the Savoy — something called the Lindy Hop.

Something special was happening up in Harlemtown and anybody who knew anything knew that.

The essence of the "something" was captured and put on the Broadway stage — it's called Bubbling Brown Sugar.

The National touring company with orchestra will perform the musical at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Sunday, September 18.

The National Touring Broadway Cast of Cabaret will perform at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Thursday, October 13, 1977.

Cabaret is a slashing musical. "Life is a cabaret old chum" goes the title song with the entire show underlining the metaphor. The center of the action is the Kit Kat Club in Berlin at the end of the 1920's. This is where a young American writer meets the cabaret's eager but untalented English vocalist, Sally Bowles, for a troubling love affair. "Cabaret" is a scintillating unconventional musical play.

My Fair Lady, the biggest musical comedy hit in world theatrical history will be presented on Thursday, November 3 at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Edward Mulhare (Henry Higgens) and Anne Rodgers (Eliza Doolittle) will be starring in the Tom Mallow production as the aristocratic speech professor and the dingy flower girl he takes home in order to prove that by training in upper class pronunciation he can pass her off as a cultivated woman of the world.

My Fair Lady contains an abundant collection of song favorites. By now such tunes as "The Rain in Spain", "I Could Have Danced All Night", "On the Street Where You Live" and "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face" have entered into the musical consciousness of the world.

Same Time Next Year completes the Broadway Series with a performance on Friday, April 14, 1977.

The new comedy by Bernard Slade covers 25 years in the lives of two lovers, who meet once a year, every year without the knowledge of their families. For 25 years the romance continues, one day each year. After 25 years both lovers are free of their families. One husband has died and one wife has passed away. The events leading to their final date are humorous and touching.

Same Time Next Year will be presented by the National Touring Company.

Concert Hall Series

Over forty years of popular music which had the nation dancing and swaying is featured during this year's Concert Hall Series at the Fine Arts Center.

The series opens with the dynamic Sarah Vaughan on Thursday, September 29. Sarah Vaughan will sing a selection of the hits which brought her into the mainstream of popular music during the Fifties and Sixties.

The "King of Swing," Benny Goodman, brings his sextet to the Fine Arts Center on October 15 as part of the UMass Homecoming. Benny Goodman first played a clarinet fifty-nine years ago and today is still considered by some to be the "King of Swing," playing to SRO audiences nationwide.

During his first professional jobs, Goodman worked with legends of jazz and absorbed much that was available to him. Today's youngsters turn to Benny Goodman for the finest examples of jazz artistry and unsurpassed clarinet work.

Mr. Goodman will perform selections from his repertoire of hits covering forty years of jazz and popular music.

"The World's Greatest Jazz Pianist" Oscar Peterson will present a solo performance on Sunday, February 26, 1978 at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Winner of numerous jazz polls in the Fifties, Sixties and Seventies, Mr. Peterson will perform selections from his many albums along with his recent compositions.

Woody Herman and the Young Thundering Herd will return to Western Massachusetts on Thursday, April 13, 1978.

Last year Woody marked his 40th anniversary as a bandleader, a milestone in jazz he shares with only Count Basie and the late Duke Ellington.

His new 14 piece Young Thundering Herd features musicians from notable music schools around the country. Although many of them were not born when Woody first became a bandleader, he has developed a touring Herd which has audiences throughout the nation calling for more.

The leader clarinetist Herman will lead his Young Thundering Herd through forty years of his hits as well as Broadway tunes.

Celebrity Series

"The Phenomenon of the Music World", Lazar Berman inaugurates the Celebrity Series of the Fine Arts Center with a solo recital on Wednesday, October 26 in the Concert Hall at the Fine Arts Center.

The Soviet pianist first performed in the United States two years ago to outstanding acclaim. Music critics throughout the nation compared Lazar Berman to the likes of Listz and Rachmaninoff.

Yet, barely two years ago Berman, the 46-year-old Russian virtuoso, was known to only a few cultists who treasured his Soviet recordings or bootlegged tapes from rare recitals outside his native country.

Since his premiere tour in 1975 all of this has changed. Last year he presented 19 performances in 15 cities in 34 days, receiving ecstatic reviews.

Since the early 50's Berman has played in hundreds of Russian and Soviet Bloc cities, but Western Europe discovered him late and the United States discovered him even later.

This year he will present a solo performance at the Fine Arts Center on Wednesday, October 26, 1977.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra return to the Fine Arts Center on Saturday, November 19, 1977. The leader of the Pops for many years will direct the orchestra through a selection of the hits the Pops have arranged in their own distinctive Boston Pops Orchestra style.

The 24-year-old violin virtuoso Eugene Fodor will display the style and technique which has made him famous with a performance on Thursday, December 8, 1977.

The winner of the 1974 International Tchaikowsky Violin Competition will offer a solo performance at the Concert Hall at the Fine Arts Center.

Mr. Fodor records exclusively for RCA Records and to date has made six albums. He plays a Guarneri del Gesu violin.

The return performance of the internationally renowned Jean-Pierre Rampal and Robert Veyron-LaCroix will conclude the 1977-78 Celebrity series on Saturday, February 11, 1978.

Flutist Rampal and his keyboard partner Veyron-Lacroix will return to the Fine Arts Center for their third performance in as many years. Each year the audience has acclaimed the musical expertise presented by this team.

Dance Series

The Dance Series opens with the New England premier of the World Famous Joffrey Ballet. The Ballet with full orchestra will present three different programs on November 15, 16, 17, 1977.

The Joffrey Ballet will open their tour at the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday, November 15 with Viva Vivaldi, The Morr's Pavane, Tchaikovsky Pas De Deux, and Trinity.

Wednesday's performance features As Time Goes By, Touch Me, Pas Des Deesses and Deuce Coupe II.

Thursday's performance features Kettentanz, Rodeo, and Trinity.

The Hartford Ballet will present the Holiday favorite, The Nutcracker on December 3 and 4, 1977. Both performances on Saturday and Sunday are at 8 p.m. along with a special matinee performance on Sunday, December 4. Special children's prices are available for the matinee performance.

The Hartford Ballet will be accompanied by the UMass Symphony, Wayne Abercrombie, Conductor.

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre will perform on February 7, 8, and 9, 1978. In its 19 year history it has grown from 7 to 23 dancers. The Alvin Ailey American Dance

'TIS A NAUGHTY NIGHT TO SWIM IN

By Rich Pioli

And the musical stories continued throughout the summer of 1977 albeit a little less frequently than at other more commercially receptive times of the year. One may have been a little more hard pressed to find something interesting, more than your average air fare, but luckily there were some interesting happenings besides those numbers that shot to the top of the charts in the spring and remained there all summer. To be fair to the music would involve a lot of different styles and albums and I would have had to start writing this in June. However, I will nobly attempt to list many of the jewels that may or may not have been picked up by either you or the radio.

Much of the music is outstanding, more far-reaching than ever before; the assembly is more integrated and I hope these selections will demonstrate that consistency view. All musics can be excellently represented and be harmonious with each other which simply means there's more to it for all of us, something to celebrate in itself. As time goes by all the categories will cease being categorical; the beauty of music will make it meaningless to speak of it in any terms whatsoever.

The Beatles Live at the Hollywood Bowl (Capitol)
The Beatles Live at the Star Club, Hamburg, 1962
— The Beatles

Both these releases are absolute musts for Beatles fans like myself, although it's rather hard to compare these two performances; one can be considered a very precious document, the other just another fine example of what the Beatles meant to all of us. Personally Hamburg is that more interesting because they are pre-fab Fab Four; there is the garbled innuendo of Messrs. Lennon and McCartney, Harrison's aborted solos and Ringo's slam power. Truly raucous. This paradoxically does not serve to demean the straighter Beatles performance, only accent it with a grander history. On Bowl the boys turn out some truly fine energy on their standards. Lennon's "Dizzy Miss Lizzie" is hard and solid. The movie theme songs are dynamic energy crystals, as inspiring as the shrill whrrr of the screaming testifying to this music's power.

Love You (Warner) The Beach Boys

The Beach Boys and summer have been difficult to distinguish in the past; not so this year. Trying hard to make some of their old designs fly has only yielded half-success. With Brian Wilson once again piloting, the boys have left their serious ecological and "Feel Flows" period behind in light of some simpler, catchier music-making. Unfortunately, they may have over-simplified; Brian's lyrics often insult the adult intelligence with baby talk and pre-puberty yearns. The production, on the other hand, harkens back to "Wild Honey" and other path-finding methods. Still the Beach Boys may truly return one of these days pending a further finagling of their magic ingredients.

Aubrey Beardsley graphic

> "Any person in today's music scene knows that rock, Classical, folk and jazz are all yesterday's titles. I feel that the music world is getting closer to being a singular expression, one with endless musical stories of mankind."
> — Ornette Coleman, 1977

Second Honeymoon — Don't Stop the World (Warner) Deaf School
'45, Another Great Divide-Stranger than Fiction (Chrysalis) Split Enz

Both Deaf School and Split Enz possess that sense of theatricality we so often experience around here via Orchestra Luna, but when it comes to structures and melodies Luna is left wallowing in their very local following.

Humor is rampant with Deaf School's ten collective imaginations as is evidenced in Langer and Allen's "What a Way to End It All" — "Why doesn't somebody call me up-the numbers in the book-but if I'm going to do this thing-it should be off the hook". All vocals are straining to sound campy and eventually succeed including the Gold Digger chorus; but all this formal slickness doesn't spoil it so they can't play some driving rock as on "Knock, Knock, Knocking." The Enz follow their first album Mental Notes with a peculiarly inventive single stacked with clever lyrics and amazing structural changes; almost too compressed. A larger version was given live when they toured here in the spring. The "B" side boasts Mental Notes highlight number "Stranger than Fiction" in its seven minute entirety. Singer Tim Finn highly steeped in the Rock classics, is another great performer to catch.

How's Tricks? Jack Bruce Band

With three earlier and fine solo jobbies under his belt, expectations ran high in the peanut gallery for this one. But unlike "Harmony Row" in 1971, Bruce has delivered a slick rehash of many things he's assembled in the past. His band is a much simpler machine than Bruce is himself, resembling a midwest rock band when left alone to do their own thing. As for Jack's performance, he sings better than ever and thinks a lot less. Rumours of a Cream reformation circulate to spawn the only hope right now that Bruce can once more do it right.

A Handful of Beauty (Columbia) Shakti with John McGlaughlin
Elegant Gypsy (Columbia) Al DiMeola
Watercolors (ECM) Pat Metheny

Jazz musicians are fascinated by the rhythmic wealth of Indian music; Talas and Ragas are rhythmic series and cycles of immense variety — from 3 to 103 beats. Within a range like that there is ample room for improvisation. After exhausting himself on the many possibilities of the electric guitar with his range extending from folk blues down through all the fifties greats, John McGlaughlin has settled down to playing acoustic guitar like a sitar. The dialectical interaction between the two cultures represented in Shakti and McGlaughlin is the doorway to world music; the Indian instruments and guitar interplay and improvise to very high degrees of complexity. As for McGlaughlin, the beauty found in his music is based not so much in innovation as in his command over already existing possibilities. Handful of Beauty is more harmonious than Shakti's previous and deserves attention.

Al DiMeola is allowing his own flag to fly on this his second solo and first since leaving "Return to Forever." Yet he seems to have taken some of mentor Chick Corea's favorite penchants in the process.

sans a tune or two

Technically bright for his 23 years, Al is playing a harder electric version of Corea's Spanish themes. It may be that DiMeola is not meant to climb the innovative complexities strewn around by McGlaughlin but to seek out the popular following; playing a slicker brand of improvisation, again not too far from Corea's own realizations. Anyway Elegant Gypsy is even and fast showing off some of those muted strings of Al's that everybody talks about.

Pat Metheny is good when this ECM production allows him to avoid slipping into Abercrombie-like abysses. Playing a Joe Pass sensitive and sprightly piece is more pleasurable; Metheny is nicely helped out by Eberhard Weber on bass, Dan Gottlieb, drums and Lyle Mays on piano. But Pat stretches his moods too far with light and lively MOR type ditties followed by DeJohnette space items which makes for a pretty inconsistent texture.

Dis (ECM) Jan Garbarek and Ralph Towner

Dis is everything about duets that I like, the fast and inspiring interplay and improvisations, each player's remarkable acumen for understanding and participating in a combined effort, the joy of hearing both musicians respond to the same beautiful essence of a piece. This product is ECM doing what they can in the very best way. Towner is engagingly literate and controlled when coloring Garbarek's long and breathy notes. Both convey a wide range of emotion; the saxophone is always occupied in the thickness of all tones while Towner builds and releases furiously to fill any spaces. A similar airbourne effect was attempted last year on Towner and Abercrombie's Sargasso Sea but unfortunately Abercrombie's wooden riffing couldn't make the work live. Here Garbarek ascends and swoons with elegance and moody urgency.

Steve Winwood (Island) Steve Winwood
In Your Mind Bryan Ferry

Winwood should have started his solo career quite a while back what with all his ability but, no matter. Steve makes a fine solo debut here playing all the important parts himself with precious little help from famous friends. Assisting in a modest way are Reebop, G. Harrison pals Willie Weeks and Andy Newmark and Jim Capaldi on one number (although Jim assists on the writing as always). Arrangements are kept simple and moving, eschewing the high falootin' sounds of the Yamashta-Shrieves-Winwood effort Go. The only problem here is with a couple of overly long endings that never end when they should. Otherwise there is great and thoughtful singing, very nice melodizing and keyboard playing all from the boy wonder. Steve keeps growing despite all the past inconsistencies in Traffic, Blind Faith, etc.

Bryan Ferry has done more than exist since the demise of Roxy Music; he has stepped out of that evolved superficial shell into real life and In Your Mind testifies to a new birth possibly bigger than Roxy in toto. Ferry has compounded a band much grander than Roxy, employing similar effects with grinding unconventional guitarisms and massive horn structures supporting a Stax chorale of able screamers. It's the material itself that stands so far from his earlier work, even from previous solo albums. Much relaxedly, Ferry confidently sings his eight new numbers with grace and feel. "One Kiss" and "Love Me Madly Again" go down into that evergrowing compendium of Ferry numbers as ones not to be missed.

Rendezvous Sandy Denny
Swarbrick Dave Swarbrick
Swarbrick 2 Dave Swarbrick

Anyone could see the basic differences between these two former Fairport Convention folks during their 1975 tour; Sandy trying hard to move the audience with her delicate melodies and Dave Swarbrick saving the band from ruin with some good timely traditional jigging on fiddle.

This was the end of the band that aspired to be the British Jefferson Airplane back ten years. Now Swarbrick has put out two fine collections of traditional British jigs and marches, his fiddle unceasingly entertaining. Other Fairport members Simon Nicol, Bruce Rowland and Dave Pegg assist in the festivities. One problem found is that Dave's quick paced vocals do not appear anywhere due to the traditional nature of the material. Hopefully this won't always be so.

Sandy Denny has had a rocky time from her days with Strawbs, to Fairport, and especially in her own solo career. Although I find Rendezvous pleasurable with her version of Richard Thompson's "I Wish I Was a Fool For You", there is little else to remind me of her Sandy album with its dark and hypnotic textures. Instead we now get her trying to keep up with the times via "Candle in the Wind" and "Silver Threads and Golden Needles", not that they are badly done (although strings and chorus abound throughout); just out of place with such a creative lady.

LONDON COLLECTOR'S SERIES
Starting Point David Bowie
In the Beginning Genesis
The Rocker Thin Lizzy
The Best of Ten Years After
The Story of Them Them

The Collector's Series so far has done a pretty neat job of reviving some music destined for obscurity otherwise. Always for the collector are the rare tracks by teenager Bowie; here are the more memorable tracks from the London Images 66 — album now long out of print. Bowie flashes elegant black humour on "Please Mr. Gravedigger; "We Are Hungry Men" breaks the ground where many later SCI-FI and militaristic Bowie numbers will tread; finally, there is the all out performer explaining with deep pop sincerity all about the "London Boys". Truly fine for its strangeness in a time yielding only cutsey pop, this Bowie will lavish your already complete discography. Other people might rather skip this — only for the devoted.

While the Genesis collection is the rerelease of From Genesis to Revelation, that simply foolishly simple music of amateurs misguided by the likes of sentimental Arthur Greenslade and a popularity hungry producer, it too like Bowie is one of the group's earliest recordings making it unnecessary to hear unless you're a devotee. Ten Years After contains the nine minute Woodstock version of "Going Home" among other items.

That Thin Lizzy had some interesting items long before their big break with Jailbreak is proven with the Rocker anthology. All numbers pre date 1974 demonstrating this band's contribution to Anglo-R&B with more flash and soul than their later raucous period. This can easily stand up to our more modern taste.

And as for Them, this is the most valued piece of the series so far. Including Morrison's epic "Story of Them" the album resurfaces some of the most searing punkfoolery of the sixties to be found anywhere in the Isles. Van sounds great on the Ray Charles "I Got a Woman" and his own "Philosophy" — Anglo R&B arrogance to topple the Rolling Stones of yesteryear. A great treasure this is, especially to you free thinkers of late who have begun to realize that artistic expression can be devised with the simplest tools.

Jet Lag PFM
Saw Delight Can
Moroccan Roll Brand X
Going for the One (Atlantic) Yes

PFM's singer Bernardo Lanzetti sounds like a mystic cross between Gentle Giant's Derek Shulman and Roger Chapman and it doesn't bother me one bit; those vocal sections are totally enthralling with melody and fervor. With cool verve the band knocks out a very electronic-acoustic wave of pleasantry that grows in intensity through repeated listenings. The guitar intro in "Peninsula" is very controlled but no less appealing for that. In fact, musically they don't challenge any new progressive vistas; only bask in speckled splendour using techniques employed by everybody from Steve Howe to Chick Corea.

Can have crossed the universe so to speak with Saw Delight. Light years away from their starting point as one of Germany's most progressive electronic music bands, the boys move along not in any better direction but toward disco. To further compliment this conversion they have acquired former Traffic rhythm man Reebop kwaku Baah who lends most of the heavy pulse-rhythm down so that others can get back to their spacey innovations. When it doesn't come off sounding like the soundtrack to an action sequence in "From Russia with Love" there are vocals of hardly recognizable English. Unfortunately this singing remains lifeless, comatose throughout. Regrettably, this is Can's lowest point in an otherwise very creative history.

Moroccan Roll is pretty lifeless for long stretches making Brand X lose much of that nice reputation they amassed with Unorthodox Behaviour. "Sun in the Night" engages in Sanskrit lyricism over very faux-Eastern cliche playing before sending the rest of the album off on its own merry way to deal with the vacuous likes of "Why Should I Lend You Mine", "Hate Zone" and "Disco Suicide"; all of them comprised of weighty non-repeating structures that appear very immediate and uninspired. Regimented playing stiffens the joints on every piece.

Going for the One is the album everybody waited to hear after Fragile replete with tough Guitar manifestos proclaiming, in unison with tasteful keyboard improvisation, (tasteful, not self-indulgent as Wakeman has come to be known), that Yes was an important progressive group taking their sound very very seriously. Unfortunately for Yes, there have been too many washy albums cluttered with over-production and stuttering musicianship. But is it too late? Never; and so Yes have regrouped and made a modest improvement. Anderson is not overbearing and Howe is playing a good guitar, but it's Squire who writes the new group's anthem, "Parallels", destined to be as popular as "Roundabout". And as for Rick Wakeman, much of what he does here is his best playing; a change for the better not evidenced on any of his own albums. Not very progressive but thoroughly diamond-sharp, Going for the One will soon become known as one of their best efforts.

The Book of Invasions A Celtic Symphony
— Horslips

"The Book of Invasions" is a twelfth century chronicle of the various pre-Christian colonizations of Ireland. The race who occupied the country before our Gaelic ancestors were the Tuartha de Danann — the peoples of the Goddess Danann." Not the least remarkable aspect of this pleasing album is the mythology upon which the story of the piece is based. Other fine achievements include the very adept mixture of traditional Irish folk songs with modern rock and its electric flora. At one time Horslips was strictly traditional but the change to rock has not stopped the band from using all their musical integrity all of the time. Certain pieces may remind of another Anglo-folk-rocker Jethro Tull, but Tull's inability to firmly root his artificial myths and songs with any real musical culture has made his sound imitative of many finer types of British traditional music. Horslips was that finer real music and in a sense still are. The collected fiddles, mandolins, flutes, whistles all give Horslips the opportunity to do their traditional thing and project their versatile electricity directly into the heart of the music. A literate attempt at Rock that isn't stultifying.

Danca Das Cabecas (ECM) Egberto Gismonti
Encounter Flora Purim

Danca Das Cabecas is an articulate and impassioned compendium of exotic and colorful dream pictures. Beginning cool and celestial, Gismonti guides you through his world of green natural beauty and various musical achievements never allowing you to lose touch with the sensual electric nature of his pieces. His eight-string guitar is a wonder of short, delicate exercises; all quite satisfying in themselves. His piano is emotional and absorbing like the playing of Steve Kuhn, almost so much that it sounds unoriginal. Side One is more expansive and totally fluid when compared to the other more static, nervous side. Still the aura emitted is unique and enchanting when in the mood.

Flora is soaring on this her fifth solo album since departing from Return to Forever and she is still at the front of any list of female singers today. In jazz there is hardly any competition at all. More than ever she is searching for new ways to exhibit the airbourne beauty of her vocal range. Frills, screams, blasts, dives are all quite frequent in her melodizing, setting her performances flowing. And of course the fast Rhythmic assistance of Airto, Ron Carter, George Duke, Alphonso Johnson and two nice cuts with McCoy Tyner only help to keep things breezy. "Above the Rainbow" is exactly that.

'45 God Save the Queen Virgin) The Sex Pistols
The Damned (Stiff) Damned Damned Damned
Marquee Moon(Elektra) Television
Rattus Norvegicus A&M) The Stranglers IV
The Idiot (RCA) Iggy Pop

"She ain't no Human Being .. " A powerful number if "God Save the Queen", trying hard to rip open the stagnant atmosphere of post-industrial Britain and succeeding obviously (being banned everywhere in Britain, not being sold many places and still climbing all the way up to number two in sales). Violently Johnny Rotten sings the lyrics everybody's thinking over there and that's a change for the Elton and Gary

A Naughty Night Tune Or Two

Glitter following. This must be understood by any true rock fan ... and bought.

The Damned play well enough to match the Stooges and are also very much a part of the same restlessness evidenced in the Sex Pistols. "Fan Club" and "Feel the Pain" are fun in the worst way and Dave Vanian's vocals are mighty wild.

> "Life in the hive puckered up my night, the kiss of death, the embrace of life, There I stand neath the Marquee Moon just waiting...Hesitating...

Someone to teach Patti what really matters in poetically important rock is Television, one of the new lyric-imagist things we've been in desperate need of lately. With a rough equivalent to Jim Morrison's poetry, Tom Verlaine sings his own night imagery and haunting existence; the music remains crude only to enhance the words.

The Stranglers can't really be associated with the current punk scene although their lyrics are strict gutter vernacular. Up from the wastelands are Ray Manzarek's dizzying cascades at the piano and a touch of lizard king Jim Morrison's slurs and groans. The whole thing nostalgically reminds you of the sixties at the expense of The Strangler's own originality, but when they're not mimicking the Doors they come across more exciting with "London Lady" or "Grip". Eventually the whole package grows on you unless you never liked the Doors in the first place.

The Idiot is a calm album coming from the likes of Iggy Pop and there is the possibility that only David Bowie, producer is responsible. All numbers were co-written with the man who fell and Iggy's vocal style sounds remarkably like that deep croon first heard on Station to Station and Low. Being a Bowie fan of course would have a lot to do with liking this album. For former Stooges fans it'll take a little bit more.

Additional Listening

Both Ornette Coleman and Don Cherry put out fine albums this summer. Ornette's is called Dancing in your Head and Cherry's is Don Cherry on Horizon.

Also new this summer were:
Super Trios — McCoy Tyner
Blues for the Viet Cong — Stanley Cowell
Dogon A.D. — Julius Hemphill (Release of an underground Classic)
Pictures — Jack DeJohnnette
Staircase — Keith Jarrett
So Far So Good — John Martyn (American release on Island)
Five Leaves Left — Nick Drake (American release on Antilles
Period of Transition — Van Morrison
Discreet Music — Brian Eno (American release Antilles
Osamu — Osamu Kitajima
The Roots of Rock and Roll — Savoy Sessions
The Tenor Sax Album — Savoy Sessions
Development of an American Artist 1940-46 — Dizzy Gillespie

With not enough space to provide more info about all these recordings the only hope is that college radio around here can improve itself to the point where it can be depended on for good, far-reaching music.

Hands Down at the UMass Craft Shop

By Debbie Schafer

Ever wonder how those craftspeople selling their wares on the Campus Center concourse got their start? Chances are that they did it right down the hall, across from the Hatch. For the same amount of time and money that you might be spending at the pinball machines there, you could take a few steps further and into the craft shop.

Once inside, you could make jewelry, pottery, work with leather, wood, or use the photo darkroom. For the inexperienced, there is always someone to help you and very often there are free seminars.

The UMass Craft Shop (across from the Hatch, near the pinball machines) will be open for business on Tuesday, Sept. 6th at 10 a.m. It is open to all fee paying students free of charge. Faculty members, University employees, and other 5-College students are welcome to use the facilities upon payment of a $2.00 per semester fee, but children and non-students are not allowed to work in the shop.

You pay only for the materials you use, and the cost is surprisingly low. You can probably make something for under two dollars in the shop that you might pay ten dollars for if you bought it ready-made on the concourse. But because of the difficulty in obtaining craft materials the shop staff cannot sell supplies to those who will not be using them in the craft shop.

Instruction is free, "all day, every day" according to shop supervisor Penny Worman. Beginning to advanced instruction is given in silver jewelry making (including casting), leather work, pottery, stained glass, wood working, photo darkroom and silk screen.

Other crafts may also be learned at the shop and seminars are set up "when enough interest is evident," Worman says. Don't hesitate to express your craft-related interests or ask question while at the shop. The staff members are friendly and have the expertise to guide the beginning craftsperson in his-her creative efforts.

The shop will be open Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., Friday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., and Saturday from noon to 4 p.m.

There is no charge for the use of tools, instruction and facilities in general, but there is a 25 cent charge for use of the darkroom facilities (chemicals included but bring your own developer and paper).

The staff urgently requests that those who make use of this free service to students restrain themselves from ripping-off the small tools in the shop, the pliers, design stamps, files, etc. Last year $120.00 worth of these tools were "borrowed" one at a time from the shop. "We notice when these tools walk out," according to Worman, "and it is not possible with our budget to continually replace 'lost' tools."

Don't be tempted to put the finishing touches on an item at home by "borrowing" a tool or two. With a large number of students using the facilities there will not be enough to go around if tools are taken. If you can't finish what you're making in one session, go back the next day and continue it then.

With a little time and patience you can make something nice for someone you like (or something to sell on the concourse, for the profit-minded). It may not be as action packed as the pinball machines outside, but working in the craft shop certainly puts your hands to better use.

EXCLUSIVE DOUBLE BILL

Cinema 1: Moviehouse Medley

By E. Patrick McQuaid

It's Monday night and after Saturday at the Hatch, Sunday at the Bluewall, and all day Monday at the books, you're left with Friday's homework and a dollar to your name. Do not despair, America's favorite pastime costs only one dollar tonight (and sometimes Tuesday nights too).

Of course it depends on what you're after and where you go looking for it. The latest tickler, just in from Paris is in Amherst, over in Northampton something more serious is playing, and out at the drive-in there's plenty of action.

It's dollar night at the movies ... most movies that is, and here are a few thoughts on where to spend it.

Amherst Cinema
30 Amity St.
Amherst
(tel) 253-5426

Admission here is generally $2.00 for adults and $1.00 for children and senior citizens. Students may purchase a "student ID card" that enables them to attend all performances for only one dollar at all times. The card may be bought within the price of a ticket and used again and again for the discount.

Amherst Cinema seats approximately 800 and tries to appeal to the college crowd with foreign flicks and revival films. They generally run a twin bill. A few years ago the Amherst Cinema sponsored a French film festival and hosted not only the films but the directors as well to discuss their work with the audience. They are well advertised and easy to get to.

Mountain Farms Four
inside the Mt. Farms Mall
Russel St (Rte 9) Hadley
(tel) 584-9153

Here you have a choice of four films that appeal to general audiences. Movie ratings vary from G to R; "Once in a blue moon we'll run an 'X'," says assistant manager Rick Davies.

Mountain Farms Four is owned and operated by a firm in New Jersey that decides what films will be shown and sends them out here. They generally change on Wednesdays as do most other movie houses. Admission is: adults $2.50, children $1.25, students $2.00 with an ID that can be purchased like at the Amherst Cinema. Although there is no dollar night, the Mt. Farms 4 offers a "twilight hour special" between 5:30 and 6 p.m. when you can purchase tickets for only $1.50; on weekends it's from 4:30 to 5. Most folks buy their tickets at that time, kick around the mall for a while and use their tickets later that evening. The shows run generally at 6 and 8 p.m. but they're planning to start showing midnight movies soon. According to Davies they'll mostly be old but popular flicks such as Beatles movies.

They seat a total between 1100 and 1200 with each theatre varying between 20 to 30 seats difference. They sport the lowest priced concession stands of any area theatres and usually carry first run films outside of the Springfield district.

Calvin Theatre
19 King St.
Northampton
(tel) 584-2310

This is the family man's movie house with film ratings ranging from G to R. (Every once in a while they'll run something with those college kids in mind.) Admission is generally $2.25 for adults, $1.00 for children and senior citizens. Monday and Tuesday nights are "bargain nights frequently but not always," as manager Russ Durocher reports.

The Calvin is a grand old theatre that at one time made use of its stage. "The stage hasn't been used now for 45 years," he said but the atmosphere is still quite pleasant. Seating capacity is 1,313; the films usually change every Wednesday night and matinees are Saturday, Sunday, and holidays.

Pleasant Street Theatre
25 Pleasant St.
(tel) 586-0935

According to manager John Morrisson, the Pleasant Street Theatre is the only arts house within a very large area extending from Worcester to the New York border. The building at 25 Pleasant St. has always been a movie house but last year Morrisson and some other members of the former Amherst Film Coop moved in and literally turned the place around.

The seats now face in an entirely opposite direction than they did a year ago allowing for a much larger audience and for a much larger screen at the same time. The theatre now can legally hold 142 people with seats for 130.

The Pleasant Street Theatre shows foreign films and old favorites and classics. "We rarely

Cinema 2: Summer Celluloid

By Paul Yanowitch

As you will soon discover - for those who have not done so already - movies form a substantial past time of the denizens of this happy valley. I conjecture that we have reached the saturation point, with respect to the number of theaters, as they literally dot the surrounding areas.

Therefore, we are privy to a rather wide choice of films that span the gamut of genres. There are: first run films, grade B oldies, westerns, foreign flicks, Disney and even porno. So, as a public service-what else

I hereby present short reviews and critiques of some of the movies that opened this summer and in all probability, will be around the area at the time of publication.

Star Wars ★★★½

The film that is destined to break box office records concerns the age old fight between good and evil, this time set amidst an intergallactic war that took place, "a long, long time ago". It is a film that will capture your heart and imagination and should place you in a helpless state of puerile euphoria. It is pure fun; thankfully this unpretentious film lays claim to no more. It sports some fantastic, futuristic, special effects and two of the cutest robots, or droids, ever imagined.

The film is wonderfully eclectic, culling the best, most creative and inspiring from a long series of films and literary works; you will find bits and pieces from all the following: Batman, Lost in Space, Star Trek, Wizard of Oz, Samurai movies, westerns and almost all science fiction classics. The film is best summed up by a Kafkaesque maxim: the hard core sci-fi aficionado will be disappointed as there are glaring errors and inconsistencies in the films technology and plot; perhaps the most heinous of its crimes lies in the fact that the most intriguing philosophic fiction that is presented as reality is criminally underdeveloped: 'the force' lies fallow: cinema buffs searching for fascinating allegories and counterpuntal plot lines intermixed with emotion filled performances and subtle character development will walk away chagrined: but, if you are one of the thousands who clapped furiously when Tinkerbelle was dying, you will LOVE this film. It is, pure and simple, an act of faith; for those who retain any imagination and childish niavate, I promise a treat.

Annie Hall ★★★★

Woody Allens latest effort is a classic, and in my sophisticated, urbane opinion, his best. The film details from its incipience to its poignant death, the love affair between two neurotics; a self-deprecating Jewish comedian and a midwestern shiksa that has turned aspiring singer. The film is bouyed by marvelous performances by both stars and the supporting cast which includes old standby Tony Roberts and newcomer Paul Simon. The film is all Woody Allen; there is his innovative and creative direction; a typical fast moving, fun filled script; the old lines, and jokes all make their way into the film, yet here they are set amidst a strong and deadly seriousness-the dissection of a relationship and the forces that tear it asunder. Yet, one doesn't notice the message till long after the movie is over, but with a smiling fact this time. For Allen lovers; a classic. For others, a well deserved treat.

New York, New York ★★★

Martin Scorcese's newest film sports the best acting performance of the year (Robert DeNiro) and a superb effort by Liza Minelli, and surprisingly enough for Scorcese; no blood. The film is another love story, this one ripped apart by the age old dilemma between love for another and love for one's work. It is an age old theme played against a backdrop of the sights, sounds, scents and spirit of the big band era. Unfortunately, despite a fine script, for the most part, superb acting and some wonderful songs, the film drags a bit. Key segments of the relationship are ignored and crucial time spans are left out, while Scorcese plods on with unimportant and overemphasized trivialities. It is a film that is glorious, sad, funny, and in the end, a slight letdown. One feels that Scorcese had a winner but let it slip through his fingers. A worthwhile film, nevertheless.

Slapshot ★★½

This film is definitly for adults: a hockey team that couldn't beat the worst PeeWee 2nd string from Georgia gets on track by sporting the dirtiest half-dozen players available. Endless violence and blood mar the film, but to its credit, it also contains some very funny scenes and hilarious lines. It has alot to say about the players, the managers, and the fans, but its most cruel blow is against the sport, and all sports in general. It is fun for the thick skinned, but for those with virgin ears, steer clear. (unless you want a quick education).

The Deep ★★½

This underwater treasure hunt has some breathtaking underwater photography and a few scenes that contain honest-to-goodness suspense. But, on the other hand, it is particularly unimpressive in all remaining categories and departments. Robert Shaw tries desperately to save the film, but fails.

Handsome Nick Nolte puts on a poor show, though I can't shift the blame on his shoulders totally; the script was equally as horrid. Jaqueline Bisset is present for looks, only! She never gets the chance to act, which is a pity (though, also not totally). It has strong elements of racism and sexism, to boot. It is mildly diverting, and one of the few films in recent times which does manage real suspense, though only for a few moments. Acting award to the eel for brilliant role playing.

Welcome to L.A. ★

A boring, second string, poor man's Nashville. This film fails miserably in all departments; plot, acting, script, music and directing. It is too long, too stupid and incredibly boorish. It concerns a lot of people fornicating in L.A. and trying to produce a record that would certainly flop. Only for those who have time to waste and the money to waste it on.

Station Keeps Air Traffic Flowing

What's the longest running form of entertainment in the Pioneer Valley?? Here's a hint — it'll be 28 years old in October, runs continuous performances twenty hours a day ... seven days a week ... fifty-two weeks a year, has one of the largest staffs in New England and is controlled entirely by students.

Give up????

Chances are you've probably listened to it, in fact you might be listening to it right now. It's WMUA-FM, the Valley's oldest original FM station. WMUA-FM operates at 91.1 on the dial with 1000 watts of power. That means that the station can be heard from Springfield to Vermont and from Belchertown on the east rim of the Valley to the Berkshire in the west.

Even though the station is licensed to the UMass Board of Trustees, students control the day-to-day operation and make all of the programming decisions. Since the station operates on a special non-commercial frequency set aside by the Federal Communications Commission, no paid advertising can be accepted. WMUA runs on funding from the student government at the University.

WMUA's studios are in Marston Hall, just steps away from the Graduate Research Center. Over 125 students and community members work out of the cramped seven-room headquarters, producing the programming you can hear at 91.1 FM. When it comes to programming, diversity is the by-word at WMUA. In addition to playing current rock music; black, latino, jazz, country, folk, punk rock and classical music is featured throughout the week. Over 81 hours a week (more than 60 per cent of the total schedule) is devoted to such non-traditional music.

But music isn't the only thing WMUA-FM does. News and Public Affairs form a vital part of the station's format. WMUA News produces 90 minutes of original news daily. Updates are heard six times each morning, at noon and at 5 o'clock. The cornerstone of the News Department is a thirty minute daily news and information program called The 5:30 Magazine. The 5:30 Magazine is a timely round-up of late breaking news and special features, and finally a look at what didn't make the Front Pages with The Other Side at 11:55 nightly. Co-News Director Biff Price says that he and his colleague, Bob Levine are striving to give the University and the Valley "a unique and different type of news service — one that talks less in numbers and abstract facts and more in human terms."

Public Affairs at MUA frequently get attention from other media for its highly controversial 'Valley Talks' (formerly "Off the Hook") a sixty minute call-in talk show Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights at six. Other public affairs programming includes weekly editions of the Women's Media Project, and Focus as well as the twice-monthly Gaybreak. WMUA Public Affairs also handles special programming in conjunction with News, like covering special events be it Amherst Town Meeting, Distinguished Visitor Program Lectures, or special live national event coverage (like the 1976 July 4th demonstrations).

Sports coverage is an important commitment at WMUA. Most large university sport events are covered live, especially crucial 'away' games. In recent years, women's sports have gotten increased coverage from MUA.

Although WMUA is doing very well for a college station and beginning to compete favorably with its commercial colleagues, the road to improvement for the outlet has been a difficult one. Station members as well as management still are not completely sure what WMUA-FM's main purpose. One faction says MUA should provide alternative programming to that provided by commercial stations (and therefore provide programming of comparable or higher professional quality). Others says concentrate on being a training ground for aspiring broadcast students by following a successful commercial-type format and working on getting better collectively and individually at it. Still another faction want varying shades of the two policies instituted.

There are no full-time personnel at the station. Even management is part-time. That frequently makes work at MUA difficult because it must always compete for time and attention with school work and-or an outside job. That usually means that all MUA staff find they never have enough time for everything they'd like to do...some programs and on-air commitments become rush jobs. Several of the staff said that although the situation is one that prevents the station from sounding as good as it might, they found that outside work kept them close to the community, and provided a basis for learning radio 'under fire'. They feel that later employment in broadcasting wouldn't be as demanding.

Top management at WMUA say that they want to make the station as community oriented as possible. Everyone is invited to tour the Marston Hall studios during weekday business hours. At the same time all interested students and community members are encouraged to apply for volunteer positions at WMUA. Chances are applicants won't get on the air right away but there are plenty of non-air positions to be filled. However, with exposure at the station over a period of time, on-air positions do become available and all applicants are considered. WMUA is located at Suite 42, Marston Hall, at the University. For further information, call the station at 545-2876.

Valley Radio Waves: A Primer

By Biff Price

When you're working or studying or even doing nothing, radio can be your best friend. It's a medium that doesn't take all your attention like television does. Radio can be a background to whatever you're doing. With the school year and our jobs already upon us, most of us will be turning to radio to help make that work easier or just to help pass the time.

The Collegian has compiled a rundown of what you can hear in the Pioneer Valley. It's certainly not Boston or New York, but you'll find a lot of variety in what's offered on the airwaves.

The first thing you'll find as you spin the dial is that most of the stations you can get are not local ones. Signals from the large cities — Springfield, Hartford and Worcester make up the bulk of what one can listen to. Out of the 30 or so stations available, only six of them are from stations in the Amherst-Northampton area. Half of those stations are run by the colleges. They are:

WAMH-FM . (89.3) — Progressive music (jazz, rock, folk, etc.) from Amherst College

WFCR-FM (88.5) — Five College radio — a National Public Radio affiliate that specializes in classical and public affairs programming

WHMP-AM (1400) — Middle-of-the-Road music with local news and hourly newscasts from the ABC-Contemporary network (Northampton)

WHMP-FM (99.3) — a computerized station with a mix of 'contemporary' music (no disc-jockeys here — the computer plays the music)

WTTT-AM 1430) — Middle-of-the-Road music with local news

When it comes to commercial radio, the most important item is one five letter word, M-O-N-E-Y! The dollar sign rules radio with an iron hand. A station is defined as "doing well" in an area by how much of the total listening audience tunes to it. Advertising rates are set according to the number of people listening; naturally a station with a larger audience can get higher ad rates. For example, if two stations are identical in all other respects (overhead costs, programming, etc.) The one with a larger audience will also be the one with higher ad rates.

Those higher rates mean more revenue and more profits. Since commercial radio is run to make money for the owners and-or stockholders, all the programming decisions are made with one purpose in mind — get more people listening so that the station can make more money.

That is the reason why you may find station formats on the commercial outlets so restricted in the Pioneer Valley. Station owners found that progressive rock, black-soul, and classical formats don't succeed, or rather don't have enough listeners to make the owners the revenue they want. That is why classical listeners will find Bethoven's Fifth replaced by 'Roll over Beethoven' by The Electric Light Orchestra on WTIC-FM. WTIC-FM changed its long-time classical format for Top 40 rock because they feel that Top 40 will be more popular. Classical listeners now must turn to WFCR or their own record collections for their favorite music. Also listeners accustomed to progressive music — a mix of rock, jazz, black-soul and non-traditional music — will have to turn to local college stations. The large commercial outlets have seen profits drop recently and though they still play rock, all of them in Western New England have instituted very tight playlists and upped the number of commercial minutes per hour.

If you have non-mainstream musical tastes, like classical or jazz, you'll have to be a very discriminating listener to be able to get the kind of radio you want. Dial-switching is definitely a must in this situation, but there is another way to get what you want. Let station management know what you think of their station. Write or call stations with offensive formats or presentations and let them know you're unhappy with them. Rating books only tell management how many people are listening, they don't tell them WHY! Your letter could help make changes at these stations.... though you can't expect formats to change overnight. Get your pens and pencils out, those letters really do make a difference!

Arts Extension is Everywhere

In the last six months the Arts Extension Service of Continuing Education here at UMass has helped over 80 arts organizations with all kinds of special art and organizational problems and given job counseling to over 100 artists and craftspeople.

At the same time AES has put on one of New England's major art festivals, developed a directory of women's art resources, published a listing of festivals for artists and craftspeople, published three newsletters, set up a marketing assistance project for craftspeople in conjunction with Cooperative Extension, published the second edition of a directory of New England Artists, staged seminars on topics from "how to get published" to "women and the arts" and developed the academic programming for Elderhostel, a program where people over 60 years of age lived and studied at UMass this summer. The list just keeps going.

AES as part of Continuing Education, works from UMass as a community arts resource coordinator for the region. They provide marketing and management assistance to artists and organizations and serve as a link to regional and national arts and arts related groups.

The most recent AES project was Edlerhostel; a program of educational hosteling for the older citizens including study in credit-free workshops, hostel style accomodations in dormatories, meals in college dining halls and participation in an on-going campus life.

The Arts Extension Service developed the course work and coordinated the academic program which was offered in week long units to elder citizens from many parts of the country. The Conference Service office took care of food and lodging needs. Students were involved in producing a literary magazine, music appreciation, writing poetry, writing books for children, a course in community arts development and more.

Six of these one week units, offering a total of 18 courses, were held this summer. A number of exciting events grew out of the courses that could have lasting benefits. One class taking the course titled, "The Arts, Your Community and You", presented a mini-arts festival with exhibitors and performers.

The three classes in television production participated in the video-taping of programs that will be used to further promote the Elderhostel idea. The magazine production class members have combined their written material and published a magazine. They have enough material already for the first two issues and are seeking funds to make this publication (entitled "Expanding Horizons") a regular journal for, about, and by elder people. Plans are now underway for an expanded Elderhostel next year.

Poetry readings and workshops to nursing homes, schools, and other community areas has been an important part of the Arts Extension Service's work.

Perhaps the most visible of all AES programs is the New England Artist Festival and Showcase which happens in Northampton in May each year. This year's Festival included over 250 artists and craftspeople, 33 performing groups, 16 poets, over a dozen filmmakers, food booths, small presses, a children's area, special events. Visitors to the festival were estimated at 14,000.

AES is continually responding to the needs of the region and developing new programs, the newest addition being the rural Arts Development Program. This project, sponsored in part by a $10,000 National Endowment for the Arts grant, will encourage 6 rural communities with little or no arts activity, to develop a central arts organization and each to produce about 5 events. AES will provide technical assistance and subsidy for events.

How do students fit in at AES?

The Arts Extension Service internship program offers five-college students a unique opportunity for personal and professional growth. Internship programs represent one response to demands for relevance in education made on this campus in the late sixties.

AES programs are designed to utilize University resources in helping agencies develop effective arts programs for education and recreation in Western Mass. Therefore, it is possible for an intern to realize the role of the University in contributing to the general quality of life in the community.

The AES office offers an informal atmosphere designed to stimulate input and creative flow. Interns hold staff level positions and are encouraged to participate in program development and policy making. Committments can range from 3 to 15 credits and interns are welcome to participate in creating their own job descriptions.

This past spring five interns, all coming from different diciplines, successfully found relationships between their majors and the details of the services AES provides. Producing a fair such as the New England Artist Festival and Showcase requires more than artistic talent or administrative skill. A blending of backgrounds from Leisure Service to Law enforcement helped to create a success. For instance; one student studying gallery management was able to organize and hang a juried, mixed media exhibit. Education majors designed a play area where over 1000 children were able to participate in craft projects, learn to juggle, draw, or see professional performances especially for them. Parking, crowd control, and security for 15,000 people and their property provided a challenge to one student who hopes to become a police chief one day.

Interns can choose to learn and take over the administration of a project, assist staff members in program administration, or develop their own project relating to AES services. Therese Guyette, an art student, has taken an idea (that State Senator John Olver's office at the State House in Boston might be a showplace for the strong community of artists and craftspeople in Western Mass.), developed a full schedule of 12 one month shows and detailed the work necessary to produce those shows. In addition she has compiled the Women's Art Directory which focuses on women in the literary, visual, and performing arts. AES hopes to publish this some time this fall.

An internship with AES allows students a chance to explore and expand their skills in real situations. If you are tired of case studies, role playing, and simulations, AES may be what you are looking for. Says Barbara Schaffer, a recent graduate and full time intern, "It's scary to realize that the work you produce really counts; that people really read your letters, hear you on the radio, respond to your press releases, or consider your evaluation of programs. The reward of meeting these responsibilities is greater and more meaningful than achieving an 'A' ever could be."

AES, located in Draper Annex (545-2013), welcomes interns on a full or part time basis, work-study students who seek involvement in their work, and volunteers who are interested in making a contribution toward expanding community arts.

Another Big Season for the Area Theatres

If what we saw this summer is any indication of what we can expect for the fall season, then theatre-goers have a lot of high quality entertainment to look forward to.

The area theatre offerings were in abundance through the hot summer months; City Studio's Shakespeare in the Pines at Look Park, Mount Holyoke Summer Theatre presentations, and here at UMass the three productions of the newly founded Commonwealth Stage. In addition, several children's theatre performances were staged during the course of the summer.

From Dracula to Feiffer's People to A Midsummer Night's Dream, there was indeed 'something for everybody.' Looking forward to the fall season, there is also variety.

The following listing is as comprehensive as time would allow, but check the Collegian and Below the Salt arts supplement to get a fuller outlook on the area theatre as the semester progresses. There is sure to be more to come than the events we have listed at this time.

UMass Theatre

The University Ensemble Theatre has more performances scheduled during the coming year than ever before, according to David M. Knauf, theatre chairman. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet will open the season on Oct. 20. Anouilh's Antigone will begin on Dec. 2. Also planned is a UMass first — an American College Theatre Festival. The Festival will run Jan. 26 through Jan. 28 and will feature from five to eight productions.

Two other campus drama groups are planning fall productions. The UMass Music Theatre Guild production of Two Gentlemen from Verona will be Nov. 17 through 20, and the Roister Doisters Drama Society will present Tom Jones. Auditions for Tom Jones will be held on Sept. 6 and 7 from 6 to 10 p.m. in Campus Center room 101. Auditions are open to all students in the Five College Area. The cast will include ten men and eight women, and production dates are Oct. 28-30 and Nov. 4-6.

Mount Holyoke

The Mount Holyoke College Laboratory Theatre will open its fall season with An Italian Straw Hat, to run Oct. 21-23 and 27-30. The production will be directed by Jim Cavanaugh, the founder-producer of Mount Holyoke's very successful Summer Theatre.

A Festival of One-Act Plays will be presented Dec. 8 through Dec. 14, to be directed and designed by Lab Theatre students.

Auditions for the Lab Theatre plays are open to men from anywhere and women from any of the Five Colleges. Auditions for An Italian Straw Hat will be held at Mount Holyoke on Sept. 11,12 and 13.

Smith Ensemble Theatre

The Smith Ensemble Theatre (SET) opened its premiere season on August 17 and will continue performances through September 17. Under Milk Wood, by Dylan Thomas, will play September 1-4, 7-8, and 16-17. Alan Ayckbourn's comedy How the Other Half Loves will play September 9-11 and 14-15.

The University of Massachusetts, Hampshire College, and Smith College are well represented in the membership of SET. The company is produced and directed by Greg Jones, a teaching assistant in Communication Studies at U. Mass. Jon Crane, a teaching associate in the same department, will be one of the principal actors along with Michael Rusk, a staff member of "The Next Stage," a new alternative theatre at U. Mass.

SET will perform in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre in the Smith College Center for the Performing Arts. For information and ticket reservations call the SET box office at 584-2700 extension 840.

City Studio Theatre

City Studio Theatre, Hampshire County's new resident theatre, has announced a week long house-warming celebration for their new theatre facilities on 49 Pearl St. in Northampton. The theatre was formerly housed at 25 Main St. above Fitzwilly's Restuarant; the new location is just down the street, beside the Bay State Hotel and upstairs from the Polish club.

The celebration will include a visual arts exhibition from Sept. 6-9 featuring Valley video artists, photographers, and experimental filmmakers. Donations will benefit the theatre.

The Young People's Theatreworks will perform The Riddle Machine on Sept. 10 and 11 at 10:30 a.m. and the performance will be free of charge. Following the Sunday performance of The Riddle Machine will be a spectacular Tag Sale — Auction with live entertainment, spirits and fare from noon until...

Contributions for the tag sale will be appreicated. Any contribution is tax deductible.

All events will take place at 49 Pearl St. For more information call City Studio Theatre at 584-3994 or 584-3978.

Rural Free Delivery: Folkart on a Country Road

Located along the back roads and local routes around Amherst and Northampton is an innovative and dynamic art form. Unrecognized by the general public, you aren't likely to see any exhibited in Herter Art Gallery or sold on the concourse, yet mailboxes as a folk art form are well worth paying attention to.

Folk art, the experts say, is a functional thing created or altered to look pleasing to the eye by a person who doesn't think of himself as an artist. And a quick drive along Route 5 or through North Amherst would evidence quite a lot of local folk art in the form of decorated mailboxes. Afterall, these receptacles serve a purpose, they are interesting to look at, and they were made by regular-type people; in other words, folk art.

Most decorated mailboxes can be divided into one of two categories: painted mailboxes and built mailboxes. Painting a mailbox can be as simple as writing out the family name in an interesting way or as complex as creating an idyllic scene with the subtle interplay of several colors. My favorite of the local painted mailboxes is up on Rt. 63: a large, aluminum mailbox painted to look like a jig-saw puzzle of stained glass, with a fantasy night-time scene on the back panel. Although built mailboxes can assume any shape, they are usually modeled after the classic mailbox form and depict lumbering trucks or horse-pulled covered wagons. Most often carved or assembled out of wood, the details are painted in or wired on (such as children's toys). An outstanding carved mailbox is on Bay Road in Hadley: a brightly painted ox-drawn cart which has stood guard to the Wiater driveway for almost twenty-five years.

And don't forget to check out the bases of area mailboxes, for a great deal of creativity is exhibited there as well. Welded chains in graceful twists, gnarled and knotted tree trunks, metal rods bent into initials.... Often flowers are planted around the supporting post, adding yet another dimension to the overall sculptural form.

Like all true folk art, mailbox art reveals something about the day-to-day lives of those who made it. For example, Mr. Stanley Wiater, who built the ox-drawn cart, has long been involved in carpentry and displayed his skills in an artistic way. Five students renting a house in North Amherst solved the problem of mail confusion with a glittering appendage to their mailbox. Most often, though, little more is revealed to the casual observer than a desire for beauty and uniqueness by an anonymous wayside artist. This, too, speaks of the values and interests of local people. While it may be far-fetched to suggest that the local populace has been inspired to an unusual degree by the many craftspeople operating in the area or by the still unspoiled natural beauty, it does seem to be the case that there is a great deal of local folk art to be seen and appreciated. A flourishing art form waiting to be captured on film, the mailbox has become something more than a place to hold the utility bills.

SMALL PRESS LOCAL

By E. Patrick McQuaid

With the art world's current focus on computer and electronic design it would seem only natural that there would arise a parallel interst in what we might call craftsmanship; the painstaking way that things used to be done, the fine art of made-by-hand.

Products, artifacts that are made to last, handcrafted of the softest leather, the sturdiest wood, or perhaps the finest paper stock in the world are finding a market and a home here in the Pioneer Valley.

The Art of the Book

Books — both what's in them and what holds them together — are binding together area artists, craftsmen, poets, and printers. A number of small presses have started rolling in the Amherst-Northampton area alone. Several of these have been started and kept going by UMass graduates from the MFA (Masters of Fine Arts) program as well as alumni of the other four colleges.

If you're in the center of Northampton some day you may want to drop in to Dwyer's Bookstore and chat with Ivan about bookbinding or rare books. He spends most of his day lying in the storefront window next to some old bookbinding tools. Blue ribbons marked "First" line the back walls where his owner, Jeffrey Dwyer keeps his office.

"The used books here in the store are only about thirty per cent of my business," he tells us. "The other seventy per cent is all done through the mail and most of my best customers I will probably never meet."

He showed us his catalog and files through which he maintains contact with rare book collectors across the country.

"Here's a man who's interested in turn-of-the-eighteenth-century stable architecture," he said holding up an index card reading "Architecture". The files are indexed by subject from Adirondack to Yeats and a part of a vast system of rare book dealing that involves countless numbers of part-time merchants, private collectors, and shop keepers nationwide. A periodical called The Antiquarian Booksman keeps communication channels open for professionals and browsers alike.

As you enter Dwyer's Bookstore, at 44 Main Street, you first encounter a line of shelves from floor to ceiling, of used books ranging from trade, paperback, and text. Most people who come in off the street inspect these bookcases usually without any specific titles in mind.

"When I go into someone's basement to purchase some books," he said, "there may be fifty or a hundred titles that I'm interested in but I have to buy the whole lot of them or sometimes they won't sell at all."

Dwyer's specialty is books, both new and rare, on the history of printing, illustrating, graphics, and design. Most of these he keeps one flight up above his storefront in handsome cases enclosed in glass. Just above this, lit by nature from a large skylight, is a gallery area Dwyer has set aside for exhibiting local artists that will soon be open to the public.

To the rear of the building on the second floor Dwyer keeps two boarders. In one small but comfortable studio, Easthampton graphic artist Barry Moser spends his time on a variety of different projects and over the last four years Dwyer and he have worked together quite often.

In another slightly larger studio Carolyn Coman, a 1974 Hampshire College graduate with a major in writing, practices the ancient art of book binding by hand. Along the brick walls that line her workspace hang old brass instruments of the trade.

"I don't think of binding itself as an art," she says. "It has to do with what you bind. Now I'm working here on a limited edition for a collector. I certainly wouldn't spend the time binding pornography because every book is different and book binding is a long and slow process."

"The type design, the paper, a number of things," said Dwyer, "make for a fine book. If you're looking at it as an art object the content is secondary." He said that a fine book may not always look very impressive at first and is often times not every expensive.

Hampshire Typothetae

No busier man in the book business is there than Jeffrey Dwyer. He has his fingers into every facet of the venture including the actual printing process.

Dwyer is chairman of the board of the newly founded Hampshire Typothetae which is devoted to producing limited edition printed matter of high quality.

Among some of the Typothetae's printing assignments are the "Simplicissimus" print series by artist Fritz Eichenberg from Rhode Island and several things for the World Energy Conference to be held in Istanbul later this month. Invitations, menus, and programs are running off the six monotype presses right now. They are also working on a special insert of poems by Joseph Langland of the UMass English department for the upcoming edition of Massachusetts Review.

Here is an excerpt from a pamphlet they have published about themselves:

The Hampshire Typothetae has recently been established in Northampton, Massachusetts, for the production of fine printing, and to pass on knowledge of that art to others. Continuing the Western Massachusetts fine press tradition set by Carl Purington Rollins' Montague Press, Harry Duncan's Cummington Press, and Leonard Baskin's Gehenna Press, the Typothetae will publish works of literary and visual merit, but it will also expand this tradition to include printing in association with other organizations and individuals.

Harold P. McGrath, one of the finest letterpress printers in America today and for eighteen years closely associated with Leonard Baskin, will be in charge of printing operations. Joining him as chief designer is Barry Moser, whose Pennyroyal Press has, over the last ten years, produced numerous books noted for their typographic excellence.

The printing shop offers the finest quality in printing and typographic design and consultation to individuals, institutions, and business firms. With special emphasis on letterpress printing, the Hampshire Typothetae will also offer offset printing services in those areas to which photolithography is most suited, such as the reproduction of works of art. Wood engravings & woodcuts will be printed for the relief artist with the same meticulous attention that McGrath has provided for Fritz Eichenberg, Baskin, and others.

Publications of the Hampshire Typothetae will at first emphasize poetry, the arts of the book, and portfolios of visual interest. In addition, those with similar ideas and tastes are invited to inquire about our program of co-publication.

Harold McGrath, has trained many students during his career, and he will continue to undertake this function at the Hampshire Typothetae. An apprenticeship program is being formulated, to be carried on under the aegis of a related, non-profit educational organization, the Collegium Typothetae. In addition, seminars in graphic arts are being planned, specifically in the areas of wood engraving, etching, bookbinding, calligraphy, & the various aspects of printing. These workshops will be offered periodically and will run for varying lengths of time.

We urge all of you who are interested in the activities of the Hampshire Typothetae to drop in or write to us at Thirty Market Street in Northampton, Massachusetts.

The Small Presses

Of course there are those who are concerned more with the content of a fine book: the small presses. Some of the small presses within the Amherst-Northampton area were asked to write up a brief summary of themselves that might also give us an insight into the type of material that they seek.

Love Is Strange: Lynx House Press

By Robert Abel

Writers are not nice. They are better than that. If they are any good as writers at all, they face up to the history they are living, breathing, enjoying, enduring, and do not wave away the concrete facts of our lives or experience. The hard places and the joyous ones, the terrible and the fantastic all become part of the fabric of their arts. We can get all the smarm we want on the television screen, all the sentimentality, narcotic, comfortable lies. But some place in our lives we must make at least a corner for honesty, and for what truths we might be lucky enough to harvest out of the smog of pretense that snuggles down over this nation like a warm belly.

Lynx House Press writers are not nice. But this does not mean they are not writers of wit, good humor or joy or that they cannot be hugely entertaining when the times and the subjects are right for it. Humor has always been a fine weapon against the smug, the callous, and the hypocritical, and I think it is especially well used in one of the first books we published, Tomas O'Leary's Fool at the Funeral, and in one more recent work, Robert Hahn's Crimes. But in both cases, humor is only half the story, and many, many demons of the modern soul make their appearance and wreak their havoc. Contemporary life is often terrible, but not unrelievedly so for many of us. A reading by Hahn, O'Leary, David Lenson (The Gambler) or Margaret Robison (The Naked Bear — coming soon) will take you through many changes!

Stephen Miles, a poet and contemporary literature student who organizes readings locally and who has, therefore, encountered a number of writers published by Lynx House Press, has spoken of "The Lynx School." I am not sure, however, there is such a thing, even given that the tastes of the editors (primarily myself and Christopher Howell) are necessarily limited, and that our political and literary prejudices stick out like sore thumbs (like anybody else's) at those after-the-reading conversations, debates, celebrations. For one thing, we admire some of the writers we have published (Hal Stowell, Country Crossings, Robert Bohm, Kali Yuga, Valerie Martin, Love, e.g.) not because they have confirmed our opinions, but because they have shocked and surprised us into learning something better, because they have opened new realms of the psyche. Stowell's deceptive simplicity, his realism and Zen-like religiosity seems quite a distance from Ray Amorosi's sophisticated paradoxes of spirit, passion, mortality, and love (in A Generous Wall). The response of Floyce Alexander (Bottom Falling Out of the Dream) to the quality of contemporary life, especially political life — in this century of war and oppression — is a kind of intense moral outrage laced with realizations of guilt and futility, and relieved by moments of intense love; for Wayne Ude (Buffalo and Other Stories), who is concerned with contemporary Indian life, outrage is smothered in a quiet confidence in his characters to endure with dignity their lives in the wasteland; and for Martin the main subject of interest is the psychological drama, neuroses in some cases, the ways in which our terrors and loves can break down the walls of our private fortresses. In another book of fiction we've published, Scribble, Scribble, Scribble by Don Hendrie, Jr., the modern world seems peopled by the sardonic and doomed, men and women trying to survive morally and psychologically in a universe where the rules are constantly changing. Miles has spoken to me of the "intense lyricism" and "deep melancholy" of the Lynx House School, but I think these are qualities that are not in themselves attributes of greatness or uniqueness. But it does suggest one taproot for a lot of writing, not just Lynx's, but historically: that we are mortal, yes, but that we do not or cannot make the best of that chilling news in the ongoing emergency that is our lives. When we do: joy!

Miles' observations also interest me because they point to ways in which many of our writers are perceived. I say "our Writers," but the people we've published would probably object to being considered, somehow, property of Lynx House, as if it were, in fact, the editors who shaped the poetry and fiction, and not the beautiful variety and imagination of the writing that created the Lynx House line of books, and the character of the whole production — which may, in fact, be quite accidental. We think the books we have published are excellent, but for a multitude of reasons, and not because they demonstrate any esthetic line. This is not to say that such a "line" may not be discoverable in these works — we all share pieces of contemporary history — and I think in fact that the books we have published are substantial enough to warrant such a search. They are also good enough to be taken, as a group, as highly representative of the best of our underground or alternative literary culture, the culture, that is, sometimes consciously and deliberately, and sometimes quite spontaneously and unconsciously, in revolt against official versions of reality, commercial values, and that whole ridiculous network of busy minds who decide what it is the people — now known as "consumers" or "the Market" — must own, do with, and think about their lives. We want to corner a little share of the forest to print something besides bullshit. Consequently we don't expect to make any money and are elated when a publishing project breaks even. (If you want to make money, my lads and lasses, get into bullshit. That's where the Big Bucks are.)

I think, too, that most of the writers we have published — with clear exceptions — are not tolerant of the after-dinner-speaker ceremonies that introduce them, sometimes, to new audiences at readings. Unfortunately this has been misinterpreted by at least one local small press entrepeneur (who would benefit from an inoculation of the facts of life) as some kind of weird nastiness, as the story gets back to me along those rumor rounds. As the readings at the Arts Festival this year revealed, each poet or story teller carries around his or her own world or vision, and speaks in a unique voice, and the encroachment of the Great American Nice just won't do for them. America is dying of Nice. It is wearying, and Lynx writers at least will rarely settle for being another species of entertainment, a TV image. They are not being impolite when they reject even well-meaning efforts to make them seem cozy and educational, or are impatient with credential-mongering. Their writing is serious business and their beings are at stake in it. When a poem by Margaret Robison or Hal Stowell brings you to tears, it happens because you are up against something fundamental. If O'Leary or Hahn crack you up, it's not because of a pie in the face, but because you are reduced to laughter, in the face of an absurdity or a mystery. You won't find villains in the stories of Ude, Martin, or Hendrie, but you might find the enemy within. There is no resolution by pistol in the poems of Lenson or Amorosi, but you might discover something about the fine art of poisoning that so subtly goes on in so many of our relationships. And this is just half the story, of course, a terrible oversimplification of what these writers have to say.

Some of the people we have published are almost certainly on the verge of discovery by wider audiences. Most have a fine record of small press journal publication and are sought after for readings (if not, alas, for jobs!) One of our reasons for taking on the enormous amout of work in putting out a book (the first back in '74) was that we had become aware through the UMass writers' program, of how much good writing is going on that doesn't have any relationship to commercial formulas or lend itself to commercial star-making. Since then, we have encountered excellent writing from all over New England, and the country, and our list has diversified accordingly. Our mailbox is a busy place, and we have learned to regret very much not having the money to publish more writers than we have — not that we could realistically take on more work in any case. The $4,000 we received from the National Endowment for the Arts last year was truly welcome, but I hope it is not just bragging to say that we made excellent use of it in producing eight fine books in editions of from 350 to 550 at reasonable prices. Now we are required to give an accounting of ourselves (grants mean learning some new skills, like bookkeeping), and, of course, to make these works known as well as we can with limited means.

Write Box 800, Amherst 01002, and we'll send you our list of titles. And next year? Robison's The Naked Bear (poems); Robbie Gordon's The Sandwich-Man's Daughter (a novel); and Joyce Thompson's Thirty-Five Cent Thrills (stories). And if we get some money, there will be others, and more, all of them better than nice, some of them dangerous.

Panache Press

By David Lenson

Panache Editor

Panache Magazine was founded in 1965 in New York City by Rosalie Frank, a poet and connoisseur of experimental fiction. The magazine's heyday as a publisher of quality fiction began in 1968 when Miss Frank moved it to Princeton, N.J. In the eight years until her death in 1976, Miss Frank introduced many writers of note, such as Raymond Federman, Gayl Jones, George Chambers, Gary Goss and Maura Stanton. With the addition of David Lenson as poetry editor in 1971, the magazine renewed its interest in verse while maintaining itself as a market for fiction. Mr. Lenson became editor in 1974, and acquired the magazine from Miss Frank's estate in 1976. Robert Steiner served as fiction editor from 1975 through 1977, and Candice Ward became assistant editor in 1976.

With the publication of Christopher Howell's The Crime of Luck in 1977, Panache has launched a new series of poetry books, which will include work by Frederic Will, Margaret Robison, Jay White and James Grabill. Books published during Miss Frank's tenure include The Bonnyclabber, an experimental novel by George Chambers, and Future's Fictions, a collection of experimental fiction edited by Richard Kostelanetz.

Panache Magazine remains open to unsolicited manuscripts, reading poetry in the spring of each year and fiction in the fall. A number of special projects are planned for the next couple of years, including a Panache Reader, collecting the best writing from past issues. We seek excellence in fiction and poetry, but try to remain free of the control of any one style or school. We urge all prospective contributors to read the magazine before submitting. We offer a sample issue, fiction, poetry or both, for the price of one dollar. All Panache publications are carried by the Broadside Bookstore in Northampton. Orders and manuscripts should be addressed to P. O. Box 77, Sunderland, MA 01375.

University of Massachusetts Press

The University of Massachusetts Press, located up behind Orchard Hill on East Pleasant St. has published their fall and winter catalog. Here is an outline of some recent titles and a comment on what we can expect during the coming months.

Changing Rural Landscapes
Ervin H. Zube and Margaret J. Zube
160 pp., cloth, $10.00; paper, $4.95

Changing Rural Landscapes brings together fifteen essays from J.B. Jackson's highly acclaimed Landscape magazine to explore the interaction between American values and rural landscapes. Placed within the context of current issues — the population shift to rural areas, the loss of agricultural lands, the impact of recreational developments on wildlands — these essays focus on change as it occurs in rural America. Sharing an underlying concern for the wisest use of landscapes through careful planning, the essays show how social, economic, cultural, and technological processes affect the ways in which the landscape is organized and used. The volume is divided into four sections: "Processes and Values" is an exploration of dominant cultural and technological forces in landscape changes, offering analyses of the landscpae through attention to human values and historical perspectives; "Boundaries and Territories" presents discussions of spatial organizations and relationships — front yards, walls, fences — and observes the ways in which these elements combine to create the rural community; "Communities" considers alternative communities, the role and future of rural towns and cities, and the quality of rural community life; "Perception and Experience" offers provocative insights into perception and experience as ways of understanding landscape values. The essays in this section reflect Jackson's concern with a person-based approach to analyzing changing landscapes.

Ervin H. Zube graduated from the University of Wisconsin and received his Ph.D. from Clark University. He is presently director of the Institute for Man and Environment at the University of Massachusetts. He also edited Landscapes: Selected Writings of J.B. Jackson (1970).

Margaret J. Zube graduated from the University of Wisconsin and received her Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts. She is presently a research planner for the Geriatric Authority of Holyoke, Massachusetts.

A Rainbow for the Christian West
By Rene Despestre
Translated with an introduction by Joan Dayan
272 pp., cloth, $12.50

The first major translation and study of Rene Depestre, an important Black Haitian poet and dedicated Marxist who has lived in Cuba since 1959, A Rainbow for the Christian West includes a translation of Depestre's most important collection of poetry with a critical introduction.

Depestre is a poet of negritude, inspired as much by the Haitian popular religious tradition as by politics and Marxism. He views the clash between the black and white worlds as a source of new synthesis, a truly human society. "I hope to reveal the strenuous vitalism of Depestre's vision of the poetic act and his own belief in 'the still open possibility to make this earth adrift a reality still more beautiful than poetry,'" states the translator, Joan Dayan, in the preface.

A Rainbow for the Christian West presents this view in a sequence of poems and prose poems in which the poet, strengthened by the concept of Negritude and drawing on the wealth of Voodoo symbolism, intrudes into the white man's world — conflict and transformation ensue.

Joan Dayan, whose commentary is based on rare documents as well as on field work in Haiti, is a doctoral candidate in comparative literature at CUNY. Her work on Despestre received the Land Prize at Smith College where she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and graduated summa cum laude.

Brief History of the Massachusetts Review

By Robert Tucker

The Massachusetts Review first appeared in Autumn, 1959, when there were only four colleges in all the area and the Amherst campus was the only academic branch of the University of Massachusetts. It probably grew out of a UMass Literary Society which gathered mostly UMass faculty of various disciplines in common projects — two series of radio tapes, e.g., for the National Association of Educational Broadcasters. We needed something by which we could have a more permanent relationship with our audience beyond the Connecticut Valley.

The first issue of MR looked very much as issues still do; the attractive and durable format was designed by Leonard Baskin and Sidney Kaplan, one of the magazine's founding editors. Launching this "Quarterly of Literature, the Arts and Public Affairs," the first MR contained a poem by Robert Frost, another by E.E. Cummings, an article on U.S. military policy, some Baskin drawings with an article on Kathe Kollwicz, and, among other things, in the some 200 pages, some fiction and poems by previously unpublished writers.

In those early years, a founding co-editor, Frederick Ellert, was influential in persuading the University's alumni and other private donors to back the independent venture. The editorial board, including Kaplan, Ellert, Frederick Troy (now a UMass trustee), David Clark, Jules Chametzky, Leone Stein (now Director of UMass Press), Loren Beth, Paul Gagnon (now at UMass-Boston), and others, were so far committed that they would have mortgaged their homes to keep the magazine alive.

KEEP ON ROLLING

In time, however, the still independent journal (a non-profit corporation whose editorial board has sole responsibility for policy and stance toward the public and the magazine's supporters) gathered enough artistic and intellectual prestige to enjoy the steady backing of UMass and, gradually, additional support from Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Smith, and (more recently) Hampshire College. We are now a Five College enterprise. An early decision of the UMass editor: was to draw other editors from the faculty of the other three, now four, colleges. To date, one fiction editor, Shaun O'Connell, teaches on the UMass-Boston campus. These distinguished editors have done much to persuade their institutions to help back MR.

More functionally, MR's editorial board — all volunteer — is composed of two to four (it varies) staff (or managing) editors and, now, about twenty-five department editors (in poetry, fiction, art, the performing arts (including film), criticism, public affairs, etc.) Generally at least three editors have agreed to accept an item before the manuscript, the photograph, woodblock or whatever sees print.

Thus the independent magazine, published with the cooperation and support of the Five Colleges (and others, including grants from the National Endowment of the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts), draws contributors of manuscripts, etc., from all over the U.S. and, often enough, from abroad. It has become internationally known and valued.

We have always tried for a judicious mix of the well-known artists or writers and those not yet known (who should be); this mix of older and new blood (and issues) seems to keep us from congealing, as editorial boards and magazines have been known to do. Commercial as well as academic press books have their their first showing, in part or whole, in MR.

UMass and UMass-Amherst alumni have kindly housed the managing editorial staff in their Memorial Hall since very nearly the beginning of the magazine. That office is the focus for the other colleges' (and the Boston branches) editorial work. The staff editors continue to put issues together and, with the art and photography editors, design the entire format for printing. All such work is volunteer, a considerable economy in our budget.

In our first decade, Vermont Printing, Inc. (Brattleboro, Vt.) published and bound MR issues; since then Commonwealth Press (Worcester, Mass.) has been our printer and binder. For especially delicate art-work, we have from the start called on Meriden Gravure, Inc. (Meriden, Conn.), on Gehenna Press (Northampton, Mass.) and occasionally Mohawk (Greenfield, Mass.) to print sections or signatures, later to be bound in the relevant issue by our principal publisher.

MR is about a $50,000.00 operation annually, and our earned income plus support miraculously balances, very nearly, our expenses each year.

We early determined to print as fine as we could, given our means, and we have continued that practice. At first, we printed fine without honoraria (except extra issues) to contributors. We now award a small honorarium to each contributor ($50.00 for articles and short stories, e.g.); the token is small because of the quite costly (but valuable) principle of fine printing.

Our only paid associates are a full-time secretary and a business manager (who supervises subscriptions, advertising, and bookkeeping). The work-study aides' salaries come from the UMass budget, but we pay a fee for a CPA each year.

With MR as a focus which gathers editors of distinction from the Five Colleges and UMass-Boston, one of the most rewarding communities-of-interest functions in the Conn. Valley. We see what we've collectively selected, gathered, and designed every three months of each year, and we are aware that many others (though we print usually about 2,000 copies each quarter, over half go to libraries) elsewhere enjoy and profit (and may for years to come) from our product. We are in touch with a wide variety of contributors (not only those who are accepted) in growing fields of great and general interest, and we learn (almost inevitably) as we continue to think about our common enterprise. So we grow and gather perspective and, God willing, wisdom.

Riding the Crest of the New Wave Rock

By Philip Milstein

Chances are that by now you've heard of punk rock. Chances are also, however, that what you've heard is not entirely correct.

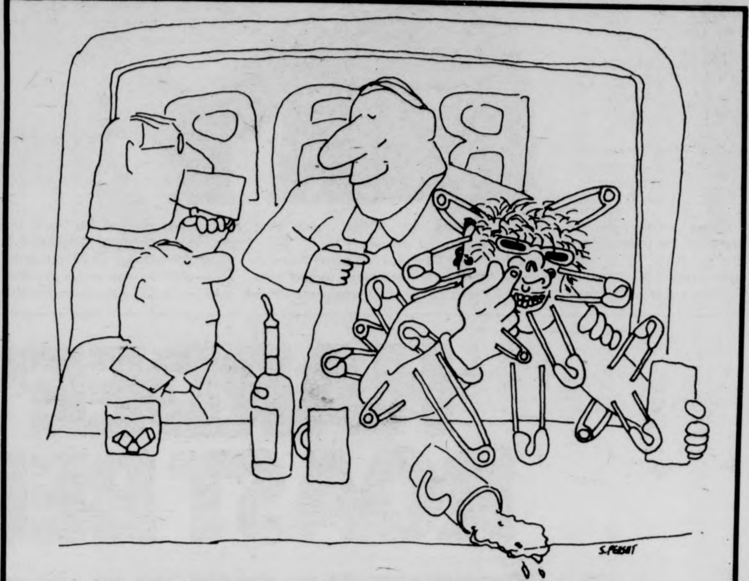
The true punks do not walk around with safety pins through their cheeks, swastikas painted on their foreheads or with their hair painted green. They do not hate everyone in sight. They do not spit on each other. The true punks, in fact, don't do much of anything. That is what makes them punks.

I suppose it is necessary at this point to define the term "punk". The history of the word has little connection with its current usage: it began as a derogatory term used to label young prisoners who would wilfully submit to the desires of other homosexual jailbirds. Needless to say, the meaning of the term has wandered quite a bit from that original definition.

I would describe current usage of the word "punk" as "a young person, usually a male teenager, who, bored with school, parents, hometown, etc., can find nothing better to do than do nothing." They'll hang out on street corners, drive around town in their father's cars, take up drinking or light drugs, play pinball or pool, anything non-strenuous to mind or body to break the boredom. One further outlet for breaking this strangling ennui is rock 'n roll. It's fun, enjoyable, requires little outward brain or body-work to make, is a great way to vent these teenage frustrations, and is a perfect outlet for the true creativity many of these kids harbor.

The kids will borrow, buy or steal some cheap instruments, learn a few primal chords, and band together to form a group. They'll practice in the basement or garage, and play the high school dance or local club circuit.

It's when these punks gang up to play rock 'n roll that we have punk rock, and this is where our story begins.



'My friend Tony here is barely civilized.'

graphic from "Gig" magazine

The True Punks

The first true punk rockers sprang up in the midwestern part of this country around mid-1964. The Beatles had hit like gangbusters earlier that year, brandishing a gently rebellious attitude and very little musical proficiency. Kids on the west coast had plenty to do, with surfing and all; kids on the east coast felt themselves above it all. But the midwestern kids, seeing that there was little the Beatles could do that they themselves could not, and having absolutely nothing better to do, took to the garages en masse and began pounding out their very crude but terribly energetic brand of rock 'n roll.

From the garages they hit the dance-hall stages, and success there led to the local recording studios. When groups such as ? And The Mysterians, the Shadows Of Knight and the Music Explosion began to garner national attention and a few hit records, kids on both coasts finally sat up and took notice. It wasn't long before a full-fledged craze was underway.

From Boston it was the Barbarians and the Remains. From Tacoma it was the Sonics. From Los Angeles, the Standells and the Leaves. They couldn't play their instruments very well, but they had quite a knack for melody, and they produced some of the best music this country has heard before or since.

Many, perhaps most, of America's youths responded favorably to such music, but the 1967 coming of the Great God Acid to national attention and usage soon destroyed an entire generation, and consequently lost punk rock a lot of listeners. Groups which had previously been playing punk rock began to incorporate into their acts long, boring, pretentious acid rock pieces, and won back their fans. Flowers, paisley, beads, love and Nehru jackets became the mainstays of bands such as the Seeds, the Thirteenth Floor Elevators and the Chocolate Watch Band.

Sgt. Pepper struck in June, 1967, and after that, forget it; no one wanted energy, all they wanted was peace and insight. Punk rock died a rapid death, and, in its true form, has never been revived.

Iggy Pop

There were a few holdouts, however. James Osterburg, aka Iggy Stooge aka Iggy Pop, was one. His Ann Arbor, Michigan, band appeared in 1967 and, although they were named the Psychedelic Stooges, had little to do with anything that was happening at the time. Now Detroit and its surrounding towns, of which Ann Arbor is one, had always been a great rock 'n roll city, but in 1967 even Detroit wanted none of it. The Psychedelic Stooges, who soon dropped their drug-related prefix, didn't, needles to say, go down too well in Detroit. Nonetheless, huge crowds would come out specifically to give them a hard time.

The Stooges brand of rock 'n roll was quite original, and had less to do with conventional music than had anything previously. They were tough, fast, loud, screechingly metallic, usually brilliant and often quite dangerous. Lead singer Iggy would, on most given evenings, do unto either himself, the audience, or both. He would dive onto broken bottles or into an unsuspecting crowd of observers; he would rake a drumstick over his chest until he bled or he would puke into the audience.

In 1969 Elektra records A&R man Danny Fields was in Detroit scouting the MC5, a band whose power and energy nearly matched that of their friends, the Stooges. Also on the bill that night was Iggy and his crew, and Fields was impressed enough with both bands to sign them up. John Cale, a founding member of the Velvet Underground (a band which deserves an article of at least this length devoted exclusively to it) was hired to produce the first Stooges album. Entitled, appropriately, The Stooges, it was a masterpiece, as was their 1970 Fune House set.

To make the rest of the Iggy story short, the band broke up shortly after Fun House, due in part to drug problems, and reformed again in 1973 to make Raw Power, which was produced by David Bowie and was an absolutely vital album, pure perfect rock 'n roll almost to the point of being scientific about. Iggy was three-for-three but couldn't hold the band togehter; they split again after Raw Power. Early this year Iggy reappeared with The Idiot, which Bowie again produced; it's another brilliant record, years ahead of its time in its deathly robot-like atmosphere. Iggy has since tourned with the new material, and with Bowie on keyboards, and there is as yet nothing else to add to his chapter.

The New York Scene

Iggy Pop was the last of the true punks, and in 1972, during one of his frequent periods of being "the world's forgotten boy", there was a widespread revival of interest in the original punk rock. Spearheading this movement was Lenny Kaye, an eminent rock critic and historian who has gone on to rock 'n roll fame in his own right as lead guitarist for the Patti Smith Group. Kaye compiled, for Elektra records (strange how a primarily folkie label has had such an effect on punk rock), Nuggets, an excellent two-record set containing 27 original punk rock classics. Included were "Farmer John", by the Premiers, the Seeds' "Pushin' Too Hard" and the Standells' "Dirty Water", all three-chord power surges, as well as many other greats.

This interest in punk rock was abetted by some new groups who took up, musically at least, where the originals left off. The image was often this time glitter, but the music of such bands as the New York Dolls, Flamin' Groovies (who choose not to indulge in any simulated androgyny) and the revived Iggy And The Stooges retained the basic drive and punch of the true punks.

(An argument could be made that the Dolls were in fact late-model true punks, but true punks cared scarcely a lick about anything but the music, whereas the Dolls, it seemed, were often more interested in how they looked than in how they played.)

Interest in punk rock continued underground until the New York City rock press brought it above-ground again in late 1975. Earlier that year two members of the rather avant-garde band name Television were walking the streets of lower Manhattan in search of a venue where they and several other new young bands could display their respective wares. When they hit Bleecker and Bowery they stumbled across a man named Hilly Kristal and a dark, seedy Hell's Angel's club named Country, Blue Grass And Blues, CBGBs for short. Kristal, it turned out, was looking for some entertainment for his clubs, groups in any of the veins for which the place was named.

The two musicians, in a last-ditch effort, told him that that's what they played, and CBGBs suddenly found itself host to a very (at that time) raw and loose yet strangely powerful band. Small but steady crowds followed, and soon other young bands were booked at the club, among them Patti Smith, the Ramones, Talking Heads and Blondie. The only thing Kristal demanded in hiring a band was originality, and he got plenty of it.

Still bigger crowds began flocking to the joint, and then came the writers, and before long CBGBs was internationally known as a new mecca for good original music, music derived in many cases from the Velvet Underground, the Stooges and the original punks.

Uptown a bit, Max's Kansas City, the New York rock club during the glitter phase, reopened and played host to many of the same bands that were packing them in at CBGBs. Between the two, and a few lesser, temporary homes, a regular circuit was formed, and the word was spread. Patti Smith was signed to Arista, and Horses, produced by John Cale (him again) and released in late 1975, sent the whole thing sky high.

The False Punks

As news of the New York scene reached the rest of the world similar scenes began to spring up in such places as Boston, Los Angeles and London, among other cities. Rock 'n roll, which had been virtually dead (or at least hibernating), for all intents and purposes, since Woodstock, was seeing a revitalization like it had never seen before. Music was once again energetic, young, abundant and original.

But there was a problem: when news of the thriving New York scene began to filter through to other parts of the world, both writers and readers ostensibly focused on the most unusual bands, which is to be expected. This meant that the Ramones, who were at least in image alone the strangest of the lot, received the brunt of the attention, although great sales success unfortunately did not follow. The Ramones presented themselves as being a lot tougher than they really were, wearing black leather jackets, ripped jeans and constant sneers. There was, we eventually discovered, a false image, but they singlehandedly brought punk rock back into vogue.

It was not long before those who did not really know what was going on in New York began to believe that all the bands there dressed and acted the same as the Ramones, and the New York scene soon developed an international reputation as being the home of punk rock. Which was not the case; the Ramones, in fact, were about the only New York band at the time that even came close to punk rock. All those young bands that were popping up in all the maor cities of the country soon adopted those same leather jackets and scowls, began writing songs to compare with the Ramones almost-parodic tales of violence and teenagerhood, and continued crashing out the same three chords at frantic paces. It was great, all this energy and love of rock 'n roll, but it wasn't true punk rock; it was merely a graven image thereof. The primary venues for this new wave of music were the Rat in Boston's Kenmore Square, highlighted by bands such as DMZ, Willie Alexander And The Boom Boom Band and Reddy Teddy, several different clubs in L.A., who play host to the Runaways, Wierdos, the Screamers, etc., and San Francisco's Mabuhay Garden, home of the Nuns and Crime, among others.

Meanwhile, the New York bands were quickly being snatched up by deal with new movies," said Morrisson, "because we always get smaller audiences."

This fall they'll be showing silent film matinees every Sunday afternoon with live organ accompaniment by Mr. A.T. Purseglove. Another treat will be a revival of old 3-D flicks beginning with Vincent Price in The House of Wax. Morrisson says that these films are truly unique in that a special system has been assigned for their presentation. It basically involves using clear polarized lenses rather than the red and blue ones that moviegoers may have used in the past. The differences, he says, is phenomenal and they intend to run a 3-D film at least once a month.

Also in store are some special children's puppet and clown shows later in the fall. Watch Below the Salt for times and ates.

Beginning this September admission will be $2.25 for adults; $1.00 for children and senior citizens. Morrisson says that they might be having a dollar night except for the twin bills.

During the summer the Pleasant Street Theatre played host to a number of special events. Among them was the appearance in-person, of Andy Warhol, film star Holly Woodlawn, a showing of a Danish anti-nuke flick, and two original 35mm copies of Frankenstein and Son of Frankenstein. According to Morrisson they are the only two copies in the United States.

Academy of Music
274 Main St.
Northampton
(tel) 584-8435

"We're a small house, said manager Duane Robinson, "900 seats. But we have box seats that we still use." The Academy was modeled after the Ford Theatre in Washington, DC, and is the sixth oldest operating theatre in the country. It's a splendid place that offers some truly unique film and theatrical events.

The Academy appeals to both a general and a college audience, hosting concerts, plays, and this year they are planning a full scale opera by the Project Opera, and a ballet as well as a road play by a visiting troupe.

Films follow a G to R rating, never any X's. Admission is from $2. to $2.50 for adults, $1.00 for children and a discount for senior citizens.

The Academy is also unique in that it is owned by the city of Northampton. Any profits go into the city treasury to help keep down taxes. The only other city-run theatre that Robinson knows of is in Albany, N.Y.

The films are not sent in through a syndicate as happens with many movie houses. "I select everything myself," says Robinson. Most films stay for a week but vary from one movie to the next depending upon the terms of each individual contract.

"Strictly adult entertainment," says the manager of the Majestic Theatre. Adults, "$3.00 a head"; children ... " I don't want to label it 'X' because there's always the problem of some 17 year-old kid sneaking in. One time this guy brings in a baby 14 months old and I told him to get out. All I need is for that kid to start crying and it would be all over town that there was a kid in here; and it would be distorted too. Next thing you know they'd be saying that the kid was seven years old or something.

"They come from all over," he reports, "but most of them are 35 years or older. Not too many of the college crowd, they're the action crowd." Apparently the college crowd is more interested in doing not viewing.

The Majestic has 732 seats, usually has a twin bill. You must be over 21 to enter the theatre; freshmen beware!

The Deerfield has some first run features and admission ranges from $3 to $3.50 per person while the Red Rock is usually $4.00 per car load. The Deerfield can hold 320 cars, the Red Rock about 400.

Rock in the Mid-Seventies

The Turning Point

By David P. Santos

The Mid-Seventies will be regarded as a major turning point for the "name" Progressive Rock bands; each group suffered traumatic problems that either served to strengthen them or severly weaken them. In the cases of Pink Floyd and Yes, their stormy times turned out for the better. The same can be said for Genesis, who went from minor league status to the majors. For Jethro Tull and Emerson, Lake & Palmer; they failed to commit themselves to their original visions and are, indeed, pityless shadows of their former selves. The following, if you will, is a group by group account:

Pink Floyd: Watching for Pigs on the Wing

Hearing Pink Floyd is one thing, seeing is another. You really can't appreciate this band without indulging in both areas. On vinyl, Pink Floyd creates luxurious textures built on expansive musical and lyrical themes. This has been quite true of late, especially since Meddle. In concert, the group is a multi-media event. There is simply no other band in existence that intelligently intregrates film and music as well as Pink Floyd does. Their props are not there to "wow" you — that huge inflatable pig that menacingly hovered over us at the Garden was saying something more than the obvious.

It has taken Pink Floyd years to do what they have done. I've always had this feeling since Meddle or even as far back as Ummagumma that Pink Floyd wasn't just any space band. Their delving into stage visuals was already well known since their salad days at the UFO club.

But there always was the spectre of Syd Barrett; that "boychild, seer of visions" who haunted Pink Floyd until recently. Barrett, founder and guitarist, had left the band after its first lp, crushed under the pressures of the music industry. The rest of the band was genuinely scared and it comes as no surprise that they became extremely reclusive. (To this day they rarely talk to the press) That, however, could only last so long and Floyd finally succumbed with The Dark Side Of The Moon.

Bewildered by its huge success and the everpresent memory of Barrett, Floyd were on the verge of callapsing. Fortunately for us and them, they returned with the excellent Wish You Were Here. Besides being a scathing comment on the music industry, WYWH finally came to terms with Barrett. Written by bassist Roger Waters, it is an intense, personal statement by Pink Floyd. Musically, it is also their best album. The followup, Animals, is likewise as good despite being, in part, written partially in conjunction with WYWH.

Which brings up to Pink Floyd's master stroke: the concert stage. Words cannot do them justice. Floyd shows include a vast army of lights, props and films. Like their music, a Pink Floyd tour is a "work in progress." The films that accompanied "Welcome To The Machine" were two years in the making according to reliable sources.

Floyd's current tour reflects their masterful genuis: the most complete musical and visual offering you're ever likely to see. Their two most recent albums took up the main portion of the concert, with three songs from Dark Side Of The Moon (with films). Animals is still, believe it or not, being refined upon. Wish You Were Here was, to put it mildly, exquisite. Again the two films that accompanied "Shine On You Crazy Diamond" and "Welcome To The Machine" cannot be matched anywhere. They were, of course, about Barrett — who was depicted with the upmost understanding and respect. The lessons Pink Floyd have learned from him and their own recent mammoth success have spawned forth a more fully realized band. I seriously doubt if anyone can learn and grow as much as Waters, Gilmour, Wright and Mason have.

Yes:
A Vision Reborn

Yes' Close To The Edge remains one of the classic progressive rock albums of all time. It was everything and anything to all bands of the genre. Close To The Edge also caused a lot of problems for Yes-problems that surfaced with Tales From Topographic Oceans and spread with Relayer.

Topographic Oceans was basically a power play by Steve Howe and Jon Anderson and saw stellar keyboardist Rick Wakeman leave in disgust. The album holds it own despite being overblown over four sides. It does because Yes always experimented, attempted new and interesting things. Even the most tepid spots to its followup, Relayer, succeed on guts and determination alone.

Like Jethro Tull, Yes took a tremendous critical beating that left them bitter. Relayer signaled a growing schism within the band too. Wakeman's replacement, Patrick Moraz, never really fit into the band — though it wasn't his fault. Anderson and Howe seemed to be directionless and distant, while Squire seemed to be non-existent.

Happily, things have come roundabout again with a glittering new album and Wakeman back at keyboards. Going For The One is for all of us left hanging after Edge. It has the same spirit and drive Edge had, musically sound with some new twists and turns. Their sound has been lightened up (no million overdubs) for one thing and even has tongue-in-cheek lyrics by Anderson and Squire. The instrumental interaction by Howe and Wakeman is tremendous. The title track and particularly Squire's "Parallels" are distant and exciting tracks. Going For The One is not terribly progressive, but it has the band on the right path once again. If they hold together long enough — who knows what their capable of?

major labels and turning out mostly excellent albums, but receiving little or no commercial followings.

All this time, however, bigger things were happening in London than anywhere else in the world. The influence of the Ramones' punkster image, coupled with a severe economic depression over there which was turning most of the nation's youth totally against the established leadership, resulted in the most vital, most commercially viable, most widespread wave of punk rock yet.

The summer of 1976 saw the Sex Pistols, the Damned and the Clash come to prominence. The level of instrumental proficiency was at its lowest ever over there, and the lyrics were mostly anti-government ditties, but the thing was happening, and in a big way. It's important to keep in mind that the anger these bands spit out is mostly a phony gimmick, a publicity gesture, but it's too late for any of them to turn back now, so the whole thing has gotten way out of hand. Everybody over there thinks they're punks, and they'll resort to nearly any means to prove their toughness: safety pins through their cheeks; spitting on policemen; violent scenes at rock concerts. But punk rock is selling in England. The Sex Pistols, who have been thrown off two labels already for their rude public behavior, have had a number one single despite its being banned by the BBC and several large record chains. The charts list, as of June 18, six punk rock records (albums plus singles) in the top 30. Punk rock bands regularly make the daily papers for some lewd act or another.

Soon the British punk bands will be over there (we've already lived through the Damned), and when that happens it could all hit here commercially, as well. I just hope the American public is ready for it.

Repercussions

As punk rock slowly came to the attention of the adults of this country, more than a few began to see dollar signs in it. Only they centered themselves not on the music but rather the outrageous clothes the fans were wearing. So in the past few months punk rock has become the newest fashion trend. The big newsweeklies, Time, Newsweek, People, have all run stories about gold safety pins that can be bought for $100 apiece, pre-torn T-shirts with scary slogans such as "Punk" or "Nasty" emblazoned across the front, selling for $16 at Macy's, long ripped gowns that go for over a grand, etc.

The same thing that killed glitter — the commercialization of it — will kill punk, and the kids will soon find themselves yet another absurd trend to jump on.

Its death will be a shame, because the current form of punk rock has given us a whole lot of great music, but I just wish it would never have called itself punk rock, because it really isn't ...

GETTING A GRIP ON HANDEL

By Naismith Darlingeer

When Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey first splashed across the silver screen a few years ago it had a major impact not only in the cinema but in the music world as well. It was for many, young and old, their first exposure to what finer ears had been attuned to for years.

At that time, or rather shortly before the film's popularity, Also Sprach Zarathustra was the title of a German philosopher's volume that predicted the evolution of a superior race of humans. Neither the book nor its author, Friedrich Nietzsche, were pronounced correctly and the fact that the title was shared by Richard Strauss (people are beginning to pronounced his name correctly these days as well as differentiating between the various composers of that name) in his tone poem was relatively unknown.

A recording of Also Sprach Zarathustra was not the easiest item to find but since the movie's exploitation of the now famous prelude more versions of this piece have been pressed than ever before. The latest comes from Angel-Seraphim records and to this reviewer's surprise is a bit of a disappointment.

The piece begins with a low pedal point in the orchestra which conductor Rudolf Kempe has drawn out to embellish its simplicity. This ushers in a soft trumpet call beginning at C and advancing an octave after G. This is repeated three times building to a tremendous climax that sweeps in the entire orchestra under the leadership of the brasses.

It is the rich majesty of the timpani that is sold short here. Granted it is only one instrument and only one section of the entire tone poem but it is an important instrument and a crucial part of the overall nature of the identification between the score and its literary counterpart to which it seeks to complement its philosophical statement. They sound like tin. Perhaps it is a matter of where the microphones have been placed or perhaps a matter of direction on Kempe's part but whatever, it is disturbing.

Other than this, which unfortunately is considered the major strength of Strauss' Zarathustra by all too many, the recording is a superb rendition. The sweet but powerful strings and woodwinds carry the rest of the orchestra through a gradual development of assorted rhythmic episodes where C major and B major-minor, which are at one point as far away from each other and at another chromatic neighbors, mesh to symbolize the fusion of humanity and science.

The remainder of the piece employs fugal devices based primarily on the first theme. At one time introduced by the oboes, at another by the cellos and double basses it leaps from intense, melancholy passages to ascending, passionate trills. It concludes with the high woodwinds and strings in B while the basses play in C. Though never explained by Strauss, this device is probably used to depict the conclusion of Nietzsche's opus in which his wandering philosopher has decided that life is a mystery despite his philosophy.

A unique collection of English court music covering a century between the Elizabethan reign up to the early 1600's has been put together by the Early Music Consort of London under the direction of David Monrow and under the label of Angel. It's called A Contemporary Elizabethan Concert. What makes it Elizabethan is names like Dowland, Purcell, Paisible, and the world reknowned Anonymous.

Now what makes it contemporary is names from the 20th Century such as Ralph Vaughan Williams, Edmund Rubbra, and Clive Richardson. The instruments span the centuries as well. Recorder, treble recorder, tenor recorder, bass recorder, lute, harpischord, viola de gamba, and piano are all employed to present an outstanding performance of this early English music and its later influences.

In much the same vein, two other albums of Purcell music have been released by Angel within a month of each other. Birthday Odes for Queen Mary, also by the Early Music Concert of London and directed by David Munrow, and Funeral Music for Queen Mary & Five Anthems, with the choir of King's College, Cambridge, the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, and the Academy of Saint Martin-in-the-Fields conducted by Philip Ledger both give an impressive listen to this prolific composer.

Munrow and the Early Music Consort have given us a taste of what the Queen herself must have heard for original and reproductions of baroque instruments have been used for this recording and have been played at a semitone below contemporary pitch level to recreate the approximate pitch in common use in Purcell's era.

The Funeral Music is much more stately and solemn but this of course is the very nature of the anthems. The Birthday Odes are not limited to one particular style but move quickly in and out of a French styled small orchestra to a full baroque orchestra through a country ballad and an Italian styled Sinfonia. Between the years 1680 and 1694 Purcell composed no less than 17 ceremonial odes for such occassions. These birthday odes were to be his last for Queen Mary for the funeral marches were to be performed first in 1695 and second a few months later at the composer's own funeral.

Two hundred years earlier the Flemish composer, reknowned as the greatest bass singer alive, Johannes Ockeghem engaged in some of the most elaborate musical compositions of his era. He is noted for extremely intricate canonic writing and his revolutionary exploration into the neglected lower voices in his sacred compositions.

A dedicated vocal ensemble called Pomerium Musices ("The Realm of Music") under the direction of Alexander Blachly has produced an engaging collection of Ockeghem's Missa Ma maistresse, Missa Au travail suis, Motets & Chansons on a relatively inexpensive label (Nonesuch Records).

The selections from his work show us that Ockeghem was at once an extremely cerebral composer and at the same time a great liberator. His interests did not remain only with the bass voices but extended into the range of the high alto and soprano as well. At times his work is the most spirited discipline-free compositions of the Renaissance that inspired composers of his era as well as writers and poets.

Ockeghem has a fair slice of what is perhaps the most remarkable recording of this nature released this summer. The Art of the Netherlands is a magnificent 3 record set from Angel-seraphim that once again displays the remarkable talents of the Early Music Consort of London and its young, electric director David Munrow.

In a short ten years Munrow launched a brilliant career bringing him notoriety to thousands with his compositions for the BBC television series The Six Wives of Henry VIII and Elizabeth R as well as other popular films. He died last year leaving behind volumes of Renaissance, Middle Ages, and court music of which The Art of the Netherlands is an outstanding example.

Ockeghem served three French kings in succession (Charles VII, Louis XI, and Charles VIII), Obrecht was on the payroll at the court of Ferrara, Isaac in the service of Lorenzo de Medici and Maximilian I, the Holy Roman Emperor, and Josquin des Pres in the Papal Choir and at the courts of Milan, Ferrara, and Paris.

All of these composers came from a period in history that has been regarded as traditionally dull for the arts. This is chiefly because of the paralysing effects of the Hundred Years War (1337-1453) when Burgundy made a break from the French throne. What resulted was the development of Flemish art, the art of the Netherlands, the art of the Low Countries. All of these composers were deeply interested in the development of the human voice as the supreme instrument and they did indeed expand the range of the voice both emotionally and physically.

The Art of the Netherlands is divided into Secular Songs (sides 1 and 2), Instrumental Music (side 3), Mass Movements (side 4), and Motets (sides 5 and 6). It is sure to

Library Poetry Funds

Audrey Beardsley graphic

The state Council on the Arts and Humanities has granted $1,200 to the Jones Library to support a cooperative poetry series with radio station WFCR, the library and the radio station have announced.

.The library was notified of the grant this week in a letter from the council chairman, Vernon R. Alden.

Poetry readings at the Jones Library will be held SunSaturday afternoon beginning in September and concluding in May. Each will feature two poets reading from their work. There will be 26 readings.

The series will be coordinated by the Jones' adult services library, Catherine Gannon, with the assistance of Stephen Miles, who organized the library's successful series last fall. Poets will be selected in consultation with an advisory committee composed of Robert Francis, Joseph Langiand and Robert Tucker.

"Poems to a Listener," the WFCR radio program, will be produced and hosted by Henry Lyman, who originated the show in 1976.

GENESIS

Genesis: Spot the New Kid in Town

Though Genesis have been around for a long time, it is only recently that they've broken into the major leagues with Floyd, Yes, Tull and ELP. Ironically, it came with the departure of lead vocalist-mime-actor-gymnast Peter Gabriel. Gabriel was, in most people's minds, Genesis as his amazing variety of props and characters, acting and visuals gave the band much of its early character. They took it as far as they could with The Lamb Lies Down On Broadway, which along with Tull's A Passion Play and Pink Floyd's array of films are among Progressive Rock's finest hours on the floor boards.

Without Gabriel, Genesis is far less adventurous and almost downright commercial in their writing. Some have suggested that they write cute Victorian fairytales with almost ELP-type keyboard scaling exercises. But both post-Gabriel lps, A Trick Of The Tale and Wind & Wuthering, are good solid recordings — though not without some flaws.

Still, they're artful pieces of music and have playful, endearing qualities about tham. Wind & Wuthering is a neatly polished collection and kicked off a successful tour headlining at a few major arenas. As their recent English lp, Spot The Pigeon, suggests, their have a flair for catchy tunes. It's all good fun, plus musically rewarding and no one, except for Caravan, can create such lush, symphonic textures as Genesis can. Even drummer Phil Collin's side band, Brand X, does some mighty fine fusion music.

Tull & ELP: Pouting Will Get You Nowhere

To put it bluntly, Jethro Tull and ELP officially passed away in 1973 after released and touring with their best lps — A Passion Play and Brian Salad Surgery, respectively. Here are the individual post-mortems:

> "Your hot stuff with a hat > pin, your nearly a laugh.
> But Your really a cry" —
> Roger Waters, from Pigs

For Jethro Tull, it all started with the infamous A Passion Play album. The lp got soundly trashed by all manner of press-media people, which did not sit well with bossman Ian Anderson. Though the tour was a complete artistic and financial success, Anderson's ego was dealt a deadly blow. When his equally infamous WarChild film fell though, it was all over for him. In Anderson's case, ego is a dirty word.

Never have I seen such a bitter and contemptuous person than Anderson, Starting with WarChild, he has taken on a posture that is simply ugly and insulting. Though hateful of the press, he nevertheless goes out of his way to please them. And they still hate him.

The new album, Songs From The Wood, is easily better than the last three bombs, but in the end is an superficial as we could fear. On stage, Tull does a runthrough of past tours, despite a de-emphasis on theatrics. Anderson's flute solo, for example, is simply a reworked version of solos from the last five years of touring. Plus his band are now just silly sidemen who take no interest in their craft. This is all extremely depressing and unfortunately will probably continue to be.

As evidenced by Works, Volume I, Emerson, Lake & Palmer are in serious trouble. Emerson has long had problems with his classical fixations, only that when he fronted The Nice they did it with a sense of humor and adventure. The Seventies version of The Nice, ELP, don't; so when they fail, they fail miserably.

Their current tour and Works definately point to treacherous territory. I commend ELP for admitting that they pushed the three-piece-keyboard-Techno-monster bit to the limit, but when they consider their duty to foist upon us vinyl frisbees like Works, something is rotten at the synthesizer plant. ELP have taken on a project they believe is worthy in scope and grandeur of the Crusades.

However, the fans speak for once and ELP's much vaunted tour is failing. The orchestra has been pulled off 90 per cent of the dates. Having seen the Brain Salad Surgery Tour, this current concoction is one of the biggest cakewalks you've ever seen. Greg Lake looked like a spoiled child, pouting 'cos he couldn't have his orchestra and had to play down to us. Emerson and Palmer, though they ultimately failed by evenings end, tried mightily to spark themselves. If there is a future to ELP, it lies in these two. Which is highly unlikely — Palmer's grand conceit during his WCOZ interview showed that they haven't learned anything over their three year, deeply introspective hiatus.

Handel With Care

remain the last word on this long neglected period of art and history.

It is a little known fact that Beethoven took a lively interest in folksongs but during the early years of the 19th century his "One or More Voices with Violin, Cello, and Piano" had its roots in the ballads of the Scottish Highlands.

Towards the end of the previous century an Edinburgh publisher, George Thomsom, assembled a vast collection of ballads, folksongs, and poems from his country, Wales, England, and Ireland. He sent the basic tunes off to Beethoven for harmonization and for the following 17 years the two men worked on several volumes of folksongs of which 127 were Welsh, Irish, and Scottish, 13 English, and two Italian.

Nonesuch has collected 12 of them in Ludwig van Beethoven: Folksong Settings by the Accademia Monteverdiana under the direction of Denis Stevens.

These songs, such as "My Harry was a Gallant Gay" (text by Robert Burns), "God Save the King" (said to be coined by Purcell, words and music attributed to Henry Carey) which has long been the British national anthem, and "Eivlin a ruin" ("Since All Thy Vows" said to be written by the 14th century Irish bard Carroll O'Daly) have the rustic charm of their origins, their quaint simplicity mesh with the symphonic orchestrations of the German heavyweight and surprisingly always remain somewhat refreshing.

Bruch's Scottish Fantasy (with Violin Concerto No. 2 in D minor) is clearly influenced by Scottish folk melodies; four in particular. Supposedly he was inspired by reading the works of Sir Walter Scott while staying in Liverpool. The latest recording of these melodies comes from Angel records and they are performed by the New Philhamonia Orchestra under the direction of Spanish conductor Jesus Lopez-Cobos (his debut on Angel). They are both treated with delicate care and are very fine recordings.

Also from Angel this summer worth noting are: Brahms, A German Requiem with the Tragic Overture and Variations on a theme by Hayden (2 record set); Mozart, Flute Concerto in G & Oboe Concerto in C, Adanate for Flute and Orchestra in C (orchestre de Paris).

New and noteworthy on the Nonesuch label are: Franz Schubert Mass No. 5 in A flat, the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra conducted by Dennis Russell Davies; and George Frideric Handel, Sonatas for Oboe & Continuo (No. 6 in G minor, No. 8 in C minor) and Trio Sonatas for 2 Oboes and Continuo (No. 2 in D minor, No. 8 in E flat) by various artists.

Some Notes on the UMass Chorale

All students are openly invited to audition for the UMass Chorale on August 31. Auditions will be held in Room 263 of the Fine Arts Center Music Wing between the hours of 9 a.m. and 12 noon and then between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. Auditions for the UMass Chorale will also take place at this time.

The auditions are informal and no prepared solo is required. All voices will be tested for classification, tone quality, dynamic level, and pitch. A short sight-reading test will also be involved.

The Chorale, under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois, performs on campus and in the western Massachusetts area. In past years, the group has toured the U.S. and Europe extensively giving concerts in churches, civic auditoriums, high schools and other college campuses. It has appeared with the Boston Philharmonic and the Springfield Symphony, just last year performing the Berlioz "Requiem" with the latter. The group also performed the "Requiem" in a combined massive effort with other area colleges last year. The performance in Lincoln Center in New York City was enthusiastically acclaimed by New York critics and was an experience that few in the Chorale will forget.

The Chorale has toured Europe and did so in 1972 and 1974. In 1976, the group performed in Rumania.

This year should be of special interest to anyone wanting to join Chorale. A 2 week tour of Europe including London, Paris, Austria and several of its cities, and several other stops have been planned for the first two weeks of summer '78. Much money must be raised to pay for the tour, so fund-raising will be required and each member of the group will have to help pay for this amazing tour by helping raise money.

Chorale involves 6 hours of rehearsal time a week and requires that the individual wants to dedicate and commit himself to a total musical experience, all the while making new friends with the common goals.

Chorale and Chorus auditions are at the same time, so students are asked to make their preference at that time.

The Great Collegian Put-On: 'How-To'

First make sure that the shirt that you're ironing on is a polyester-cotton blend because the design will fade if you use a 100 per cent cotton material.

To prevent staining the ironing board or hard surface that you're using in place of one, slip a sheet or two of paper under or inside of the shirt.

Now cut out the design that you want and place it face down on the shirt leaving enough room to hold it down. Pin it or tape it to prevent sliding and place another piece of paper over the design. Don't use anything thicker than simple notebook paper.

Making sure that the iron is set for cotton (ie: no steam), press down for a little over a minute. Make sure that the iron is good and hot and iron evenly over the entire surface area of the design.

Allow the shirt to cool a bit before lifting off the design. The iron-on should last through normal machine washing but will probably fade a little on the initial washing.

Remember you can use T-shirts, sheets, pillow cases, just about any polyester-cotton blend that you can think of. So use your imagination, drop by the office and display your creativity.

Anita to hit Texas this morning

GALVESTON, Tex. [UPI] — Hurricane Anita slowly picked up speed in its westward movement last night and the first band of fringe squalls began reaching up toward the Texas Gulf Coast.

The National Weather Service said it expected to issue a hurricane warning for portions of the coast early today.

At 8 p.m. CDT Anita was located at latitude 26.1 north, longitude 92.9 west, or about 300 miles east southeast of Corpus Christi. It was drifting west at seven miles an hour carrying highest sustained winds of 95 miles an hour.

At 8:15 p.m., the NWS at Galveston reported the northwest fringes of the hurricane were detected 150 miles to the southeast. A band of squalls was reported 60 miles off the Upper Texas Coast moving slowly north.

Tides were running between three and four feet above normal along the immediate Upper Texas coastline as well as in Galveston and Matagoorda Bays. The NWS recommended evacuation of hundreds of persons living on land up to five feet above sea level with tides expected to increase to five feet by early Thursday morning.

Fletcher Hickerson, a civil defense spokesman in Baytown at the top of Galveston Bay, said approximately 1,200 persons had been advised to evacuate their homes in low-lying areas.

Hickerson said "most of the city is not in danger," but those in low-lying areas have traditionally experienced flooding and closed roads in heavy storms. He said tides in those areas were expected to go over the danger point by midnight.

The Wooster Baptist Church in Baytown was opened for the second night Wednesday as a shelter for those residents unable to find other lodging.

Most storm-wise Texans preferred to wait for more precise information on the predicted landfall of the season's first storm.

"A few people have left, but it's a voluntary thing now. Most everybody is just like us — sitting here waiting for Anita," said Galveston County Sheriff's Deputy Eric Nevelow.

GALVESTON, Texas — Signs along the Galveston waterfront show local residents are not exactly overjoyed with the possibility of Hurricane Anita coming their way. Meanwhile, waves surge about eight feet high on Padre Island near Corpus Christi. Anita has forced residents to begin to evacuate the island. (UPI)

Book Exchange starts

By BRIAN CONDRON
Collegian Staff

Signs littering campus walls early in the semester tell the tale of unwanted, and perhaps unused, books for sale. But students need not spend their time posting signs to sell their books.

Gamma Sigma Sigma the national service sorority, is again running its student book exchange, and beginning today, students can bring their books to the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union and let the sorority do their selling for them.

Leona LaPointe, a member of Gamma Sigma Sigma, said students set their own prices. The sorority adds a service charge, ranging from 50 cents to $1, depending on the original price. Profits from the book exchange are divided between the sorority and the operations expenses for the exchange.

The sorority pays no rent for using Commonwealth Room because of its status as a Recognized Student Organization, but it needs money for legal expenses and postage.

Patti Clark, exchange coordinator, said books not sold at the exchange are sent to Books for Asia, a non-profit organization that distributes books to schools in Asia.

The exchange will be open daily, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., until Sept. 17. Only cash will be accepted in exchange for books, LaPointe said.

Authorities reject appeal for delinquent boys' home

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

A building code appeal by the operators of a North Amherst home for deliquent boys has been rejected by state authorities, according to Peter Christopher, who runs the house with his sister, Martha.

Christopher said he and Martha intend to appeal the state rejection through the Hampshire County court system. They will seek a restraining order against the state decision, which would probably order a closing of the house, as soon as they receive official work from the state building code appeals board.

Last spring Chester Penza, Amherst building code inspector for the Christopher home in violation of building codes for an institution.

During the spring inspection Penza found the windows of the house nailed shut and the doors locked, a condition similar to an institutional setting. Code regulations prohibit institutions to be housed in a wood frame dwelling.

Penza last night said he has been told by state officials that his decision has been unheld, but he has not yet seen the official documents explaining the state-level decision. Penza said he should be receiving the papers next week.

Christopher said he has not received official word about the rejection either.

The Christophers will also be in court this fall to appeal a town zoning board of appeals rejection of a zoning variance for the house also made last spring. The location of the house at 24 Summer St. is zoned for single family residence.

The Christophers, both graduate students in the UMass School of Education, opened the home last November under a subcontract from the Center for Human Development, a non-profit organization contracted by the state Department of Youth Services.

DYS has for the past several years been overseeing a de-institutionalization of juveniles who have appeard in court.

Five boys live with the Christophers at any one time. The boys can stay at the home for up to two and a half months.

Unity Ensemble jazzes it up

By ZOE BEST

Unity Ensemble played black classical music ("jazz") to a standing ovation crowd at the Main Street Center earlier this month, and the balance and rapport among the musicians drew the audience in to follow some tightly arranged sequences. The music was always open enough, however, so that ascensions and downpours of improvisational spontaneity created spiraling excitement.

As a refractor of energies, Chris Henderson on drums aggressively manifested a range of playing versatility. His perfectly executed junctures and propelling crescendos never exceeded the diversity of rhythms he set up. His playing balafons and hand drumming to congas during a dance solo brought African percussion to Northampton.

Reed songs were both tender and impatient. Sulaiman Hakim spun forth tendrils of golden phrases, sending them to glide, suspend, and then shatter — scatter into staccato blizzards of no - time - but - to say - it - all - now exclamations. Guest keyboardist, Kalem Zarif (Billy Galt), spelled out reeling textures and themes. His agility with carillon passages was in polarity to the bass and rhythms.

On guitar, Butch Campbell projected moods from calming-still, balmy motifs to ebullient overflowings. "Anu," written in honor of his newborn son and in seven-four time, took the symbolism of seven-regeneration, new life to take the audience out. Funk appeared. Of this piece he said, "I have all black people in mind ... but I'm glad it can reach everybody."

The bass section enriched the percussive drive of most of the compositions presented. Kevin Ross provided constancy and coloration while Avery Sharpe unleashed accentuations. Sharpe's bowed lines swelled into tides of seismic vibrations. The ensemble, in presenting two bass players, gave fervent heartbeat to their music.

Unity Ensemble, based in this area for several years, strives to transform the feelings and experiences of people in this area and of themselves into a music that makes their audiences one with them.

Jazz Loft North with Rick Jeffries has made the Main Street Center, 150 Main St., Northampton a new performance space for black classical music. Concerts scheduled for this faal include the Diana Ramos's Theatre Dance Workshop Ensemble which will perform in theatre, poetry, music, solo and ensemble dance works today and tomorrow at 8 p.m.

Largest frosh class puts heat on dorms

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

About 400 students entering the University this week were surprised to find themselves temporarily boarded in the Campus Center Hotel, area fraternities and sororities and dorm lounges as the Housing Office continues to stagger under the weight of the worst campus housing shortage since 1975.

According to Jerry Quarles, assistant housing coordinator, attempts to remedy the situation can't begin until noon today when the office begins to determine the number of "no show" students.

The problem is being caused in part by the largest number of entering freshmen and transfers in UMass history — 4,100 Quarles said.

Housing Office figures show 190 persons have been placed in the Campus Center, 150 in the Greek living area, and about 65 in dorm lounges and private residences.

Student Government Association co-Presidents Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste worked at the Housing Office last night to find temporary residences for the displaced students.

Beds Available

"Everyone who wants a bed will have a bed," Hite said, adding that everyone has been placed except for about 25 students they have not been able to reach.

Quarles said his staff is working from 7:30 a.m. to midnight daily to place students in dorm rooms. Those in the hotel will be placed in dormitories first, he said.

Meanwhile, the 400 students will just have to sit tight.

"When I first called housing," said freshman Mike Soltys, "they said it would be two to three days, then seven to ten days, then two weeks, then a month before I would get a room."

Soltys is living in Campus Center 417 with three other entering freshmen. The room contains a single bed, a double bed and a cot.

Another cause for the housing problem, Quarles said, was seniors covering for themselves by signing up for dorm space in case they were not able to find off-campus housing.

The Housing Office worked throughout the summer trying to prevent the overcrowding by calling seniors and asking if they would be returning to dorms in the fall, Quarles said, but it still remains a "mathematical problem."

Don Witkoski, manager of the Campus Center Hotel, said overcrowding is anticipated every year, and the hotel reserves 50 rooms a semester for temporary housing. Usually three students are placed in a room; this year some have four.

In the fall of 1975, a similar overcrowding forced many students to live three to a dorm room for the entire semester. Quarles, the SGA co-presidents and Robert L. Woodbury, vice chancellor for student affairs, agreed last spring not to have triples in the dorm rooms.

"This is the best argument I've heard for non-mandatory housing and boarding for juniors," Hite said last night. "For a long time presidents of student government have been saying there's no need for mandatory housing for juniors."

Seniors Exempted

Presently, only seniors and those students with special exemptions may move from University dormitories to off-campus residences.

Quarles said a survey is being conducted to determine the actual physical space in University dormitories to avoid overcrowding in the future. Some rooms currently used as lounges and other dorm facilities are listed in the housing blueprints as student bedrooms, he said.

But for now, the displaced 400 freshmen and transfers will have to live out of a suitcase.

"At first I thought it was good living here," Soltys said, "but now I want to get onto a floor and get to know the people there. There's no floor unity here because everybody knows they will be leaving soon.

"We get all of our information from the chambermaids; there's no upperclassmen here. If we want to find out anything we have to make phone calls," he said.

Vice Chancellor Woodbury said he sympathizes with the students. "We're not going to panic, though I understand a lot of people have a reason to be upset."

"There is too much demand on the system," he said.

'This is the best argument I've heard for non-mandatory housing and boarding for juniors,' co-SGA President Jon Hite said last night.

Top engineer begins term

The civil engineering department is welcoming Clive L. Dym today as he officially begins as the new department head. Dym replaces Prof. Merit P. White.

"I'm actually very excited about working here," Dym told the Collegian yesterday in a telephone interview. "I think the department is a very strong one and we'll have the opportunity to add some new faculty soon. I think we'll have a very exciting place here."

Former department head White resigned after serving the department for close to 30 years. White will remain a faculty member in the department.

Dym was formerly a senior scientist at Bolt Beranek and Newman, Inc., a consulting firm in Cambridge, Mass. He was contacted there by the search committee looking to fill the vacancy in civil engineering.

At Bolt Beranek and Newman; Dym worked in the underwater technology research and development division and the environmental and noise control technologies division. Before joining the firm in 1974, he was associate professor of engineering at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Pipeline work progresses

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

A new interceptor sewer pipe is being installed, running from the Amherst Waste Water Treatment Plant by the intramural fields to the area of the Steak Out restaurant on Rte. 9.

An interceptor is a main carrier of large volumes of waste water, said Stanley Ziomek, superintendent of Public Works for Amherst.

The new waste water collection pipe is replacing an existing pipe which is undersized. The old pipe, 21 inches in diameter, runs east of the stadium and Farley Lodge, said Ziomek.

The new line, three feet in diameter, will run east of University Drive.

The old line will continue to be used for places where it would be difficult to transfer service, "like Checquers Restaurant," said Ziomek. Both lines will converge at the treatment plant.

The new pipeline "should be completed by snowfall, with some clean-up going on in early spring," said Ziomek.

The construction, not now causing any major traffic problems, will reach University Drive in about one month, said Ziomek. Then, he said, there will have to be some minor detouring.

Construction was begun at the plant, rather than at the other end of the line, at the request of the University so that the playing fields would be available for use this fall, said Ziomek.

Stay sought in Kent State case

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Kent State group fighting construction of a gymnasium on the site where war protesters were killed in 1970 brought their case to the Supreme Court yesterday.

They asked Justice Potter Stewart to stay the effect of an order by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals throwing out their case until they can file a formal appeal.

The lawsuit seeks to keep the bulldozers quiet while the Interior Department completes a study on whether the site is eligible for designation as a National Historic Landmark.

The application asked Stewart for a prompt hearing in view of the "extremely tense atmosphere" at the Ohio college and "the continuing insensitivity of the Board of Trustees."

In July U.S. District Judge Thomas Lambros of Cleveland issued a temporary order preventing the construction but later dissolved it on the ground that he had no authority to act.

The 6th Circuit agreed, saying federal courts have no power "to order the state of Ohio to construct or not to construct a building."

The group told Stewart that their right to petition the government for a redress of grievances is being impaired. But the circuit court said the Constitution does not guarantee "that all petitions for the redress of grievances will meet with success.

It said the record showed the request for a memorial building has been made to the university, the governor of Ohio, the Interior Department and members of the Ohio legislature.

These branches have power not conferred on the federal judiciary, the opinion said.

The application noted that denial of a stay would render any actionby the Interior Department meaningless and permitting the construction to go forward would make the legal controversy a dead issue.

Stewart, who administers the 6th Circuit, is spending the summer at his vacation home in New Hampshire. But a court spokesman said the justice is in touch with his office here and he — not some other member of the court — will act on the application.

Carter attacked for neglecting Blacks

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The chairman of Congress' Black Caucus told President Carter yesterday that unemployment is "killing" American blacks, and said he would fight Carter "with all the vigor I possess until we do something about joblessness."

"He smiled," Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md., told reporters after a White House meeting in which he said he reprimanded Carter for alleged "neglect" of black economic problems.

"But he did indicate he expected me and others to fight him on this issue."

The President met with Mitchell as part of an attempt to consult with black political and social leaders who are attacking his domestic policy record and accusing him of ignoring campaign promises to impoverished black voters.

Mitchell indicated he used the occasion to renew that attack and to suggest Carter make amends by launching a "war on joblessness."

But he said the only commitment Carter made was an agreement to hold a "war on joblessness."

But he said the only commitment Carter made was an agreement to hold "regulary scheduled meetings" with the Black Caucus, starting Sept. 7.

"I again pounded away on the absence of any kind of real program to tackle joblessness," Mitchell said.

"What I said to the President was, I would fight him with all the vigor I possess until we do something about joblessness. The jobless situation has become absolutely impossible in the black community. It's killing us...

The question is, has the status of black folks substantially changed since the President got into office? And the answer is no. Black youth unemployment has gone up, more blacks have slid back into proverty.

"The bottom line is there is neglect."

"Neglect" is becoming the watchword among black critics who are marshalling their forces for a political pressure campaign.

At a meeting in Chicago Monday, black leaders resolved to "launch a counterattack on the callous neglect of blacks, the poor and America's cities."

"I think there has been neglect," Mitchell said Wednesday, "whether it's callous I don't know, but there has been neglect."

Discussing his "war on joblessness" proposal, Mitchell said he envisioned a combined effort by federal antipoverty agencies and the private business sector.

"The total weight of every governmental agency helping cities should be brought to bear under close supervision in one or two or three cities on an experimental basis," he said.

"Couple that with private sector initiative and massive volunteerism programs to see whether any of these existings programs can have an impact."

Carter also dropped in on a White House meeting of big city mayors Wednesday and pledged his "determination" to develop an urban policy responsive to the needs of the inner cities.

Cyprus names new president

NICOSIA, Cyprus [UPI] — Spyros Kyprianou became the second president of the divided island of Cyprus yesterday, succeeding Archbishop Makarios who died of a heart attack four weeks ago.

Kyprianou, 44, a right-of-center politician and foreign minister for 12 years, is known as a solid "Makarios man." He was the only candidate nominated to serve the remaining five months of the five-year presidential term. An election set for Sept. 10 was canceled.

NAIROBI — The Anglo-American peace team of David Owen (L) and Andrew Young meet with Kenyan Vice President

Prime Minister Smith triumphs in Rhodesian general elections

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith won a sweeping victory in general elections yesterday and appeared headed toward gaining the parliamentary majority needed to resist Anglo-American peace proposals and impose his "internal" solution to demands for black majority rule.

The decisive mandate for Smith's Rhodesian Front party over weak conservative and liberal opposition came one day before the prime minister was to meet in Salisbury with British Foreign Secretary David Owen and U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young to discuss a new plan for ending white rule and the nation's five-year guerrilla war.

Smith predicted the two diplomats would present him with "an ultimatum. From what I understand, it looks cooked and dried to me and they don't want to be confused by any fact or ideas we may have."

Returns from more than 30 of the 50 white parliamentary constituencies showed that Smith's party had won all seats. Final returns from remote constituencies were expected Thursday morning.

Smith needs a two-thirds parliamentary majority of 44 seats to enable him to make the constitutional changes required to impose his own plan for a settlement with "moderate black Rhodesians."

Smith has said his plan would give blacks a share of power while providing whites with a weighted advantage in a new parliament and incentives to remain in Rhodesia.

Details of the Anglo-American proposals have not been officially released but, according to informed sources, the plan calls for the installation next year of a black majority rule government on a one-man, one-vote basis. Smith already has rejected the plan as "unconditional surrender."

Smith had appealed to white voters "to strengthen my hand" to ward off "any plan which will lead to our own destruction."

Effort to revamp Mass. courts fails

BOSTON [AP] — A major effort to revamp the Massachusetts court system was gutted yesterday in what one legislator said made a mockery of the entire reform effort.

"We might as well forget what we're doing and go home," said Rep. Max Volterra, D-Attleboro.

The legislature's Judiciary Committee voted down key elements of the Cox Commission report, the work of a panel headed by Harvard law Professor Archibald Cox.

A plan to merge the probate, land and housing courts into the Superior Court system was abandoned completely as was a proposal to unify the 72 district courts into one state-wide system, including all four juvenile courts and the Boston Municipal Court.

The committee did approve a vastly changed plan for making the chief justice of the Supreme Court the chief executive for the entire court system. Although the move would give the chief justice the title, it gives him few additional powers over personnel.

To shuffle judges from one branch of the courts to another, such as from the district courts to Superior Court, the chief justice will need the permission of the judge to be transferred as well as the approval of the chief justice of that particularr division.

Under the modified plan, the chief justice would share his powers over court personnel with a 12-member committee composed of representatives of each segment of the court system. However, appointments approved by that committee could then be vetoed by another committee composed of only members of the affected branch of the courty system. For example, a probate court committee would have the final say on personnel changes in the probate courts.

Lance states confidence; says he's in 'good shape'

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. [AP] — Bert Lance, President Carter's budget director, says he thinks he's in "good shape" at the White House, despite the controversy surrounding his personal finances, and has no fears of losing his job.

Lance, smiling and affable, spoke with a crowd of yelling, pushing reporters as he left after making a speech to the Southern Governors' Conference.

Another speaker at the conference, Robert Strauss, the President's special representative for trade negotiations, said Lance's financial problems would not have been front page news in times other than "the dull days of August."

Lance has been under fire in recent weeks for financial activities which occurred while Lance was president of the First National Bank of Calhoun, Ga., and the National Bank of Georgia in Atlanta.

Carter administration officials, particularly the President's news secretary, Jody Powell, have defended the director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Lance was asked by reporters in San Antonio about a published report Wednesday that he was considering leaving the administration.

"No, I'm not thinking of leaving," he said. "I'm just trying to do the job that needs to be done."

He said he saw no "wavering" in Carter's confidence.

"I don't see that at all... The strength of support from the White House has been very obvious. We're in good shape."

Voyager II on to Jupiter

PASADENA, Calif. [UPI] — The Voyager II space probe, settling in for its journey to Jupiter and beyond, will be given a series of "housekeeping" commands Friday aimed at keeping the craft on target for the largest planet in the solar system.

"We will tell Voyager all it needs to know for the next 30 days," said Jet Propulsion spokesman Don Bane. "We plan to tell the craft where to point its sun sensor to keep it on track — just general housekeeping chores."

Voyager II, some 6.06 million miles from earth and traveling at 22,343 miles an hour, also will be commanded to take photographs of earth. The photos, which will be stored aboard the craft for 30 days before relay back to earth, should give man one of his most distant views of his own planet.

Chemist claims breakthrough

CHICAGO [AP] — A leading chemist said Wednesday he has developed a relatively quick and easy way to determine which of the thousands of chemicals introduced in recent years may cause cancer.

The chemist, Dr. Bruce N. Ames of the University of California-Berkeley, pointed out that since the 1950's, this country has been exposed to a flood of chemicals that have not been tested to determine whether they cause cancer or alter genetic material.

A steep increase in human cancer may be the outcome if too many of the thousands of new chemicals to which humans have been exposed turn out to be powerful mutagens and carcinogens," Ames said.

Plan proposed for equal care

ATLANTA [UPI] — The American Hospital Association has proposed a national health insurance plan which would provide the same level of care to rich and poor Americans with the private sector paying half the cost.

The 6,500-hospital group adopted the plan at its national convention Tuesday.

The AHA proposed each person have a health card which would not identify the holder as low income or any other category. After the health services were received, cost-sharing would be settled between the patient and the insurer.

"What we are trying to do is get a single level of care for everyone," said AHA Vice President Paul Earle. "The law would call for everyone to have the minimum level of benefits."

Pair charged in murder case

MADISON, Wis. [UPI] — The estranged wife of a wealthy businessman and a man she allegedly hired were charged yesterday with plotting to kill the woman's husband with cobra venom so it would look like a heart attack.

Mrs. Charlotte Durfee, 46, was charged with conspiracy to commit murder and Loren C. Moore, 46, was charged with solicitation to commit murder.

Authorities charged that a murder-for-hire plot was hatched to do away with Miles C. Durfee, 73, a Janesville, Wis., businessman who owns roofing companies in both Janesville and Madison, before divorce proceedings involving the couple were completed. The divorce proceedings were to have begun Friday.

A complaint filed in Dane County Court said Moore contacted Vilas Park Zoo attendant Thornton Willoughby earlier this month and began asking questions about snake venoms that would be fatal but would look like heart attacks.

Civil Rights Act exemption fought

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A coalition of civil rights groups demanded yesterday that Congress abide by the same rules it forced upon corporations and federal agencies in the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

That law exempted Congress from rules that banned discrimination in hiring on the basis of race, sex or national origin.

Girls found to be raped in Bridgeport incident

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. [AP] — Two young girls whose bodies were found in a refrigerator had been raped, the city's medical examiner said yesterday.

Jaimeria Croom, 2, and Michele South, 5, both of Bridgeport, had been in the refrigerator for five to six hours before their partially clothed bodies were found at 10:45 p.m. Tuesday, Dr. George Molnar said.

"It is most unlikely that they locked themselves in the refrigerator," said Molnar, who examined the bodies Tuesday night.

"I estimate it would take a little less than an hour for the girls to suffocate after being locked in the refrigerator," he said.

The bodies had minor bruises, he said.

The bodies were found on the second-floor porch at the home of Michele's mother, officials said. The refrigerator had nine cubic feet of storage space.

Police earlier Wednesday had said the deaths were probably accidental, because the girls had been seen playing near the refrigerator Tuesday afternoon. Before that statement, police had said the deaths were definitely homicide.

Militant Cuban exiles pledge Castro ouster

MIAMI [UPI] — A militant Cuban exile group pledged yesterday to work "with greater zeal than ever" to topple Fidel Castro, despite the thawing of U.S.-Cuban relations.

"Our actions will be planned in secret," said Pedro Rojas, press officer for Brigade 2506, Bay of Pigs Veterans Association. "They'll include any kind of action appropriate to fight the Communist tyranny."

The FBI, under orders from Attorney General Griffin Bell, began investigating Miami-based terrorism in February. The investigation, however, has met with minimal success.

Julius L. Mattson, special agent in charge of the Miami FBI, said agents are "alert to the possibility" of increased terrorist activities by militant Cuban exiles when the United States opens a diplomatic mission in Havana Thursday — a move seen as the next-to-last step before full diplomatic recognition of the Castro government.

Mattson said the FBI has "no authority to do anything until after something happens. However, if we got some positive word that an action is planned, we wouldn't just sit back."

"It's something you can only react to, as in all crime," U.S. Customs spokesman Jim Dingfelder said.

"The spokespeople for these various different groups are always making statements...Our people have fairly decent, if not good, sources of information."

Less than three weeks ago, however, Customs agents seized three boats registered to brigade members and confiscated a large cache of weapons, including a 20mm cannon and a .50-caliber machinegun, and claimed they aborted an "imminent" raid on Cuba.

The next day, the brigade's military chief, Armando Lopez-Estrada, said the group had other weapons caches and nine more boats and that it would continue militant operations from outside the United States.

Rojas said he doesn't know what effect the brigade's anti-Castro activities will have on the improving U.S.-Cuban relations, but added: "We have a right and a duty to do what we feel necessary to liberate Cuba. No one can deny us that."

The Carter Administration's moves to improve relations with Cuba have triggered several terrorist acts.

In August, the State Department admitted it had supplied intelligence on terrorist groups to Cuban officials during diplomatic talks. Several days later, a group called CORU warned that Cubans working in the Carter Administration would be considered traitors and would face retaliation.

CORU, a coalition of four terrorist groups, claimed responsibility for bombing a Cubana Airlines jet off Barbados last fall, killing all 73 persons aboard.

Brigade 2506 endorsed CORU's terrorist acts and said the brigade "approves of all actions of any militant group which combats the tyranny of Communist Cuba."

The expiration of a travel ban to Cuba in March led to the bombing of an office of Mackey International Airlines, which had announced plans for regular flights to Cuba. Mackey promptly abandoned its plans.

A group calling itself the Luis Boitel Commandos claimed credit for the Mackey bombing. On Aug. 13, a man claiming to represent the Boitel Commandos called UPI and claimed responsibility for the attempted bombing of a Venezuelan Air Force jet at Miami International Airport. The bomb, thrown from an airport perimeter road, missed the jet by 75 feet and no one was injured.

Intent to steal Presley corpse denied by attorney

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — An attorney for two men charged with trespassing at the cemetery where Elvis Presley's body is entombed says his clients did not intend to steal the corpse for ransom.

"It was a screwball thing," attorney Jay Fred Friedman said, "but I can't discuss it at this time."

Friedman represents Bruce Eugene Nelson, 30, and Raymond Green, 25, who were chased by police on a stakeout at Presley's mausoleum.

Police Director E. Winslow Chapman said late Tuesday another man charged in the case, Ronnie Lee Adkins, 26, was the unpaid informant who tipped police to the alleged scheme to rob Presley's grave for ransom. But Chapman said he believes now that it all may have been a hoax.

"Personally, I doubt in retrospect that the body was going to be stolen," the police director said. "Professionally, I do not think we could ignore the information we were given. Our informant may have misinformed us."

Chapman said the plot spelled out by Adkins called for several persons to either rip or blast open the concrete crypt where Presley's copper casket was sealed in a marble mausoleum. Presley's body was to have been taken from the casket and held for ransom, the police director said.

Adkins also said a ransom note was sent to Graceland, the Presley mansion, but police have not found such a demand.

Chapman said four men were seen scaling a wall near the mausoleum shortly after midnight Sunday. The men allegedly crept past security guards and "meddled" with the heavy mausoleum doors before they were apparently frightened off by the headlights of a passing car.

Adkins, Green and Nelson were arrested when police stopped a getaway car near the cemetery. The fourth man, who eluded police, was arrested later at a hospital but was released without charges.

Because police were unable to find any burglary tools or weapons, Chapman said only misdemeanor charges of trespassing were filed. Nelson and Green face a preliminary hearing October 4 on the charges, but charges against the informant are being dropped.

Overcrowding annoying, unnecessary

For a number of new students arriving here in fall of 1975, things got off to a rather miserable start. Due to an unexpectedly large influx of students on campus, many were forced to live in triple dorm rooms for as long as a semester.

So as to avoid a recurrence of those unpleasant circumstances, the housing administration decided not to triple students in the event of future overcrowding, but rather to accommodate them elsewhere around campus. As has been proven by the first few days of this semester, that policy can create problems of its own.

This fall the number of number of arrivals once again exceeded expectations, and students are being housed in dorm lounges, sororities and frats, and even the Campus Center Hotel. The inconvenience to those affected is obvious, and might be all the more annoying if it were more widely known that campus overcrowding is largely unnecessary.

It seems only reasonable that if there is not enough housing on campus, students should be allowed to move off, particularly when many would prefer to live in a house or apartment. The administration, however, has made on-campus housing mandatory for most non-seniors in order to ensure that the dorms remain full and that no fee revenue is lost.

That concern would be justified were the off-campus housing situation not what it is — crowded. In fact, student government leaders feel there would be little risk involved in exempting juniors from the on-campus requirement, since vacancies off campus are scarce enough to prevent a "mass exodus" from the dorms.

Unfortunately, it's a little too late to change the situation this semester. Those who have been shoved into hotel rooms with two or three others will have to live with an experience that may well taint their memories of UMass for some time to come. For the sake of future new students, however, the administration should take steps toward allowing juniors the option of living off campus.

The drought and nuclear power

By NIEL MOELLER

While New England has sweltered under humid, rainy skies this summer, drought has slowly tightened it's grip on much of the western United States. Two years of subnormal precipitation in the West, due in part to an apparent shift in the course of the Jet Stream, have begun to severely affect life in the area.

Future development likely to draw large numbers of people to water-short areas such as southern California seems jeopardized. In some areas water rationing has been instituted and more seems likely elsewhere in the near future. Those who exceed their monthly allotment are penalized with increasingly stiff fines and, in extreme cases, at least partial cut-off of water to their homes.

One couple living in the San Francisco Bay area recently became among the first to suffer a water district's harshest penalty to date — installation of a "flow restrictor," which reduces pressure to a trickle. They had been consuming nearly three times their daily ration, using much of it to water their lawn. With the device in place, the water trickled in at barely two gallons a minute.

"It's enough to live on," said a water district official. "If they try to take a shower and wash dishes at the same time, it's not going to work."

Ironically, in another way, the drought in California may serve indirectly to increase the state's capacity for growth by diminishing hydro-electric capacity and increasing the importance of nuclear power as an alternative while still directly stifling any population increase.

That apparently would be the result of the plans of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. The PG&E has asked the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission for an interim operating license for the first unit of its controversial Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant near San Luis Obispo on the California coast.

In its application, the utility cited what it described as the critical need for additional electrical supplies because of drought-caused cutbacks in hydro-electric generation.

The two-unit atomic plant, occupying a site within three miles of an earthquake fault, has been held up pending the outcome of seismic safety studies.

"If drought conditions of the past two years continue," PG&E told the commission, "even with Diablo Canyon Unit I in operation, capacity margins next year would be less than six per cent of the peak load during the critical months of July and August. Without Unit I those margins would vanish."

Even with normal rainfall, PG&E said, the margin of electrical reserves next August would be less than nine per cent of a peak load, "well below the level required for reliable service."

Both Diablo units, with a capacity of 2.19 million kilowatts, would generate enough power to serve more than two million PG&E customers. The production would be the equivalent of the power generation at PG&E's 64 hydroelectric plants in a normal year.

If rain and snow-fall levels were to return to normal, no conditions have been made that, with the restoration of hydro-electric capacity, the generating capacity of Diablo and other plants would correspondingly be diminished or eliminated.

Thus a dangerous precedent could be set if the commission rules, in it's decision set for April, in favor of the PG&E request. The drought could become a powerful excuse for the utilities to greatly increase nuclear generating capacity and it's attendant perils up and down the Pacific coast and perhaps elsewhere in the West.

I'm counting on you...

To the Editor:

Open letter to the students:

I'm counting on you...

Sitting here nearly alone in the vastness of Southwest, my thoughts keep turning to the deluge of humanity soon to occupy the spaces around me. I'm wondering who you are and where you're at. Why did you decide to come here and what will happen when you do?

You see, I feel the best part of my education this year will be contingent on you. Let me explain: if I walk into a class requiring discussion among its members to be effective and everyone sits there like nerds, I will feel short-changed and frustrated. On the other hand, a lecture of important material can be wrecked by an over-zealous brownie point seeker.

Socially, I'm wondering how many bigots and turkeys will make it their business to interupt the good vibes possible at UMass. Racism and sexism are problems to be dealt with, not allowed to fester and spread.

So do us all a favor this year; listen, think, then speak. Remember, I'm counting on you...

Education by chance

*"I come from a dizzy land where the lottery is the basis of reality. Until today I have thought as little about it as I have about the conduct of indecipherable divinities or about my heart. To freshpersons it comes as some shock to discover that UMass is little more (or should I say little less) than a huge floating craps game, governed solely by the laws of chance.

The first realization of the university's true nature comes with the schedule of courses mailed to each student at the end of the summer. Whether students get into their selected courses is decided fully at random. Indeed, some students will be pleased to find their entire schedule left intact, while others will spend much of their semester in add-drop lines.

Also random are residential hall assignments. A student who wished to live in a Sylvan suite discovers herself in the basement of a Southwest tower. A shy newcomer finds that his roommate is female, while the friend he had hoped to live with has been placed in a triple across campus. More than a hundred students find their residence in a hotel, where they can enjoy the color TV and nearby bars.

Classes may or may not fit the descriptions found in the guides. Physics for Poets turns out to be Poetry for Physicists. "The purpose of this course is to examine poetic verse through the use of integral calculus, crisis theory, and quantum mechanics..."

The administration operates under the guiding principle of management by lot. Administrators appear and disappear without pattern, and are shuffled from position to position within the administrative superstructure. Some are very real people; others, like recently-resigned President Wood, are merely imaginary figures who are never seen on campus.

Student government functions under quite similar laws (that is, no laws at all). Sometimes the students' money is spent in a democratic and constructive fashion; other times it is squandered chaotically by the few. Some days student leaders are hard at work in the Student Union; other days they are in Texas or at the Cape or in student-sponsored demolition derbies.

Meals at the Dining Commons are prepared without recipe. The chicken might turn out to be pork; there might be tomato sauce in the Chinese food and sweet-and-sour on the spaghetti; the pie that looks like apple might be pumpkin or lemon meringue. There might be no food at all; only anonymous organic matter in crudely-fashioned shapes and textures.

Observing the campus from a high point shows just how chaotic the activities of students are. In fact, no more than three can ever be found walking in the same direction at the same time.

Life at UMass follows but one scheme — that of disorder. Work and learning mixed with play and party, at random...the freshperson who asks that difficult philosophical question, "Why am I here? learns soon enough that there is no answer, because UMass "is nothing else than an infinite game of chance."

Evaluation guide: Trials and triumphs

By MARILYN MANKOWSKY

With classes about to resume, the staff of the Course and Teacher Evaluation guide are scrambling madly to synthesize their summer's work and bring it to the printer. This is not to imply that the guide is some sort of fly by night attempt on the part of five students to evaluate faculty. I am just amazed that with all of the troubles finding a bid low enough to take there is finally a printer ready and willing to print.

The full-time staff who worked wholeheartedly on the guide this summer consisted of Editor Joseph Connolly, Karen Hakala and Laurie Wood. In between our other student senate job responsibilities Shari Brickel and myself found time to write several faculty evaluations, visit with faculty in the attempt to persuade them to release their evaluation forms, and to help with guide related tasks, such as Shari drawing the illustrations. As we both had other tasks to complete, however, much of the writing, planning, and organizing was done by the staff of three.

I would like to preface this somewhat critical perspective of the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide by commending everyone who has seen the project through to the end for their arduous attempt at publishing a fair and honest faculty evaluation guide. A lot of hard work has gone into this guide, as evidenced by the quality of many of the essays. If the guide lacks something, it is surely not because the staff made a lighthearted attempt at effectively evaluating the faculty. Such a controversial project is often the receptacle of much criticism, some of which is due. A staff of three to five people spent the summer collecting, reading, and formulating faculty valuations for approximately 500 out of the possible 1475 professors on campus.

The Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, which will be free of cost to students when it is distributed in mid October, was funded and initiated by the Student Government Association. As many SGA projects often remain, so did this one — a project that did not reach its full potential because of lack of interest, shortage of staff personnel, and the failure of those who planned the guide to stick with it and contribute their efforts. A project as important as a faculty evaluation guide needs to be well planned, supported by a majority of the students and utilize collective efforts of many for writing the faculty essays.

Many schools who have published faculty evaluation guides have representatives in each department who find interested students to write fculty evaluations. In some schools students formulate their own evaluation guidelines procedure which they cautiously implement from beginning to end. They calculate the student response into percentages as well as write essays from comments which students have made. A guide that utilizes the collective efforts of many students will truly be reflective of the student opinion. In future UMass faculty evaluation guides it is hoped that students will develop and implement their own evaluation forms.

The guide itself will consist of about 500 faculty evaluations, a list of recipients of outstanding teaching awards, whether a professor is tenured or not, and a complete list of faculty salaries, even for the professors who did not submit their evaluation forms.

As of yet, very few professors are aware that their salary is about to be disclosed, even though this information is open to the public. Those who are aware have reacted with raised eyebrows, questioning the intent, and anxiously anticipate the repercussions which they expect will ensue. One conscientious professor offered suggestions for next year's guide. He did feel that it was unnecessary to print faculty salaries, but if they were going to be printed, then all of the names of professors who refused to cooperate and would not release their evaluation forms to students should have their salaries printed, too.

This professor asked why we were not publishing professors' sexual preference along with their salary. He said that salaries are like sex lives. They are not usually discussed openly, but there exists a sense of knowing the range or inclination. He failed to see how the disclosure of a professor's salary related to the intent of the guide which is to help students choose their courses more effectively and accurately. He said he feels that it will only cause hard feelings among the faculty and could possibly even damage the image of the University.

Besides the printing of faculty salaries, the main criticism the guide is expected to face is it's lack of uniformity. This absence of a standardized process can be attributed to the University's failure to demand and enforce a uniform faculty evaluation procedure.

Presently it is left up to each department to develop and implement its own faculty evaluations. According to the head of one department, the University does not absolutely require professors to be evaluated by their students each semester. When I questioned him as to why he had not released his evaluations, he said that the semester had ended before he had found the time to prepare an evaluation form for his students.

Since there exists a variety of evaluation procedures, the task of standardizing the comparison of professors is quite difficult. Whereas some departments ask students to comment, criticize, praise, and make suggestions, other departments merely require students to check the most appropriate box and they compile computerized evaluations. These computer sheet evaluations provide little more than the mean class opinion, along with the standard deviation. It is nearly impossible to get a sense of how the members of the class felt about the instructor and his-her teaching habits and abilities, and how they compare to those of other professors.

For professors who refused to release their evaluations, the Collegian ran an evaluation form at the end of last semester, by which students could have evaluated their professors. The response rate was very low with less than five per cent of the student body responding. The responses that were collected contained very few comments, but they will still be printed, even though they may not represent the majority opinion.

Any interested SGA staff person was allowed the option of writing an individual essay on a professor which he-she has had a course with, but it will state at the top that the essay is from one person's perspective.

As I see it, the problems which lessen the impact of the guide are:

1. Failure of the University to demand and enforce standardized faculty evaluation procedure.
2. Unwillingness of many professors to release their forms to such a controversial project (being undertaken by students no less).
3. Lack of diversity of student contributors and staff workers.
4. Lack of continuity from the planning stages to the publication process.
5. Lack of student response to the Collegian evaluation form.
6. Unavailability of many professors this summer.
7. Lack of staff who could work year round, full time, and coordinate the efforts of many students accurately and effectively evaluate faculty.

Even though there has been much opposition to the guide and many problems which occurred from the bidding process through the printing process, the guide is a genuine, serious, intelligent, attempt at evaluating members of the faculty. There is room for improvement, but there is much to fall back upon with pride.

If the guide lacks something, it is surely not because the staff made a lighthearted attempt at effectively evaluating the faculty.

Wisconsin rape case causes uproar

"Madison, my home is Madison
"M-A-D-I-S-O-N
"Where the girls are the fairest,
"and the boys are the squarest
"of any old town I've been in."
.... Rotary Club song

MADISON, Wis. [UPI] — Three boys pushed a girl down a high school stairwell last fall and what followed has a judge and many people in this liberal, university community in bitter discard about the four letter word rape.

The West High School case touched off a controversy among feminists, liberals, conservatives, blacks, whites, clergy and press. What the boys did, what Judge Archie Simonson thinks they did and why, and what to do about it became the subject of much debate.

Did the boys rape the girl? Does the judge believe they were reacting normally in a sexually permissive society? And if he does, should Simonson be on the Dane County bench?

Petitions with more than 35,000 signatures were filed seeking his removal. With the election Wednesday, Sept. 7, Simonson could be the first state official ousted from office since the recall amendment was adopted in 1926.

"There is no just cause for my removal from office," Simonson told 270 Rotarians at a luncheon, one of several forums for him and his five opponents.

Like many others, the Rotarians were concerned about the notoriety of the capital city, otherwise known for forward-thinking people, their progressive influence and the University of Wisconsin.

Police reports say the three boys, one 14 and the other two 15, shoved the girl, 16, down the stairwell where she was sexually assaulted Nov. 8.

The reports say rape was not established because the case did not go to trial. When one boy agreed to testify free of charges, the other two pleaded no contest to second degree sexual assault.

Simonson sentenced one to a year in a Milwaukee boys home. He was preparing to sentence the other boy May 25 when the prosecuting attorney objected to a case worker's recommended sentence of one year of court supervision at home.

An argument ensued. Simonson talked of sexual permissiveness. He cited local massage parlors, taverns with nude go-go girls and provocative clothing he said women were wearing to tease men. The police report said the girl was wearing blue jeans and a turtle neck sweater over a blouse the day of the assault.

"Should we punish severely a 15 or 16-year-old who reacts to it normally," a reporter attending the hearing quoted Simonson as saying.

The court supervision at home sentence was issued and Simonson's remarks were reported nationwide. Angry feminists marched on the courthouse and demanded his resignation. He refused and the recall effort began for the necessary 21,000 signatures.

Simonson claimed the press distorted his remarks and sought release of the transcript.

Released last week by a fellow judge, the transcript generally substantiated earlier reports. Later in the week, the boy sentenced to court supervision at home was arrested on a burglary charge and released to the custody of his mother.

Besides the parlors and taverns, Simonson talked about women walking the streets — indeed, parading before his bench — with "nipples fully exposed" and "dresses up over the cheek of their butts." He went on to ask:

"Are we supposed to take an impressionable person 15 or 16 years of age who can respond to something like that and punish that person severely because they react to it normally?"

> "Should we punish severely a 15 or 16-year-old who reacts to it (provocative clothing) normally?"
> --Judge Simonson

Prosecutor Meryl Manhardt said she found his remarks on women's clothing were "particularly sexist."

Simonson: "You bet it is. I can't go around walking exposing my genitals like they can the mammary glands."

Ms. Manhardt: "You are reflecting the general theory that a woman provokes an assault. I can not accept that idea."

Simonson: "It sure raises a lot of interest in my mind from time to time."

After the transcript release, Simonson said he posed his question about severe punishment while seeking facts from Ms. Manhardt.

"I made the comment to emphasize why I needed some facts," he said. "Instead of giving me the facts, she made some comment like that sexist."

The 52-year-old jurist, father of one son and three daughters, said he doubted the transcript would sway those supporting his opponents. "But," he said, "I think the man on the street, the average voter, will be greatly influenced."

Feminists have drawn support from young liberals who saw rape as a violent act and conservatives who objected to the sentence. Editorials have blasted Simonson, and the City Council, county board and school board agreed he must go.

Simonson got support from elderly men and women, aghast at feminist demonstrations. Clergymen demanded to know why feminist were not as vociferous when the City Council legalized nude dancing.

Racism was interjected when a black social worker said the boys were black and the girl white and charged the judge and youths were victims of a community gone beserk over unsolved campus rapes allegedly involving a black man.

Simonson, a former University of Wisconsin fencing coach, campaigned, meantime, as a judge whose views were perhaps a little "old fashioned". He charged that those who attack him would deny him and other judges freedom of speech.

The judge said he was the subject of threats and verbal abuse, but found most frightening "a total unwillingness to have any understanding for what I do or say." He said the national press was largely responsible for his predicament.

With five candidates opposing the judge, some people seeking his recall fear he might win after all, and people elsewhere might view a Simonson victory — no matter the margin of victory — as acceptance of his views on rape.

Throughout the episode, however, some have not lost their sense of humor.

After leading fellow Rotarians in singing "The Star Spangled Banner," and "Madison", club president Robert Lee turned to introduce Simonson and his opponents at the recent forum.

"And now," Lee said, "on with the Downtown Rotarians' version of the 'Gong Show'."

Additional course listings

Political Anthropology — Anthropology 436, MWF 1:25-2:15, Machmer W-22, D. Slade.

The central concern of this course is dealing with "political man" — that person present everywhere and critically involved with the social process within and beyond the formal political arena of a given society. The course will examine the concept of power, political systems, the political process and culture contact.

Course requirements will be decided upon by the class in the course of the semester.

Economic Anthropology — Anthropology 526, MWF, 11:15-12:05, Machmer W-15 D. Slade.

Economics and anthropology have a great deal to gain from reciprocal use of concepts and methodologies, or the theoretical domains of these fields are mutually incompatible conceptually and operationally in the study of human behavior and society in cross-cultural perspective.

This dialectic centrally concerns the emergence and development of economic anthropology as a subfield within anthropology. This course will treat case material from tribal, peasant, and complex societies reflecting this ongoing dialectic.

Course requirements will be decided upon by the class within the first several weeks of the semester.

Full parking regulations in effect starting Sept. 19

Effective Sept. 5, all vehicles must be parked in their assigned lot. Summer parking regulations end on that date.

All 1976-77, 1977-78 lot decals will be honored through Sept. 18. Vehicles not displaying a University lot decal may use the peripheral lots until then. Full parking regulations go into effect Monday, Sept. 19.

Smith Ensemble Theatre musical production opens

The Smith Ensemble Theatre's production of "Under Milk Wood" by Dylan Thomas, opens today at 8 p.m. in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre at Smith College.

"Under Milk Wood" is a lyrical portrait of a day in the life of a Welsh fishing village. Dylan Thomas combines prose, verse and song in humorous and poignant scenes to portray the townsfolk. These 60 villagers will be played by a cast of eight actors and actresses.

Further information and ticket reservations can be obtained by calling the Smith College theatre box office.

'Bubbling Brown Sugar' at FAC

Broadway's newest, hottest hit, "Bubbling Brown Sugar," premiers the 1977-78 Concert Series at the Fine Arts Center, and tickets are now on sale at the FAC Box Office.

The hit musical will be presented by the national touring company twice on Sunday, Sept. 18. The matinee performance will be at 3 p.m., the evening performance at 8 p.m.

"Bubbling Brown Sugar" takes its audience on a musical flashback tour into Harlem during the Black Renaissance of the post-World War I era. It then traces Harlem show business from the speakeasies of the '20's through the wartime jitterbugging at the Savoy Ballroom and to '50's rhythm and blues at the Abollo. Though it has a few new songs, most of the material is drawn from the rich past — spirituals, gospel, blues, jazz and pop.

A whole new music was discovered by visitors to Harlem nightlife: the music of Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Fats Waller, Eubie Blake, Earl 'Fatha' Hines, J.C. Johnson and Billie Holiday.

"Bubbling Brown Sugar" won the 1977 Grammy Award for the Broadway cast album.

Tickets for "Bubbling Brown Sugar" are on sale at the FAC box office, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and at all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are: General public, $7.50, 6.50, 5.50; UMass students, $3.75, 3.25, 2.75, and other students and senior citizens, $6.50, 5.50, 4.50. For more information call 545-2511.

Sports in Brief

TOKYO [UPI] — Japanese baseball star Sadaharu Oh slammed his 755th career home run last night, tying the record held by Hank Aaron of the United States.

The solo homer — Oh's 39th this season — came in the bottom of the first inning in a game between the Yomirui Giants and Taiyo Whales at Korakuen Stadium in Tokyo before a crowd of more than 50,000.

The lefthanded first baseman received a thunderous ovation from the fans as he toured the bases with a broad smile on his face.

Japan, where baseball is the national pastime, has virtually been in "Oh Boom" as the popular slugger neared eclipsing Aaron's home run output.

Oh tied Aaron's record home run production in his 19th year of professional baseball.

He joined the Yomiuri Giants of the Central League in 1959 upon graduation from high school. After playing what he describes as three mediocre years, Oh hit 38 four baggers in 1962 to win the league's homerun title.

He held the title for the next 13 years before losing it to Koichi Tabuchi of the Hanshin Tigers of Osaka in 1975. He regained it in 1976.

Oh currently leads the home run derby in the Central League.

NEW YORK [UPI] — Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn has appointed a five-man committee to review the rules for election to baseball's Hall of Fame.

The Board of Directors of the Hall of Fame had requested Kuhn on Aug. 7 to review the entire structure of the rules relating to election, and asked for a report from the five-man committee by the end of September.

Currently, elections are held each year in the off-season and are conducted by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Charles (Chub) Feeney, president of the National League; Lee McPhail and Joe Cronin, president and chairman of the Board of the American League; Paul Kerr, former president of the Hall of Fame, and Joe Reichler, special assistant to he commissioner, make up the committee.

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — Quarterback Gary Marangi, who has been a backup to Joe Ferguson since being drafted by the Buffalo Bills in 1974, was traded today to the Green Bay Packers for an undisclosed future draft choice, the Bills announced yesterday.

Marangi, a third-round choice from Boston College, got a chance to start last season when Ferguson suffered a back injury after seven games. He passed for 998 yards and seven touchdowns, but was intercepted 16 times and never won a game last year.

The Bills also announced the acquisition of Lou Piccone, a wide receiver and kick return specialist from the New York Jets for an undisclosed future draft choice.

Piccone had signed with the Jets in 1974 as a free agent after two years of Minor-League football.

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — The Milwaukee Bucks yesterday completed the NBA "triple play of 1977" by signing UCLA forward Marques Johnson, the last of the team's three first round choices in the spring draft.

The Bucks in June had perhaps the best draft in NBA history as they made Indiana center Kent Benson their No. 1 choice, Johnson the No. 3 pick and Tennessee forward Ernie Grunfeld the No. 11 selection.

"This completes the triple play for the Milwaukee Bucks," said Jim Fitzgerald, Bucks president and board chairman, in announcing the signing of the 6-foot-6 forward who was the college player of the year last season.

Johnson finished his UCLA years as the team's fourth all-time scorer and rebounder with 1,659 points and 897 rebounds. Only Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Bill Walton rank above him in both categories.

He was the last of the Bucks' choices to sign — Benson signed the day of the draft and Grunfeld two weeks ago.

NEW YORK [UPI] — Milers Filbert Bayi of Tanzania and John Walker of New Zealand will finally meet on Sept. 17 in an international track and field meet in Empire Stadium, in Vancouver, B.C.

Bayi, 24, currently holds the world record for 1,500 meters at 3:32.2, and the 25-year-old Walker has run the fastest mile of all time with 3:49.4. Last week in Brussels, Walker ran a 3:32.7 1,500-meter race, while Bayi's mark in the 1,500 meters is considered the equivalent of a 3:49.2 mile.

Bayi and Walker last met in 1974 at the Commonwealth Games in New Zealand, where Bayi won the race in record-setting pace. They were unable to compete against each other in the Montreal Olympics due to the African boycott, and all subsequent attempts to bring the two together failed.

A breakthrough in the negotiations came last week after an announcement that African nations would compete in the World Cup track and field meet at Dusseldorf, West Germany this week.

ENTER INTO A MEANINGFUL RELATIONSHIP.

Slipping into a pair of Bass shoes is love at first step. Especially if they're from the Bass Country collection.

Because when it comes to style, Bass Country is class country. They look smashing with chinos. Or, if you're in the mood, roll up those cuffs and pull on your stripey socks, for Bass with a touch of sass. With jeans, you'll get the look of a boot, without having to pay the price of a boot, to boot.

And Bass won't break up with you. They're built to take all the biking, hiking and dancing you can cram into life, because we give each shoe a lot of sole: an all natural gum-rubber sole for the cushiest, bounciest, most comfortable walk ever. In fact Bass shoes are so durable, they'll probably outlast Fred, Mike, Bob, Jonathan .... Introduce your feet to Bass Country. They were made for each other.

Shoemakers to America for a hundred years. Bass

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Born today, you possess an orderly mind, a well-balanced emotional system, and nerves of steel. Very little upsets you – except for the occasional realization that you cannot achieve all you would like to achieve. At times, you set goals for yourself that are far beyond your grasp. Most of the time, however, you seem to have an accurate notion of your abilities.

You are a diplomatic individual. You know how to present yourself and your goals in such a way that others feel flattered by the confidence. You are not one to pat yourself on the back openly – but you know full well when your back deserves patting.

You have a tendency to think of yourself as indestructable, despite what you have learned to the contrary. There have been times in your life when progress seemed nonexistent and profit seemed almost nil. Yet you continue to be optimistic about your chances for overall progress and profit – and, indeed, in the end, your optimism should be justified!

To find what is in store for you tomoorw, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SUNDAY, Sept. 18

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Order your own house before you set about trying to tell others how to order theirs. Seek spiritual guidance from a professional.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Make it easy for others to ask a favor of you. Appear receptive – regardless of how you may actually feel.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take more than your usual precautions should you be traveling far from home today. This is a Sunday for renewing faith in yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Up your popularity rating by not giving in to threats of violence against your person or your work. Stand up for your rights.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Negative factors in your approach to a new social group must not be allowed to frighten you off. Seek new friends late in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Sympathy and determination: these will gain you your ends today. Don't be surprised to find pressures intensified today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Visit with elderly relatives today. You can put more than one star in your crown at this time through kindness and sympathetic action.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An artistic approach to an old chore will see both you and it the better for it. Take some judicious action late in the day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Curb any tendency toward superiority when you confront children regarding recent behavior. Understanding solves an otherwise insoluble problem.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you would undertake great things, you would do well to think along great lines. Difficulties present themselves early.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The immediate family serves to support your image of yourself. Take care not to be caught short when children ask for answers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Your attraction to and for members of the opposite sex can create problems for you today, both at home and away. Keep to the facts.

Stickers stick to basics

For coach Judith Davidson and her field hockey Minutewomen, 1977 will hopefully be a return to the form of 1975, when the team almost qualified for the national tournament. Last season, UMass was defeated early in the Northeast sectionals, and wound up going no place but home. But with each new season, hope springs eternal, as Sage once said, and the Minutewomen expect good things to come with several key players returning. The campaign opens Sept. 22 with a home game against arch-rival Springfield. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

McAleney cut by New Orleans

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Ed McAleney came to grips with this opposing quarterback while playing for UMass. But now he must come to grips with a far more serious problem — his pro football career — after being cut yesterday by the New Orleans Saints.

Former UMass football star Ed McAleney is heading north for a tryout with a Canadian Football League team after being cut by the National Football League New Orleans Saints.

McAleney, a second-year pro, was dropped by New Orleans as NFL clubs pared their rosters to 52 players — nine above opening day size.

McAleney is hoping to latch on with the Calgary Stampeders of the CFL.

McAleney played defensive end with the Tampa Bay Bucaneers last season. But he was switched to offensive guard during training camp by the Saints after having been acquired in an off-season deal.

McAleney, a 1976 UMass graduate, co-captained the '75 Minutemen. He was a three-time Yankee Conference first team selection, and was also named to the all-New England Squad twice.

A native of South Portland, Me., the 23-year-old also lettered on the UMass track team as a shot putter. He stands 6'3" and weighs 240 lbs.

catch any of his throws in RTC. It was suggested to Elliott that he failed to meditate with his disc and that that might be why he did not qualify for either semifinal. Elliott's Fastback is made of Moonlighter plastic and has a promotion for Eckankar printed on it.

Habeeb's disc in the MTA and TRC events was a white Fastback given out by the Hungry-U as a promotion and had that name and Coca-Cola printed on it. Most Fastbacks have some message printed on them because Wham-O does not sell them commercially, instead selling them as a premium to companies which give them away.

Elliott threw well in the Distance competition, though, and qualified for the semis with a throw of 282 feet 6 inches. Habeeb fell short of the semis, throwing only 252 feet 6 inches. Elliott then threw a 273 foot long toss, but the shortest throw qualifying fot the finals was over 325 feet.

In Frisbee Golf Elliott again made the semis with a 62 on the La Mirada course which played very long and tough because of strong winds. Habeeb scored a 66 and failed to qualify for the semis. Par for the La Mirada course is 57.

In the second round Elliott played the Oak Grove course in 53 strokes, or one under par, and his combined 115 tied for twenty-ninth place out of over 100 male competitors.

In accuracy Elliott threw only seven out of 28 throws through the accuracy hoop but Habeeb hit on 13 throws, thus advancing to another semifinal. Habeeb then slipped to a seven placing last among the 20 semifinal. Habeeb then slipped to a seven placing last among the 20 semifinalists, as the wind picked up on the Rose Bowl fields adjacent to the Rose Bowl.

Elliott and Habeeb freestyled together but finished third out of six pairs in their group and failed to advance to the semis. While poor judging may have kept them from legitimately making the semis they most likely would not have advanced past that round in any case.

When the points scored by each competition in each event were totalled up Habeeb had placed in the top thirty among men, tying for 14th place.

While Elloitt may not have performed as well as his Freestyle partner, his immense technical expertise and understanding of Frisbee theory made his advice invaluable to Habeeb and other competitors.

In other competition, John Kirkland, a former MIT student and now a California resident whose only profession is Frisbee, won the men's overall title and Monika Lou, of Boulder, Col. retained her women's overall title. Lou had tied in points with California Cyndi Birch but won the title on the basis of more first place finishes in separate events.

Jackie Entwistle, recently of Gay Head on Cape Cod finished eighth among women and won the women's RTC title. Henry "Spike" Berry of Cape Elizabeth, Maine also did well, making numerous semifinals and placing 29th among men.

World records were set in men's and women's Indoor Distance, men's TRC, men's Accuracy and senior's MTA.

It signals success...

... but for the 1976 UMass football team, it didn't happen often enough as the Minutemen recorded a 5-5 mark. Will this season be any different? Well, coach Dick MacPherson and his staff is greeting 26 returning lettermen, plus a host of promoted JV's and promising freshmen, back to campus this week in hopes of improving last year's record. But it won't be easy, since such tough opponents as Army, Boston College, and New Hampshire loom in the distance. Co-captains Peter McCarty and John Gladchuk will lead the '77 UMass gridders into regular season action a week from Saturday against the Cadets at West Point. The first home game will be Sept. 17, when the Minutemen host Maine at Alumni Stadium.

Habeeb captures frisbee laurels

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

When Dan Habeeb left UMass at the end of last semester to return home to Reading, he could be described as a Frisbee player of considerable repute and a co-instructor of UMass' first Frisbee class. But, when he returned to his room in Lewis House yesterday, two words — World Champion — more directly indicated his status in the Frisbee world.

Habeeb won the world championship in Maximum Time Aloft last week at the World Frisbee Championships in Pasadena, Cal. before 42,000 fans. For his feat, Habeeb will receive almost $2,000 in endorsement money from Wham-O, the company that makes Frisbees, and $250 worth of free Wham-O products.

Competing in the championship was the ultimate goal and end product of a full summer of Frisbee practice for Habeeb and Daryl Elliott, another Lewis-Reading resident and Frisbee class co-instructor.

Elliott and Habeeb had forsaken steady employment for the summer and instead competed in the national tournament series conducted by the International Frisbee Association (IFA) and gave Frisbee demonstrations at gatherings throughout the Northeast.

They had been invited to compete in the championships, all expenses paid, by the IFA because of their performances in the tournaments during the summer. Tournaments were held abroad and in the U.S. and Canada from Seattle to New York and Alabama to Toronto. Over 125 men and women competed in the championships and represented the U.S., Canada, United Kingdom, Japan and Sweden.

Habeeb and Elliott, with other competitors from the East, were flown out to Pasadena on Wednesday, August 24.

Looking forward to the trip, Habeeb said, "I've never been on a plane before, I've never been to California, and I'm gonna play Frisbee", on Tuesday night.

The next day, though feeling comfortable in the presence of Frisbee players he had met during summer competion, he confided that his only goal for the championships was to do well and not embarass himself.

After qualifying for the MTA semifinals by one-tenth of a second, his 10.8 was the third highest time in that round and guaranteed him a spot in the finals. In the final round of competition, as the wind dropped and the MTA finalists cursed their luck, Habeeb threw MTA's of 11.4 and 11.1, easily beating Tom Monroe of Huntsville, Ala. who placed second with an 11.0.

In MTA, a competitor throws a Frisbee into the wind slightly to one side of the wind's direction and then catches the disc with one hand as the wind returns it toward the thrower. The objective of the thrower is to keep the Frisbee in the air as long as possible between the throw and the catch.

Monroe had received a bye on the first round because of previous high scores in tournament series MTA events, and gave Habeeb a bit of a fright when he threw his 11.0, because it is hard to judge the difference between an 11.0 and an 11.4 without a stop watch. When the timers reported the throw as an 11.0, Habeeb was able to breathe a little easier, and no other finalist came close.

Habeeb also made the semifinals in Throw, Run and Catch, an event very similar to MTA where the thrower's objective is to attain the most distance covered between the throw and the catch rather than the time between them, throwing a fine 198 feet. However in the semis he slipped to a best throw of 159 feet 6 inches, as he could not catch some of his longer throws.

Elliottt threw a 9.6 MTA in the opening round, failing to qualify for the semis, and using the same Fastback Frisbee failed to

Too few runs in these hose

Fans of schizophrenia must really appreciate the 1977 Boston Red Sox.

Why? Simple?

— What other team can constantly buoy its fans hopes up by winning 11 straight, and then make a 180 degree turn and lose seven straight in a row?

— What other outfit will hit eight home runs in a game and later be shut out twice straight?

— What other crew sees one man hit three homers in a game against an admittedly second-rate opponent, but subsequently lose as its ace (and the word is used loosely here) relief pitcher gives up a homer?

Which one indeed?

But why ponder the imponderable. Let's just admit that the Boston Red Sox will not win the American League East crown, or any other pennant this year.

All right, before you start beating on my head with your 'Go, Sox!' cap, at least let me state my defense.

Okay, the obvious first. The pitching resembles the quality of that normally associated with the twi-lite softball league of greater Omaha, Neb.

A season-opening starting rotation of Luis Tiant, Reggie Cleveland, Rick Wise, and Ferguson Jenkins has been torn from end-to-end several million times during the course of the season.

Hardly ego-boosting for the lo-arm staff, as if it didn't have enough problems.

And the relieving. Bill Campbell has been compared to Ryne Duren, Hoyt Wilhelm, Mike Marshall, and Al Hrabosky. But Bill Campbell has also been compared to Fred Wenz, Joe Grzenda, Fred Talbot, and Chuck Hartenstein.

Of course, the ankle injury to Jim Willoughby and his subsequent non-use has also hurt the bullpen, but face it. The Red Sox pitching, which had looked so celestial against the Oakland A's, California Angels, and Seattle Mariners (and that should tell you something right there), quickly reverted back to back Boston form. That is to say, none at all.

All right, enough said about the pitchers. But of what of the awesome, as they put it after months back in Sports Illustrated, 'Crunch Bunch?'

Sure, they hit homers. But what of the fine arts of base stealing, advancing runners, and bunting?

On the Red Sox, folks, it's been almost non-existent.

It's a crime that Rick Miller is forced to ride the bench while Jim Rice plays right. Now, of course Rice is power-pack supreme, but he lacks several important ingredients a team needs to have in order to win.

Obviously, hitting the long ball is Rice's role. And I'm not disputing it. But the Sox need at least three Rick Burleson-Denny Doyle-Miller types in the lineup to be a success. People who can do the sometimes overlooked things that make a team win.

A suggestion, Don Zimmer. Platoon Tommy Helms and Doyle at second, make Rice the designated hitter again, and put Miller in right. Or even bench the busy baby of '77, Fred Lynn, and insert Miller in center, thereby allowing Rice to stay in right, Doyle at second, and Helms as the DH.

And while we're speaking of the manager, let's take him down a notch or two. Zimmer may be cooperative with the press and be amicable with most of his players, but he does not know how to:

1.) Handle relief pitchers.
2.) Give players rest.
3.) Communicate with Bill Lee.

The first two Zimmer deficiencies have been discussed ad infinitum, but what of the third?

Well, Lee was pitching simply dynamite against the Twins a week back, but Zimmer elected to take him out and thusly lose the game. Lee needs constant work to be effective, not spot duty. And, perhaps most importantly, the man needs someone who can and will tolerate him, instead of belittling his ideas and opinions.

Bill Lee could, very simply, be a very important man in the stretch drive, if Zimmer gives him the opportunity.

In essence — the pitching stinks, the power is nice but sometimes unnecessary (shows of strength at times are), and the manager has some problems.

And that is why the Boston Red Sox will not win the American League East, at least not in 1977.

Ah, why even bother. The Dodgers are going to take it all anyway.

SGA head criticizes reorg plan

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-President Jon A. Hite last night criticized the governor's proposed reorganization plan for the state's public colleges and universities, saying the plan has "some very basic flaws."

The plan, recently released by Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks, has already become a center of controversy.

The proposal involves organizing the different institutions into five regional systems under one state government-assigned board. Each system would contain one university and several colleges and community colleges. In addition, each university would specialize in a certain type of education, such as liberal arts, at the UMass-Amherst campus.

"The first problem," said Hite, "is that it is a 'good government' type issue. The legislature one day passes a bill to set up a special Blue Ribbon Study Commission to reorganize higher education in the Commonwealth.

"The next day, the secretary of education and the governor put out a special study plan on how they think higher education should again be reorganized. And that clearly boxes the governor's appointees in," said Hite. "They represent the governor and therefore might feel obligated to 'support his plan.' "

In a recent press release, Parks defended the nature and content of the proposal. He said structural reform is at the center of suggested changes. By linking several campuses within five major geographic regions under a regional governing board, Parks said that a maximization of creative interaction and the resource sharing would be possible. In addition, he said, each campus could then develop its own distinctive identity and purpose.

Hite, however, said he feels that the basic problem with the plan is Park's proposal to break down the institutions into five regional systems. According to Hite, this simply creates another layer of political bureaucracy between the educational function of colleges and politics. "The quality of education is bound to be diluted by politics," Hite said.

Hite also pointed out the lack of student participation considered in the formation of this reorganization plan. No contact with him or co-President Pinky Batiste was attempted, Hite said.

Hite said he and Batiste intend "to keep an eye on the progress of the reorganization commission and at present to try to insure student representation on the commission."

Juniors may now apply for off-campus housing

By ALAN SHEPARD
Collegian Staff

The University Housing Office is accepting applications from juniors wishing to move off compus in an effort to alleviate the present overcrowded housing conditions on the campus, a UMass administrator said yesterday.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said the application forms must be picked up in front of the Housing Office at 235 Whitmore today or tomorrow, and returned by noon Wednesday. Housing fees will be fully refunded to approved applicants, he said.

Meanwhile, the estimated 400 students living in temporary housing around campus will have to wait at least until after the Labor Day weekend for permanent residence assignments, according to Robert Campbell, acting director of Resident Resouce Management. Students who have not appeared in their dorms by noon Tuesday will loose them, Campbell said last night.

The Housing Office has run into problems in trying to determine the number and location of the "no show" students, said Jerry Quarles, assistant housing coordinator. This is due to some innaccurate recording by several heads of residence, he said last night.

"It is going to be a very slow process," said Jon Hite, Student Government Association co-president. "Some counselors are doubling up and they are trying to weed out the non-students and those who haven't paid their bills but are in rooms."

Woodbury explained that the indicaters used to predict the number of students coming on campus were inaccurate.

In addition, Quarles cited a communication breakdown between admissions and the Housing Office as part of the problem on handling the 5,800 incoming freshmen and transfer students.

It wasn't until late July that the housing office had any indication that there would be a housing shortage, Quarles said. They then contacted the students who applied but were rejected for campus residency exemptions, telling them they would be allowed to move off campus.

But because the off-campus situation is tight, 350 of the 500 students who were granted examptions last year, found themselves back in the dorms this semester because they could not locate housing off campus, according to Woodbury.

The Housing Office is trying to avoid, at all costs, the situation that occured in 1975 when three people were assigned to a double room, said Quarles.

Beyond this Quarles said, the whole situation will be closely studied and he will make a concerted effort to improve communication between the Admissions, Registrar's, Bursar's and Housing offices along with special programs and the Community Development Center.

SGA co-President Pinky Batiste, said she sympathizes with those students involved.

"We know it never should have happened," she said. Admissions accepted too many people," she said. "But when it's all over, we're going to have a post mortum on where and why the problem started. It won't just be forgotten in a few weeks."

Meanwhile, efforts are being made to make those who are inconvenienced as comfortable as possible. An information table was placed in the lobby of the Campus Center Hotel and two counselors were assigned a room in the hotel to provide information to the displaced students staying there.

Two students living in the hotel last night said they have no complaints. The color television, air conditioning, chambermaid delivery, clean towels and vacuming is not hard to take, they said.

But for John Hutchinson, who is a transfer student, things have not been as easy. Wednesday night he stayed at the home of O.C. Bobby Daniels, assistant dean of students, and last night waited outside the Housing Office to be told his next temporary residence.

"These first few days," Hutchinson said, "is a thing I'll never forget."

Students initiate Kent State petition

By MOIRA CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

The Revolutionary Student Brigade (RSB) set up a petition yesterday in the campus center to gather support for a Labor Day rally at Kent State.

The petition, which is being used by all groups alligned with the Mayflower Coalition, includes four demands in memory of the students slain at Kent State in 1970.

UMass student, Sandra Caribanaris, who just returned from Kent State, last night in a telephone interview listed the demands as follows:

First, that proposed plans for a gymnasium on the site where the four were slain be cancelled or revised.

Second, that four campus buildings be renamed in remembrance of the dead.

Third, that charges be dropped against those people arrested during the riots at Kent State.

Fourth, that a memorial be built to commemorate the dead.

The Kent State massacre recently became an issue to Kent State students and others across the nation when Kent State University administration announced plans to build a gymnasium on the site where the four students were slain. These plans, begun in the spring, were immediately followed on May 5th by a two thousand student demonstration on the site.

More recently, the U.S. Court of Appeals stayed construction of the gym for ten days in order to give the Mayflower Coalition time to appeal to the Supreme Court. However, construction is expected to begin on September 6th and the coalition, aided by the RSB at UMass, is doing all it can to prevent it, said Charles Bagli, an RSB member.

Bagli, last night said that interest in the petition is good and that he was "kind of surprised... that people remembered so well."

Bagli could not estimate the total number of signatures collected yesterday but he did say that there is a group of UMass students going to Kent State this weekend for the rally.

Rides are being supplied by RSB chapters in Boston on Friday night.

Bagli said anyone interested in going should contact the RSB which is located in the Student Union. Meanwhile, he said, the petition will be available in the Campus Center concourse again today.

Boston downtown celebrates renovation

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

One week ago today — while most of you were dreading the beginning of school — merchants and workers at Boston's Faneuil Hall Marketplace were anticipating the Grand Reopening of the South Market Annex.

Although the celebration was to begin at noon, shopkeepers were still busy completing work on their stores up until the last moments. Rugs were still being laid that morning.

The marketplace area comprises three long buildings. The third, which should be completed at this time next year, is the North Market Street Building. That building houses one of Boston's oldest restaurants, Durgin Park.

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White gave a reception last Friday for the hall's merchants who have been there for more than one year.

White presented the tenants with a plaque thanking them for their cooperation during the renovation process. The plaque will be mounted at the entrace of the marketplace.

There was also a 14-foot vanilla cake replica of the entire marketplace. In lieu of devouring it, the mayor, at the suggestion of one woman, decided to donate it to the Children's Hospital.

Although the marketplace is beautiful, the heat in the building is often intolerable. Because the building is open-air, planners say it would have cost about $30 per square foot to air condition. The enclosed annex will be air conditioned.

Because of the more than 55 shops in the annex and 110 shops in the marketplace, there have been more than 30 million visitors to the area, the Boston Globe reported. The variety of merchandise and goods that are available boggle the mind and pocketbook.

The area has turned into a mini fun house. There are pantomimists and clowns performing daily and square dances held for amateurs. There was even a wedding in the Rotunda, the center of the market.

The important function of the marketplace is to attract people back into the city and out of the suburbs. From these have come the architects' creations, the mall and the shopping plaza.

The opening of the new South Marketplace in Boston's Faneuil Hall area was the cause of a huge celebration last week. (UPI)

The revitalization in Boston may very well be contagious. The Rouse Co., which rebuilt the marketplace, is working on similar ventures throughout the country.

The marketplace is not Boston's only area being renovated. The Boston waterfront, the North End and Haymarket Square are all being vastly upgraded, creating a new image for the entire Boston downtown area.

The completion next year of the North Market Annex will finally round out the new part of Boston. Maybe this will bring people back to the city.

Rusty Nail mellows to sounds of Arlo Guthrie

By PAUL LOGUE JR.
Collegian Staff

Arlo Guthrie, the young folk music legend from Western Massachusetts, played before capacity crowds Wednesday and Thursday nights at the Rusty Nail, a night club on Rte. 47 in Sunderland.

The crowd was mellowed by soft ballards, comedy riffs and some lowdown rock played by Guthrie and his backup band of the last two years, Shenandoah.

After the first set, dominated by the "Story of Moses," the band set down a string of old-time tunes such as "Anytime," "Stealing," "Ramblin' Round," and "Hobo's Lullabye."

Then came the old favorite, "Comin' into Los Angeles," and the band picked up the tempo with Guthrie plunking the piano. From here, the band swung into a rendition of "Amazing Grace" and "Connection".

After the show, Guthrie sucked down a Schlitz and talked to a few reporters in the dressing room.

"I'm going on vacation after Thursday's show and I ain't going to do nothing, not pick a letter, answer the phone...just going to lay around for a month. Then it's off to the West Coast Folk Festival."

When asked about the humor he interjects during the show, he replied, "Music is to make people happy and humor goes along with the music just fine."

Shenandoah is a band with fantastically sweet harmony. Led in the vocals by Carol Schriever, Terry a la Berry on drums, Steve Ide on rythym guitar, David Grover on lead and Dan Velika on bass, Shenandoah blends country rock with folk and blues. They can be seen with Pousette Dart Band this weekend at the Rusty Nail.

United States, Cuba swap similar interests

HAVANA, Cuba COMPILED FROM WIRES — The United States had a man in Havana for the first time in nearly 17 years yesterday.

With toasts of welcome with Cuban rum and American beer, the United States opened an "interest section" in Havana working under a Swiss flag in the old embassy building, surrounded by dust, rusty pipes and a "time capsule" of memorabilia.

Diplomats ranging from the Chinese to the Africans to the Swiss hosts stood in line, 500 to 600 guests crammed elbow to elbow, in sweltering heat, perspiration running down their faces, to shake hands with the Americans and say, "Welcome to Cuba."

The ceremony was timed to coincide with a similar event at the Czechoslovakian embassy in Washington, where the Cuban interest office will operate for several days until Havana's old embassy is refurbished.

Although both sides made clear many obstacles still bar the restoration of fullscale diplomatic ties, each nation sent 10 officials to operate in the other's capital.

Undersecretary of State Philip Habib, the ranking U.S. official at Cuba's Washington party, set the cautious tone for diplomatic toasts to the occasion, calling it a "first step" toward better relations.

"It is not a big one but it is a significant one just the same," Habib said. "This is not the end, but the beginning. The dialogue won't always be an easy one."

The head of Cuba's new Washington operation, Ramon Sanchez-Parodi, drew business-like attention to Havan's demand that the United States end its anti-Cuban "economic and trade blockade" as a condition for resuming normal relations.

At the same time, he said, "the Cuban government wishes to express its readiness to analyze...those matters that the U.S. government considers as issues of the existing conflict between our two countries."

In keeping with the relatively low-level status of the new interest sections, Cuba was represented in Havana by only one official of cabinet rank — Foreign Trade Minister Marcello Font.

Chief interest there was the setting: The run-down U.S. embassy building, reopened for the first time in nearly 17 years Thursday by U.S. officials who described it as "a time capsule" of Cold War remebrances.

They found a dust-covered official portrait of then-President Dwight Eisenhower atop a stack of lumber in the basement; a Coke machine that operates on nickels; a film cannister of the 1961 Rose Bowl game; the head of a metal U.S. eagle rescued from an angry Havana mob in 1960.

Collegian facelift

Students returning to UMass may notice a few changes in the Collegian this semester.

The paper has switched from five to four columns to increase readability and graphic appeal.

The paper has also undergone some major personnel changes. Photo Editor Jay Saret, Black Affairs Editor Nasser Ega, and Fine Arts Editor Mark Lecesse have resigned their posts. Replacements for these positions are now being saught.

SGA teaches, then raps NSA

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

"They learned more from us than we learned from them," said UMass Student Senator Speaker Brian DeLima yesterday when he described the 12-day conference on student government he attended with 14 other student government officials in Houston in August.

DeLima said he and the others, including Board of Governors (BOG) chairperson Michael Pill, BOG treasurer Henry Doyle and student senator Susan Saxe, were invited by the conference's sponsor, the National Student Association (NSA) to conduct 25 of the scheduled 50 conference workshops on student government and services.

Brian DeLima, Speaker of the Student Senate.

The UMass delegation, which received $1,050 as reimbursement from NSA for its services, ended up "doing a few more workshops than expected," according to DeLima. In addition, because the NSA's own equipment broke, all printing at the conference was done on UMass Student Government Association (SGA) printing presses.

"The NSA has poor resources, poor lobbyists, and colleges that join them aren't really getting anything. We made this clear," said DeLima.

DeLima said UMass withdrew from the national organization in 1974.

In addition to representatives from many American colleges, the national conference attracted some international conferees, including one official from the NSA's counterpart in the Soviet Union, said DeLima.

He said a representative from Ireland, apparently impressed by the strong UMass presence at the conference, told him UMass "was more of a national organization than the NSA."

DeLima said other foreign students attending the convention included students from Rumania and Guam, who were interested in starting a student credit union.

The daily conferences, which began at 8 a.m. and continued through the evening, when speakers were presented, provided a way to discuss common problems and new ideas and share resources, according to DeLima.

Speakers included Georgia legislator Julian Bond, ecologist Barry Commoner, and U.S. United Nations ambassador for human rights Alan Lowenstein.

DeLima said the UMass delegation's purpose in conducting workshops was to present ideas gleaned from experience "so they wouldn't have to re-invent the wheel. We've re-invented it twenty times."

In return, he said the UMass delegation learned the "necessity to get our lobbying together on things like marijuana decriminalization, tax reform, and University financing."

The financial return may prove even more rewarding. According to DeLima, the newly-elected president and vice-president of NSA will travel to UMass next week to discuss using information on student programs stored in UMass for an estimated annual fee of $10,000. DeLima said that the figure is tentative, however.

Additionally, DeLima said, the State Association of State Universities of New York wants the UMass SGA to run workshops on unionization at a conference the New York association has scheduled later this month.

"Our main purpose is to provide services here, but if we can make them available elsewhere, more power to them," said DeLima.

SGA secretary injured on trip

A Student Government Association (SGA) secretary remains in guarded condition in an Arkansas hospital following a car accident on the return trip from a student government national convention.

SGA speaker Brian DeLima, the lone passenger in the vehicle last night said that Sheri Linden suffered a broken back when the car hit a median divider.

DeLima said Linden lost control of the Student Senate Auto Pool car when her hair fell into her eyes. He expects her to remain in the hospital until Saturday, if not longer.

DeLima received a broken collar bone in the collision and returned to UMass after five days in the hospital. He said he still takes medication.

Two other vans were on the trip with DeLima and Sheridan but DeLima said the other drivers did not see the accident because the vehicles all left at different times.

DeLima said the totaled car will be replaced by another car in the Student Senate Auto Pool.

New policy for football admission

Only ID card necessary to attend contests

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Students need only present a valid UMass ID at home football games this season to be admitted to the stadium. This is a change in a ten-year-old policy of having students exchange coupons for tickets at the office during the week preceeding the game.

"We're doing it for several reasons, but the most important is convenience," said Victor H. Fusia, director of Sports Development.

"The traffic here in the ticket office was a real problem at times and this will certainly help those who decide to go to the game at the last minute.

"We think this will help us get a greater student turnout at the games. Attendance has been slipping the last few years," he said. The Minutemen have not had a capacity crowd at home since 1972.

The new system will also cut the operating costs of the stadium, according to Al Rufe, business manager of Athletics.

"I think between the printing of the coupons and the printing of tickets, the saving is about $3,000 plus the saving of labor," Rufe said.

Robert W. O'Connell, associate director of Athletics, yesterday said the savings from the change in ticket policy is just one in a series of moves by the business director and other executives to help keep down the operating costs so the teams themselves can have as much money as possible.

"We don't want to cut back the programs so we cut back in other areas," O'Connell said. "And this way everybody on game day has the same opportunity to get the best seats. It couldn't be more convenient than for a student to walk to the stadium, show on ID, and get in."

Fusia said the change will also solve some other problems for the ticket office such as when a large group of students wants to sit together at a game.

Student seating will remain where it has always been in section seven through 10 and 17 through 20. Sections five and six have been reserved for season ticket holders. The general public will sit in sections three and four on the home side. Fans subscribing to the new family plan will sit in section two. Section one will have unreserved seating.

As in the past, the stadium gates will open at noon for the 1 p.m. games.

"Take a fraternity," said Fusia, "they all want to sit together. Before, the whole bunch of them had to come down here at once or they had to send one kid down with a hundred ID's. Now they just have to go down to the stadium together."

The new policy also appears to put an end to the old scam of collecting unused coupons before the game and scalping the tickets out front for extra cash.

Uniforms of the day set tone for both sides in Washington

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Cubans who came to Washington as their country's first official representatives in nearly 17 years were dressed in neat business suits — not a beard or a set of combat fatigues to be seen.

The uniform of the day — dark blue suits for the men, and flowered frocks for their wives — was symbolic of the business-like attitude of both sides toward the establishment of "interests sections," which are embassies in everything but name.

To make the changes to embassies, with full diplomatic relations and the Cuban and American flags flying in each other's capitals, will require the fulfillment of several conditions.

For the American side, the Cubans will have to show progress in human rights especially toward the eight remaining American political prisoners in Cuban jails; make a gesture toward removing some of their troops from Angola, and settle some outstanding American financial claims.

Assistant Secretary of State Terence Todman says American claims for expropriated property in Cuba amount to $1.8 billion. He says he knows of no similar Cuban claims on the United States.

Another official said the United States will settle for progress on human rights and the financial claims. He said it is unrealistic to expect the Cubans to publicly renounce their African policy, simply as a gesture toward Washington.

- The Cubans, for their part, are demanding an end to the U.S. economic and trade blockade.

The Cubans will have the support of much of the American business community, which has been casting envious glances at a reentry into the Cuban market. Given Cuba's perilous economic condition, the future is uncertain for any businessman, but Cuba is lacking certain basic items — such as agricultural machinery and automobiles and trucks — the United States could supply.

U.S. officials are puzzled about the timing of the partial resumption of relations. In 1974 and 1975 there was a series of secret contacts between Cubans and State Department officials.

One of those officials, William D. Rogers, then assistant secretary of state, said the Ford administration offered to set up "interests sections" to begin a dialogue.

The Cubans never responded and the contacts were broken off, possibly because of a power struggle between Cuban dogmatists who wanted no relations with the arch-capitalist United States and pragmatists who wanted an economic and technical boost for the island.

Rogers feels Fidel Castro was then unwilling or unable to settle the dispute, and the idea lay dormant until the Carter administration came to office in 1977 and began making friendly overtures toward about Cuba.

Young, Smith open talks

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young met Prime Minister Ian Smith for the first time yesterday, but failed to agree on an Anglo-American peace plan for Rhodesia after more than three hours of talks.

"We didn't agree, of course," Young told reporters after the talks.

But the U.S. diplomat said he enjoyed meeting Smith. "I must say I've been hearing about Ian Smith for years, and I was personally pleased with our meeting," he said. "We had, I think, a very good discussion for several hours."

Smith won a landslide victory Wednesday in national elections.

Young, on his first trip to Rhodesia, was accompanied by British Foreign Secretary David Owen.

Both Young and Owen met privately with moderate black nationalist leaders Bishop Abel Muzorewa and Ndabaningi Sithole but made no statements afterward.

The two moderates, who are directly opposed by the more militant Patriotic Front, have expressed support for the Anglo-American efforts.

Atheist O'Hair threatens suit

AUSTIN, Tex. [UPI] — Atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair said yesterday she would file suit in federal court to force removal of the phrase "In God We Trust" from United States coins and paper money.

Mrs. O'Hair, whose suit in Boston resulted in a ban against compulsory prayers in public schools, said she and her two sons will file the suit against Secretary of the Treasurer Michael Blumenthal and James A. Conlon, director of engraving and printing.

The suit contends the inscription on U.S. currency compels her and her sons to subscribe and affirm a belief which is "antithetical to plaintiffs' most deeply held convictions, and represents an abridgement of their rights under the free exercise clause and establishment clause of the First Amendment."

Asked if she thought she could win the suit, Mrs. O'Hair replied, "There's no sweat."

Psychiatrists condemn USSR

HONOLULU [UPI] — By a two-vote margin, the world's most prestigious psychiatric body has condemned the Soviet Union for jailing political dissenters in mental hospitals and insane asylums.

The sixth World Congress of Psychiatry Wednesday night condemned "the systematic abuse of psychiatry for political purposes" in the Soviet Union "and all countries in which they occur."

"At last the World Psychiatric Association has gotten off the fence and acted in a morally responsible fashion," said Dr. Sidney Bloch of Great Britain, a leader in the movement to censure the Soviets.

The 90-88 secret ballot vote followed 45 minutes of embittered debate during which chief Soviet delegate Eduard Babayan said only doctors who had actually examined patients could judge whether or not they had been improperly put in mental hospitals.

Report states Berkowitz nil

NEW YORK [UPI] — The psychiatrist who found David Berkowitz is mentally incompetent to stand trial for the six "Son of Sam" murders said in the same report that the suspect is "emotionally dead," it was disclosed yesterday.

Berkowitz was also described in the report as fully aware of the criminal nature of the murder charges lodged against him.

The evaluation was read into a court record by Queens District Attorney John Santucci at the second competency hearing this week for the 24-year-old postal worker accused of six night ambush killings in the city's lovers' lanes.

The prosecution, as it did at a similar hearing in Brooklyn Tuesday, objected to the finding of incompetency reached by Dr. Daniel Schwartz, the psychiatrist who has been examining Berkowitz since his arrest Aug. 10.

Bell expects few indictments

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Attorney General Griffin Bell says he expects "very few" indictments will follow from the Justice Department investigation of alleged South Korean influence peddling among members of Congress.

"We are going to have some charges — very few. There's not going to be large numbers of people involved," Bell told Los Angeles Times reporters yesterday. The Justice Department released a recording of the interview.

Bell did not comment on the reported indictment of South Korean businessman Tongsun Park, a key figures of the lobbying scandal. The indictment had not become disclosed at the time of the interview.

Asked about earlier predictions present or former congressmen might be indicted in August or September, Bell quipped, "We're getting into that season of the year."

Judge denies Sirhan's wish

LOS ANGELES [AP] — A judge refused yesterday to allow Sirhan Sirhan, convicted assassin of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, to return to the scene of the killing.

Superior Court Judge William Hogoboom scoffed at sugestions that Sirhan's memory could be refreshed about the shooting he says he cannot remember and said to grant Sirhan's wish would be to operate the court on the basis of "old wives' tales."

Sirhan's lawyer, Godfry Isaac, had conveyed to the court his client's request to be taken from Soledad State Prison to the kitchen of the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles to see if he could remember what happened the night of June 5, 1968.

Ford accepts invitation as White House guest

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Gerald Ford has accepted President Carter's invitation to attend the signing of the Panama Canal treaties next Wednesday and will be a guest at the White House, it was announced Thursday.

The former president, unlike Ronald Reagan and a number of other top Republican figures, has expressed strong support for the pact which will turn control of the canal over to Panama in the year 2000.

Press secretary Jody Powell said Ford will be Carter's house guest while in Washington to attend the signing ceremony at the Pan American Union, the Organization of American States headquarters on Constitution Avenue.

The President's quest for grass roots support on the issue produced another blast from Sen. Jesse Helms, N.C., who with Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina is spearheading a Republican move to block Senate ratification of the treaties.

Heart failure claims gospel singer Waters

CHATSWORTH, Calif. [UPI] — Ethel Waters, stage and screen star who captured the hearts of millions of fans with her earthy spiritual and blues renditions of "Stormy Weather" and "Am I Blue," died yesterday of an apparent heart failure at age 76.

Miss Waters, whose entertainment career spanned more than 60 years, died at the home of friends at 7:45 a.m. She had been ill for a number of years.

A deeply religious woman, the grey-haired Miss Waters made her Broadway debut in "Plantation Revue of 1924," scoring one of the great song hits ever when she introduced "Dinah". Miss Waters still was making television appearances in her 70s until she was beset by illnesses.

Stricken with diabetes and heart trouble during the 1960s and living on a small social security check, Miss Waters once commented, "I couldn't be happier because I'm at peace with the Lord."

It was her renditions of Negro spirituals that brought her greatest fame and she was the first woman ever to sing "St. Louis Blues."

For the past 15 years, Miss Waters devoted most her time to the Billy Graham Crusade in the United States, Europe and Asia. For the last month, she had been staying with friends Paul and Julie Dekorte in Chatsworth in northern Los Angeles County.

Funeral services were pending at Forest Lawn Mortuary in Glendale, Calif.

Miss Waters was born Oct. 31, 1900, in Chester, Pa., and said later the fact that her family was so poor probably was the reason she never held on to the fortune she made.

She made her initial stage appearance at 17 and after achieving considerable success, toured with a jazz group and developed into a leading theater and cafe personality. She became deeply interested in religion and gave up singing in nightclubs to concentrate on spirituals.

The motion picture industry recognized her talents and cast her in "As Thousands Cheer," "At Home Abroad", and "Rhapsody in Black". She received an Academy Award nomination in 1950 for her role in "Pinky".

Her last picture was "The Sound and the Fury" made in 1958. She then turned to television, appearing on the "Tennessee Ernie Ford Show," "Daniel Boone" with Fess Parker and "Route 66".

Her autobiography, "His Eye is on the Sparrow", was a best seller in 1951.

She was philosophical about the wealth she made and lost. When forced to subsist mainly on Social Security in later life, she said, "If half the people that owed me money paid it back, I'd be a rich woman."

Ethel Waters

She refused to compromise her past glory by making commercials, maintaining her dignity as she lived out her years in Pasadena, Calif.

Miss Waters' later illness kept her activities down and also forced her to lose weight which once had been more than 250 pounds.

She confined her singing to gospel songs, appearing on the Billy Graham crusades or at Salvation Army camp meetings, explaining, "I don't keep my love of God to myself, I sing it out loud."

KKK plans disruption at Women's Conference

DETROIT [UPI] — The Ku Klux Klan plans to disrupt the National Women's Conference in Houston this fall because it considers feminists "the misfits of society," the Detroit News reported Thursday.

Robert Shelton, imperial wizard of the Klan, told the News in a telephone interview from his home in Tuscaloosa, Ala., that the KKK has been infiltrating the women's movement for the past three or four years.

He said the Klan considers the movement a haven for "all the misfits of society, including self-admitted lesbians."

"These women's libbers are trying to destroy all the principles and heritage I cherish," Shelton said.

He said hundreds of members of the Klan's ladies auxiliary have attended most of the state International Women's Year meetings this year and that some — he would not say how many — will, as voting delegates "oppose what's going on" at the Nov. 18-21 National Women's Conference.

"Our men also will be there to protect our women from all the militant lesbians who will be there," Shelton said. "It's not safe for a decent woman to be there. Some of our women were approached by lesbians at the state meetings."

The conference, which grew out of the Ford administration's Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year, is expected to recommend ways of eliminating barriers to male and female equity.

Shelton said the Klan resented the use of taxpayers' money to help organize state meetings that selected the 1,441 voting delegates who will attend the conference.

If Congress can authorize $5 million for that, he said, " hen it should give $5 million to the Klan to fight for segregation."

One in five have dope in blood

Drunk drivers high as well, study reveals

SACRAMENTO, Calif. [UPI] — Initial results in a first-ever California test show that more than one in five motorists stopped for drunken driving have marijuana in their blood, it was learned yesterday.

Officials said indications are that as more blood is sampled the incidence rate will jump to one in four.

The preliminary report of the experiment by the state Justice Department disclosed that 22 per cent of 291 blood samples drawn from suspected drunken drivers contained varying amounts of marijuana.

"That's high," Assistant Highway Patrol Commissioner Lloyd Sellers commented about the findings. "I am surprised."

The initial findings covered the first three months of the year-long project. A researcher, who asked not to be identified, said that unpublished results from the second reporting period indicate an increase to 26 per cent in the number of samples that contained marijuana.

Some law enforcement officials have long suspected that many motorists stopped for drunken or erratic driving but who easily passed sobriety tests were using marijuana or a combination of marijuana and liquor.

The Justice Department and the state Office of Traffic Safety began the federally financed $82,000 experiment in April to determined the incidence of marijuana use by drivers suspected of being intoxicated.

student unionization

Positive change through participation and organization

By GREG TARPINIAN

While the resignation of that infamous educator and "politico" Robert Wood was making headlines this summer, students on the Amherst campus were busy discussing their response to the changing nature of University power relations. Wood's name popped up infrequently however.

The prime topic of discussion was student unionization.

Student governance on the UMass campus has been the object of scorn for some time now. It is perceived by students as ineffective in advocating student interests and rights within the University. At the same time it is seen as offering few avenues for meaningful participation. Students interested in effecting real change in their situation as students — but are turned off by petty political relationships — have few vehicles through which to vent their frustration.

With the threat which faculty collective bargaining poses to students and the above problems in mind, the Student Senate passed a resolution this spring requesting investigation into the possibilities of its own internal transformation.

Beginning in June, and extending through July, a group of students — ranging from the SGA co-presidents to members of the Coalition of Alternative Agriculture and Self-Sufficiency — met to discuss the ramifications of the transformation of the SGA along more participatory lines.

The need to make the SGA more pro-active instead of re-active in dealings with the administration and more open to the prospects of student activism in academic departments and residential areas (commuters included) was of prime importance those involved.

The objective of these discussions was to establish a definite path towards the overall goal of student unionization.

It was decided that the most viable path would be based on the development of active groups in departments and dorms. These would be called councils. They would be responsible for getting people organized around grievances which they had in their respective dorm or department. Pressure would be applied to the administrative apparatus of the department or dorm, whether that be department head, resident head or various departmental and dormitory committees.

Positive change is intended to come about through such an approach. The idea of activision in the areas most basic to student life is the most significant outcome of this summer's discussion. No longer would the interests of the average student be left up to the whims of the so-called "leaders" only a small percentage of the students elect. The councils would be the "deciders" — the "actors".

Everyone can participate in councils.
Anyone can organize a council.

While this is only one step in the transformation discussed this summer, it is the most basic. Everything else rides on the successful organization of councils where participation is likely to be the prime gauge of success.

Apathy is a form of powerlessness. Powerless is how we as students feel in an environment determined for us by administrators and faculty. In this political system power is gotten in two ways: through money, and through numbers.

Many of us have gripes within our departments and living areas. Our gripes remain only gripes however

How many of our student senators deal with our most important problems?

How many of our Senators talk to us about poor course offerings, tasteless food, or sub-human housing? Even if they do, they have the "authority" to not carry out our desires. That's the beauty of student government?

Similarly, do any of our supposedly benevolent administrators ask us about our needs?

Get the connection?

It's time to end the myth of a student government responsive to the needs of students. Student government is a forum for the future political leaders of America. Do our leaders represent our interests? Do we want leaders? Or, do we want change?

There are thousands of us. Through cooperation in residential and academic areas students can make change, gain power, and destroy the confusion and frustration of being a student.

Illegal aliens: a problem of economics

THIS KINGDOM IS A GREAT MELTING POT FOR ALL PEOPLES, TROOB.
THAT'S TRUE...
.....THE ONLY THING WRONG WITH MELTING POTS, IS THAT EVERYTHING ON THE BOTTOM GETS BURNT AND THE SLIME ALWAYS COMES TO THE TOP.
9-8

By MARTIN BROWN

Manuel Rojas strolled down to his local tavern in San Francisco's Mission District last night to celebrate his new quasi-legal status.

As a "temporary alien," Rojas (not his real name) may soon be legally entitled to remain in the U.S. for at least five more years and — more important — to seek work in the above-ground labor market.

"Of course," said Rojas, lifting a glass of beer, " his is a great relief."

Yet Rojas, who slipped across the U.S.-Mexican border in 1973 — and has been back and forth a half-dozen times since — also had qualms. What would happen to him at the end of five years? Will he again be subject to deportation, or will he be given permanent alien status? No one knows.

And, though he will be required to pay regular payroll taxes while employed, he will not be entitled to any of the social services those taxes pay for, such as Medicaid, food stamps or federal welfare.

In the end, Rojas, and millions of others like him, may well conclude that the Administration's "solution" to illegal aliens is a very mixed blessing, offering no fundamental change but rather a veneer of legality over a still troublesome situation.

The reason it will remain troubling, according to a number of respected economists who specialize in immigrant labor, is that the "alien problem" lies deep in the structure of the U.S. economy, which makes it profitable for certain businesses to utilize illegal workers. The immigrants themselves are mere symptoms of the problem.

In fact, many economists agree that illegal immigrant labor has been good for American business, particularly the so-called "secondary labor market," that section of the economy that provides low-paying, non-union employment, generally with substandard working conditions and little job security. And, they also agree, the widely held notion that illegal aliens are "indigent" and a drain on the U.S. welfare system has little validity.

Economist David S. North, with cooperation of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), recently interviewed 793 illegal aliens who had been picked up by the INS in major American cities. He found they had worked in the U.S. an average of two-and-a half years, and that 77 per cent had paid Social Security taxes and 73 per cent had paid federal income taxes. Nearly half had also paid for hospitalization insurance.

In contrast, only 27 per cent had used public hospitals or clinics and less than four per cent had collected one or more weeks of unemployment insurance. Only about four per cent had children in U.S. schools, only two per cent had secured food stamps and less than one per cent had received welfare payments.

North's findings concluded that illegal alien workers actually contribute more to the public welfare system than they take out of it. North also found that most of the illegal workers he interviewed had worked in "low-wage, low-skill, low-status jobs." Twenty-four per cent had been paid below the minimum wage.

Their employers, he found, felt that illegal alien workers are more productive than domestic workers, and that they are necessary to maintain or increase profits in small, labor-intensive, highly competitive firms. The main problem of illegals, concluded North, is that they make it more difficult for low-skilled domestic workers to find decent paying jobs or to improve wages and working conditions in the non-unionized secondary labor market.

Economist Michael Piore of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology agrees with North's findings. But Piore argues that any policy designed to attack the symptom — illegal aliens — rather than the cause of the problem — the structure of the labor market — could make matters worse, not better, for all disadvantaged workers.

Piore, who has studied the secondary labor market in Boston, notes that fundamental changes began occurring in the late sixties. In the mid-sixties, he says, the majority of workers in the low-paid, non-unionized market were older immigrants and native workers, notably blacks from the urban ghettos. But by the late sixties, "these workers reportedly became a good deal more difficult to manage. Clashes between employes and supervisors and among employes themselves became more frequent," partly as a result of the generally prosperous economy and rising worker expectations.

Rather than improve the wages and working conditions, however, Boston secondary employers began to recruit a wave of immigrant workers, legal and illegal, from Puerto Rico, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Mexico and other Latin American countries. By 1975 illegal aliens constituted almost three-fourths of the minority labor force.

The Administration's proposed policy of granting a temporary and limited amnesty to these workers assures their continuing availability, which in turn relieves pressure on employers to improve wages and working conditions. The result is the institutionalization of the worst aspects of the labor market.

Piore also worries that a "crackdown" on illegal immigration, promised by Carter, will only drive the secondary labor market further "underground."

MIT political scientist Wayne Cornelius suggests another reason why such a crackdown may fail. "The pressures (to migrate to the U.S. from Mexico) are so intense ... that most Mexican illegals are not likely to be deterred, even by the most draconian restrictive measures," he says.

Cornelius tells of one illegal who was picked up by the INS three times and was finally asked, "What can we do to prevent you from doing this again?"

The illegal replied, "Shoot me."

The awareness that structural changes in the U.S. economy may be the only answer to the "illegal alien crisis" has led some U.S. labor leaders to change their views on how to deal with the situation. Union organization of the secondary labor market, they believe, would at once improve wages and working conditions, and at the same time restrict employers from seeking cheap labor from an illegal work force.

Cesar Chavez's United Farm Workers Union, which once blamed illegals for sanitation problems, crime and low farm worker wages, is now actively recruiting illegal aliens into its membership.

The AFL-CIO is campaigning for reform of the National Labor Relations Act in a way that would cut the red tape and cost of union organizing. This would presumably make it easier to organize the thousands of small work places that make up the secondary labor market.

Until such fundamental changes occur, both here and in the underdeveloped countries which provide the aliens, many economists believe the tide of foreign workers, both legal and illegal, will continue to swell.

Words of wisdom

By LISA MELLILLI

About the hardest time to write a column is at the beginning of a semester with all the hustle and bustle of getting settled. And I suppose that was the problem the columnists had two years ago when I was a freshman. See I remember being disappointed in the Collegian editorial pages then simply because no one had written what I wanted to hear: some words of wisdom from someone older and wiser about UMass and college.

So, I figured now is the time to undo any harm done then for newpeople and I'm going to try and answer some of the most asked questions.

First of all, welcome. Second of all, don't panic in cases of emergency, there are bathroom facilities in all buildings on campus.

Third of all, what is that I hear one person saying? They've come to college to learn all about everything and they figure college gives you license to know-it-all? Mmmm...-that's what most people think. I know I did. And I guess here I'll start my words of wisdom. I might report that after two years in college classrooms, I have realized no how much I'm learning, rather more and more how much I don't know and would like to. You see, college doesn't really teach you any answers, but rather how to ask more questions. College teaches you how to get yourself totally confused and then how to muster enough patience to sort your questions out and solve them, base up, by yourself. It teaches you how to teach yourself.

Now somebody has said that if he-she goes to every single class while they're here, they'll end up with a good job when they get out. Another false statement. (Please, ask questions!) You might end up with good grades and nothing more if you just go to classes. You see along with what I said about college teaching you how to teach yourself, college also makes you "educable." When you get a job, the employer will be interested in your knowledge, yes; your experience, yes. But mostly what he-she will be interested in is how fast you learn, how fast he-she can train you to do the kind of job he-she wants.

And since we're on the subject of learning, let me give you the wisest and most practiced piece of advice: don't let your school work get in the way of your education.

Sure, classes are where you'll get your book-learning, but there is so much more. The "real world" doesn't function on theorems, maxims, or principals of physics or philosophy; it functions on people's behavior — love, hate; communication, refrain. And there will be no better place than here at UMass to learn about people and just how many different people there are in the world. If you're like myself, you came from a high school where everyone was from the same community, brought up with the same ideals, perspectives. Well, it isn't true here. you've entered your first melting pot. Keep your ears open.

And it's from keeping your ears open and taking a taste of everything that you'll really learn about yourself. Don't be afraid if you don't have opinions at first on things. A person has opinions when they know.

What about Southwest? — sorry, my editor has asked me only to speak of things in good taste.

How do you get through the meal plan? Try to eat as little as you can there and order a pizza late at night.

How do you get your mother to top setting your place at the suppertable while you're away? Give her a marijuana plant and ask her to water it for you everyday.

Why should you bring gum with you to parties? Please, please, go to one and find out.

Lastly, let me leave you with the wisest and truest of all life-guiding adages: "Be true to thyself and let no man put asunder." Find your priorities and follow through on them and always make time for yourself no matter how busy you are. That's real happiness and real peace-of-mind. And my peace of-mind will come when I get all my courses straightened — so, until next week, best of luck!

Advocate: cashing in on nukes

By JIM PAULIN

When the Valley Advocate hits the street, the populace should run for the fallout shelters. It's devoted so much space to blasting nuclear power, the whole damn paper's become radioactive and should be handled only when wearing a lead lined suit.

Nuclear power is the best thing that ever happened to the Valley Advocate. Ever since Sam Lovejoy unscrewed the cables of the meteorological tower at the site of the proposed Montague nuclear power plant, the Advocate has taken the facts of nuclear power to the village square so often that they have become a permanent fixture there, like the bird-shit covered statues of war heroes and park benches.

When the holocaust finally arrives, when the first core meltdown occurs and emergency cooling system fails to work, the Valley Advocate will have its greatest moment. A New York Daily News style headline declaring that "WE TOLD YOU SO" will be shoved, like a sadistically administered enema, straight up the collective ass of the utility companies, Advocate reporters in lead lined suits will win a Pulitzer prize, Harvey Wasserman will write a best seller about the incident, and Sam Lovejoy, with a shit eating grin will accept Jimmy Carter's nomination of him for an appointment to the Atomic Energy Commission, mentioning, as an aside, that former AEC head Dixie Lee Ray is a stupid bitch who will never be re-elected Governor of Washington.

VALLEY Advocate
The Alternative in the Pioneer Valley

I agree that nukes are a menace to the public but if the Advocate was a good paper, it would give thorough coverage to many other important issues besides nuclear power.read the article, they went into a conniption

The Advocate is one of those rare beasts that actually seems to thrive on nuclear energy. A mutation, if you will, between a youth oriented shopper and a generally, but not too energetically, all in all, leftist alternative newspaper.

However, the Advocate is a flyweight compared to the paid circulation alternative weeklies, like The Boston Phoenix, the Boston Real Paper, New York's Village Voice, Philadelphia's Drummer or maybe, just maybe, if it kicks out the jams, The Rutland Vt. Sun (a potentially fine weekly newspaper founded this June by former Collegian executive editor Joe Mahoney and ex-UMass journalism student Walter Hamilton. Since Joe's giving me a free subscription, I feel obligated, like Barth Gimball on Fernwood 2 Night, to provide subtle free publicity. If I can get him a half dozen subscriptions, I'll get a free Rutland Sun t-shirt.)

Perhaps the reason the Advocate isn't more hard hitting is that it is essentially published by its advertisers. With no paid circulation, advertisements are the Advocate's sole sustenance; though, according to a letter the Advocate editors sent to More magazine, the journalism review, it would seem that they're not too proud of the fact. The letter objected to a description of the Advocate as an "underground newspaper" in a previous issue. Well, when the editors read the article, they went into a conniption fit and wrote an angry letter to the editor of More declaring that they were not an "underground paper", and if fact, had a larger circulation within their market than either Time or Newsweek. They neglected to mention the quintessential fact behind their huge circulation, the fact that the Advocate doesn't cost anything. A junk mail outfit could make the same claim.

"All sorrows are less with bread"

By KAREN HERMANN

I have problems, severe problems that can be alleviated only at the cost of 350 dollars per semester. I am psychologically and physically dependent upon a slimy, tepid, grayish-orange substance familiar to almost every undergraduate on campus. Yes. You guessed it. I am addicted (shudder) to dining commons food.

Today, if you don't mind listening to the bellyaching (forgive the pun) and whining of a fellow UMie-creature, I shall give an account of my last two weeks of summer vacation, which were spent in unrelieved misery due to my unnatural cravings. Please allow me as much compassion as I would surely have for you in similar circumstances.

The sickness began as a gnawing, yearning sensation in my upper abdomen one evening in mid-August. An old FM radio tune bounced and boogied in my brain. (It was the same tune that had almost stirred me to the point of vomiting last October 16, when I sat in Campus Center trying to diget my DC breakfast of bulletproof oatmeal.) I realized, with some amazement, that my stomach was crying for good ol' lukewarm tripe golumpki with horseradish sauce. A stalwart stoic always, I ignored my belly's importunities and went to bed.

At two A.M. I woke up in a cold sweat, semi-delirious and screaming for prune turnovers in eight languages Of course no one understood me. My mother, fearful that I had taken cocaine or heroin, sent me to the hospital and called in five specialists to examine me....

At two a.m. I woke up in a cold sweat, semi-delirious and screaming for prune turnovers in eight languages. Of course no one understood me. My mother, fearful that I had taken cocaine or heroin, sent me to the hospital and called in five specialists to examine me. The medics pumped my stomach three times that morning, and finding nothing but an old Hershey bar wrapper, informed my mother that I had a rare disorder, nostalgia flumpkinus, seen only in neurotic college students. In other words, I had developed a psychosomatic allergy to home-cooked food.

"Ingrate!" What's worng with my Spam?" shrieked my mother, turning to me in fury.

"Oh, is that the stuff we've had every night since 1971?" I naively remarked.

To make a short story shorter: I spent the last week of August pining alone in my room, tuned to WMUA and ostracized by my mother. Today I'm back in Amherst, ready to slurp, gobble and masticate my way through another semester. As Cervantes wrote, "all sorrows are less with bread." Especially with day old bread from the Copper Kettle (yum, yum).

Anita's winds gain more momentum but storm center swings to south

BROWNSVILLE, Tex. [UPI] — Hurricane Anita grew with shocking suddenness to a 150-mile-an-hour storm yesterday, but the center of the swirling winds swung on a southwesterly course toward the sparsely populated coast of northeastern Mexico.

Forecasters warned that population centers along the Texas-Mexico border were still in danger, but the director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami said the Brownsville, Tex.-Matamoros, Mexico, area apparently had been spared the worst.

"The shift in course has saved Brownsville's neck, that's what it's done," said hurricane center director Dr. Neil Frank. "If the center of this thing had gone right over Brownsville, it would have raised havoc."

"I hope he's right," said Ersel Lantz, director of planning and engineering for the Port of Brownsville. "I hope this thing just sideswipes us."

The National Weather Service reported at 3 p.m. the storm had winds of 125 miles per hour, but less than two hours later the peak velocity was registered at 150 m.p.h.

At 5 p.m., the NWS said the hurricane was located at latitude 25.0 north, longitude 96.0 west. That would put the 28-mile wide eye of the storm 110 miles southeast of Brownsville. It was moving at 10 m.p.h.

There was no easing of precautions in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas.

Thousands of people boarded their homes, stuffed belongings in their cars and headed inland — away from the flat lands which make up the Texas coastal plain. In addition, thousands more Mexican nationals streamed across Brownsville's two international bridges, seeking shelter.

"We've had anywhere from 2,000 to 5,000 people come across the bridges," said Cameron County Judge Ray Ramon. "I wish there was a way to stop them. We have to take care of them as well.

"The traffic at both bridges is extremely heavy because customs and immigration regulations are all they have to meet. The wealthier Mexicans are going inland to Harlingen 25 miles away to motels. But the poorer ones are staying at the shelters and they were full by noon."

With the storm only slightly more than 100 miles offshore, only light rain was falling in Brownsville.

Riots in Italy mar concert hopes

VERONA, Italy [AP] — A clash between police and demonstrators protesting high ticket prices outside a rock concert by the American group Chicago has marred hopes for a revival of live rock concerts in Italy.

Police fired tear gas to disperse hundreds of rock and bottle-throwing demonstrators Wednesday night. The concert, attended by 15,000 at Verona's 1,900-year-old Amphitheater, was not disrupted. No one was seriously injured and 10 demonstrators were arrested.

But the scuffle marked a setback for efforts by Chicago, a Los Angeles-based group, and Italian promoters to encourage American singers and groups to come to Italy.

The performance had been billed as "The Spirit of Woodstock" and was to mark the return of live American rock to the nation of "bel canto" and Neopolitan love songs.

It's not that the new music is unpopular. American pop songs — rock, soul or country are regularly at the top of Italian charts and constantly played on radio and TV.

The problem is that rock fans feel that the prices are too high and leftists think all culture should be free or at least equally available to rich and poor.

Outside the Verona concert, the demonstrators distributed leaflets against "the commercial exploitation of pop music."

The demonstrators call themselves "autoriduttori," or self-discounters. They think the cost of tickets to rock concerts — the Chicago tickets ranged from $2.50 to $6.50 — is exhorbitant and unfair.

Robert Lamm, singer-song-writer in the Chicago group, said he had to wipe the tears from his eyes to continue performing when tear gas penetrated the amphitheater.

Chicago was the target of demonstrations at their last concert in Italy four years ago, and since then many American bands have avoided this country.

Since 1974, demonstrators have carried their protests to a number of concerts, including those featuring the Rolling Stones, Frank Zappa and Lou Reed. Demonstrators at a Reed concert forced him to halt a Milan performance after two songs. Since then, most rock groups have bypassed Italy during European tours.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Born today, you are a person of very definite likes and dislikes. Your reactions are highly predictable. There is little anyone can do to dissuade you from taking a particular action once you have made up your mind to so; at the same time, however, you are one of those relatively cautious individuals who does not act without first contemplating the possible consequences of his action.

A great believer in both mental and physical exercise, you will begin very early in life to take seriously any problems of health that may occur. You will have to take care, though, that you do not allow natural concern for your own conditon to deteriorate into a hypochondriac's over-concern.

You possess a number of talents, but you will not even attempt to bring more than one or two of them to a point in their development where they can be translated into profitable terms. You are a highly active individual – but you are not especially concerned with success in terms of financial gain. You will probably pass up many an opportunity for success of a monetary nature – but you will never knowingly miss out on a chance for spiritual gain.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

MONDAY, Sept. 18

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take care that fear of the immediate future does not cause you to fail to take part in activities necessary to your career success.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Determine another's likes and dislikes before you attempt to choose for him the way he should go. Try to be tactful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take special note of how you feel today, especially when it comes to your emotional reactions to suggestions for change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Illness may plague your efforts to progress today. Time, however, proves to be your friend; all is well by day's end.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Fact and fancy may become confused as you enter into a new phase of your work today. Make this a day for calm, nerveless considerations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The best tonic for sadness or spiritual weariness is work. Take into consideration recent illness or length of time away from your job.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Occupational hazards may tend to spoil your pleasure in work today. Make an effort to adjust to local custom.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Vitality is the key to today's success. Allow yours to wane and you court failure; keep vitality up and the day proves a winner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Give another every opportunity to succeed on his own. Step in and help only if asked – or if you see the need is great.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — So long as work coincides with mental ability, there should be no difficulties attendant upon progress. Children bring joys – and cares.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Moderation is the key to personal happiness as well as to success in a new phase of your career. Don't jump from frying pan to fire!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A tendency to worry over little things may cause you to waste considerable time today. Save your concern for things that count.

Sports in Brief

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — In a surprise move yesterday, the Buffalo Braves traded forward Adrian Dantley, unanimously chosen as Rookie of the Year in the NBA, to the Indiana Pacers for high-scoring guard-forward Billy Knight.

Dantley was the Braves' first-round pick in the 1976 college draft and had been considered one of the stalwarts of the club, along with guard Randy Smith. He averaged 20.3 points per game and was Buffalo's second-leading scorer.

Besides Dantley, the Pacers will receive Mike Bantom by way of the New York Nets. The Nets will be compensated for Bantom at a future date, Bob MacKinnon, the club's director of player personnel, said.

In explaining the trade, MacKinnon said, "we feel that we finished close to the bottom of the league last year and we anticipate other trades. We feel that deals have to be made."

He said he felt it was a case of "two great players being traded."

Knight was the second leading scorer in the NBA last season, averaging 26 points and was on the NBA All-Star team.

He said he felt Knight "can be played in the back court" and "is a good outside shooter."

PISCATAWAY, N.J. [AP] — The National Basketball Association Nets announced yesterday they have traded high-scoring guard Nate Archibald to the Buffalo Braves for center George Johnson and the Braves' No. 1 draft pick in 1979.

Archibald, 29, came to the Nets prior to the 1976-77 season in a trade with Kansas City.

He led the NBA in scoring and assists in 1972-73, the only player ever to accomplish the feat.

The 6'1" Archibald played in just 34 games for the Nets before suffering a broken bone in his foot and missing the rest of the season. He averaged 20.5 points per game and had 254 assists.

Johnson, a 6'11" center whom Buffalo obtained from Golden State during the 1976-77 season for a 1977 No. 1 draft pick, was the sixth leading shot-blocker in the NBA last season with 177.

SMITHFIELD, R.I. [AP] — The New England Patriots cut third year defensive end Dave Tipton, second year linebacker Jim Jerome and four rookies yesterday as they moved to trim their roster to a National Football League limit of 52.

Tipton and Jerome both played for New England last season. Others dropped were linebacker Mike McGraw, quarterback Lynn Hieber, halfback Dave Preston and guard Brad Benson.

In addition, quarterback Sidney Brown was placed on the injured reserve list. A club spokesman said Brown was still recuperating from a knee cartilege operation of several weeks ago.

The spokesman said these transactions plus a waiver that would be disclosed later would bring the Patriot roll down to the 52 limit.

NEW YORK [UPI] — Both sides in the National Basketball Association Referees' contract dispute are still far apart but the situation hasn't gotten to the point where standby referees will have to be alerted in the event the conflict is not resolved by Sept. 18, when the training camps open.

"We haven't arrived at that point yet," said John Nucatola, the supervisor of officials for the NBA. "I haven't received any instructions from the commissioner's office about that.

"We're proceeding under the assumption we will have a staff ready — I'm going ahead and planning the schedule, just leaving in blanks where the referees' names go. Right now, I'd just like to fill in the blanks."

ROCHESTER, Mich. [UPI] — The Detroit Lions yesterday acquired soccer-style kicker Steve Mike-Mayer from the San Francisco 49ers.

Mike-Mayer, whose brother Nick kicks for the Atlanta Falcons, was the 49ers' leading scorer for the past two seasons and last year ranked ninth in the National Football Conference with 74 points.

The Lions cut defensive back Reggie Pinkney, a sixth round draft choice, and free agent Tim Anderson.

Bosox rebound behind Lee, 3-1

BOSTON [UPI] — Fred Lynn and Carl Yastrzemski drove in first-inning runs yesterday to help Bill Lee and Boston to a 3-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians that pulled the Red Sox to within 3½ games of the American League East-leading New York Yankees.

With one out in the first, Bernie Carbo doubled to left center and Lynn sliced a double that hit the foul pole halfway up the left field wall, scoring Carbo. Yastrzemski followed with an RBI single to right, his 11th game-winning hit of the season and ninth RBI in as many games.

Yastrzemski, who was 3-for-4, doubled in the eighth and Jim Rice's 410-foot triple brought him in for Boston's third run.

Lee, 6-3, with relief help from Jim Willougby and Reggie Cleveland, outdueled Dennis Eckersley, 13-11. In 7 2-3 innings, Lee scattered eight hits and walked none while striking out one. Eckersley surrundered 10 hits and fanned eight.

Cleveland loaded the bases with none out in the seventh on singles by Buddy Bell and Ron Pruitt sandwiched around an Andre Thornton grounder that saw Bell beat the throw to second on the fielder's choice. Lee, however, permitted just one run to score on Rico Carty's sacrifice fly, getting Larvell Blanks to fly to right and Fred Kendall to ground out.

Richards eased out by Wade at US Open

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Ordinarily, there would be little hullaballoo about a 43-year-old woman, with nary a single victory over a credible opponent, coming up against one of the world's leading players.

Except, in the case of the extraordinary Dr. Renee Richards, there is never anything ordinary in anything she does.

So it was that the former Richard Raskind, the father of a young son and a renowned ophthalmologist, made history yesterday by returning to Forest Hills in the women's division. Seventeen years ago, Raskind played in the men's nationals, losing an opening round match to the then-champion, Neale Fraser of Australia.

It took a court order to permit the 6'-2" Richards to play here, and not everyone else in the women's ranks was happy to see her. But there she was on the stadium court, playing Virginia Wade, the no. 3 seed still riding high over her Wimbledon championship.

Wade had predicted that her taller and older opponent would be unsettled in her first appearance on center court and, whatever the reason, Richards went out mildly in the first set before showing better form in the second. Still, Wade was an easy winner, 6-1, 6-4.

"I'd like to play down this precedent thing and the whole zoo-like atmosphere," Richards said after her loss. "I think it's important that I played the Wimbledon champion in the U.S. Open. I don't consider just being here a victory. As a competitive tennis player, I can't call a 1-4 (6-1, 6-4) loss a victory."

Wade, who had helped Renee take off her thoroughly soaked green jacket in the interview room, said, "I've had all the respect in the world for her in the last 12 months. I just wasn't sure in my own mind whether it was the right thing for her to play in the women's division, but somebody else made the decision and I'll abide by it."

Even Chris Evert, who had preceded them on the stadium court with a 6-0, 6-1 win over Sharon Walsh, commented, "I'm sure people wanted my match to be over quickly. I don't think Renee should be allowed to play in this tournament. If you play in the men's tournament one year I don't think you should be allowed to play in the women's division another.

"A lot of people are coming not only to watch her play, but to see what she looks like, how she acts, what she is."

About 10,000 people watched the match, and they appeared to favor Richards slightly.

Cellar teams could be key

It looks like an exciting September for, of all people, the also-rans in the American Leagues two division races.

Teams like Cleveland, California, Oakland, Toronto and Seattle will have plenty to say about which teams advance to the playoffs next month.

In the East, for example, where New York, Boston and Baltimore are in a three-way battle, there are only four series left in which the contenders will play each other. All of them involve the Red Sox, who appear to have the toughest schedule of the three East contenders.

Boston plays a three-game series at New York Sept. 13-14-15 and then moves right into Baltimore for three more against the Orioles Sept. 16-17-18, before returning home for two more games against the Yankees Sept. 19-20. The fate of the Red Sox would seem to ride on that eight-game stretch and the final three games of the season — another series with Baltimore at Boston.

Nine of the first place Yankees' final 30 games — almost one third of their total — will be played against Cleveland. Toronto plays the Yankees seven times, Baltimore eight times and Boston nine times.

Boston, New York and Baltimore are all playing West contenders this weekend and then will complete the season within their own division.

All right, all you out there, it's almost time for our first sports staff meeting of the semester. play two quarters while backups Mike McEvilly, Tim Fontaine, and freshman John Clain will also see action.

Dartmouth is previewed as one of the top teams in the Ivy League. The Greenman challenge Harvard for the Ivy crown. Dartmouth's strengths are at quarterback, wide receiver, and linebacker.

"Dartmouth every year has a good team and should give us a tough fight. They like to hit on defense and like to throw the ball an awful lot on offense," said Maxwell.

Town signs with Denver

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Former UMass basketball star Jim Town will be wearing a Denver Nuggets uniform in two weeks when the National Basketball Association team opens training camp in the Mile High city.

It was announced yesterday that the 22-year-old rookie has signed a one-year pact with Denver.

"I signed a one-year contract, with an option to renew, last Saturday," Town said in a telephone interview last night.

According to Town, Denver begins its veteran camp on Sept. 18. "We'll have 10-12 days of double sessions before the pre-season games start, and then the regular season begins October 19th," he said.

"Personally, I feel I have a good chance of making the team. I had some good talks with the Nuggets and I feel very confident," Town said.

Contributing to his optimism is the fact that Denver plans on sending only 15 or 16 players to training camp. In addition, the Nuggets traded forwards Paul Silas, and Willie Wise away during the off-season. The transactions leave Bobby Jones, David Thompson, and Byron Beck as the only veterans vying for the front court slots.

Town was the lone forward selected by the Nuggets in the last NBA draft.

Town, a 1,000 point career scorer in his stay here, said the NBA players and brass were "very shocked" that he had such ability.

"They told me they were surprised that I could play so well," Town said. "But the publicity here isn't that good. In fact, it's bad compared to other schools. With more publicity, I know I would have been drafted higher."

'Personally, I feel I have a good chance of making the team' - Jim Town

"Right now it's a day to day thing about making the team," Town added.

The finalized NBA rosters for the remainder of the season must be submitted by December 16, and "hopefully they'll have made their firm decision about me by then."

Town, a sixth-round draft choice of the 1977 Midwest Division champions in the June NBA draft, was sent to a three-day rookie camp in Denver along with 20 other rookies and free agents shortly after his selection.

"Out of the 20 guys there, they sent eight of us to Los Angeles for some more work in a summer league," Town said.

The loop, which ended about three weeks ago, included some of the best players in the NBA. Moses Malone, Swen Nater, Norm Cook, and Fred Saunders were among Town's opponents in the LA league.

"I had to play center there, since Denver didn't send any centers to the league," Town a 6'7" forward throughout his three-year career here, noted.

Town more than held his own against the competition, though admittedly awed by his foes.

"It's one thing to see them on TV, and another thing to play against them," he said.

The competition buoyed his hopes, and when Denver came forward with the contract, Town was quick to sign.

Town, who also led the Minutemen in rebounding the past two years, has fond memories of his UMass days.

"I enjoyed my three years here. I had a lot of little things go right which added up to a lot of good times. But of course, we had some problems too," he noted.

Although the Minutemen were plagued with dissension, especially during the 1976-77 season, two games stick out in Town's mind.

"My biggest thrills were beating Rutgers last year and Providence the season before," he remembered.

UMass upset Rutgers, 72-71, last season at the Springfield Civic Center, while the Minutemen topped Providence, 82-81, in overtime the year before to clinch the number one regular season ranking in New England.

And Town will also carry with him to Denver remembrances of the Cage.

"It was great playing in front of the UMass fans. They were usually always behind us," he said.

Let's hope his stay in the NBA will give him those same kind of memories.

Gridmen open with scrimmage

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Just one week before the season opener against Army, the UMass football team will tune up against Dartmouth in a preseason scrimmage tomorrow at Dartmouth. This year, optimism and enthusiasm will headline the team as the Minutemen try to improve last season's 5-5 record and second place finish in the Yankee Conference.

Head coach Dick MacPherson will have 75 men on hand in the scrimmage as he will start his first stringers in the first and third quarters and substitute freely in the remaining periods.

"I think the team is anxiously awaiting this scrimmage because at this stage we want to see how competitive our offensive and defensive units are," said defensive coordinator Bob Pickett.

The team, hurt by graduation defensively, is building depth. The competition, especially at linebacker, is tough.

"We've had a good preseason camp for contact, and we want to keep it going. With the graduation of Ron Harris, Greg Sprout, and Dennis Fenton, we thought last spring we would be hurting in the defensive backfield and defensive line, but Steve McInnes (strong safety) John Beerworth (weak safety), John Willis (defensive end), Phil Puopolo (defensive lineman) have all looked good and should keep on improving," Pickett said.

Offensively, the team is buoyed by the return of two offensive lineman — Russ Cooke and Ross Schubarth — who sat out last season because of injuries. "With the return of both Ross and Russ, our running game will be much better," said offensive coordinator Bill Maxwell.

Schubarth and Cooke will join returning lettermen Bruce Kimball, Jim Penta, and Gerry Greene to make the offensive line the strongest area of the unit.

Maxwell said the team is changing the running style from quickness to power. "We want to have a power game of running with our speed shifted to receivers and tight ends," he said.

Number one quarterback Mike Fallon will

For promoted profs

Salary jumps due soon

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Delayed salary increases for UMass faculty promoted September 1, will be received in a couple of weeks, according to Prof. Larry S. Roberts, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Roberts said last night the delay was due to a lack of information from the administration needed by the collective bargaining union.

"The administration knew this was coming up months before. They could have given us information two months before, but they didn't," said Roberts.

The information needed were lists of those promoted and the amounts of the salary adjustments. Roberts said a "number of people" were affected because of the lack of information.

Bromery last night said so far the negotiations have concerned correct salary procedures, and not the increases themselves.

"There is a fine legal line as to what you can do to salary adjustments," he said, and the salary increases have been held up because of the union contract.

"The faculty has to realize that things are going to have to be regularized," said Bromery. Anything done to individuals "has to be done in the context of the collective bargaining law."

Bromery also said the union has asked for a lot of data, but nothing can be done by the administration without negotiations.

"Both sides aren't learning to operate under this collective bargaining law," he said.

Buses halted temporarily

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

UMass bus service was halted over the long Labor Day weekend by an apparent communications problem between the Undergraduate Student Senate and the UMass Student Senate Transit service.

The holiday shutdown left an estimated 5,000 weekend passengers from as far away as South Deerfield, Sunderland and Belchertown without bus service from Friday afternoon to Monday morning.

Five-College buses were not affected.

Regularly scheduled bus service to all points is expected to resume today at 7:15 a.m.

In addition to on-campus shuttle service, the system, the largest no-fare rapid transit in the world, also covers North and South Amherst.

While the 33-bus fleet has never operated over long holiday weekends in the past, Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima yesterday said a "motion of intent" requiring the extended service was overwhelmingly passed in the Senate last April 20. The new policy was to be implemented at the start of the new fiscal year on July 31.

"They're dreaming," said Transit Service Acting Operational Manager Stephen F. Murphy in a telephone interview yesterday. "There was a little talk earlier in the summer and they said they wanted (long weekend service). That was the last I heard of it. I haven't even seen the budget for this fiscal year, let alone a budget for extended service. They are dreaming."

Neither DeLima nor Murphy could offer concrete explanations for the apparent communications breakdown. Undergraduate Student Senate Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins was unavailable for comment last night.

"Apparently some one just forgot that the motion was passed," DeLima said, "It was not listed in the transit budget. There was just an oversight."

DeLima suggested the problem may have been caused by a failure to include the motion in the transit service computer file. All motions of this type are normally placed into a specific category, such as transit, he said.

"It should have been there," DeLima said.

Murphy, however, questioned the existence of the original motion. "I was approached a while back about this. The sponsors asked if I could do it. I said 'sure', if they would allocate the money. And that was that. I never heard from them after that," Murphy said.

Murphy said he could not believe the motion was passed because no one approached him with specifics about the level of service required over the long weekends. Because this information was not given him, Murphy said he had no idea how much it would cost to run the extended service.

Murphy said the two original sponsors of the motion, former Student Government Association Communications Director Bryan Harvey and former SGA Governmental Affairs co-Chairperson Karl Allen, approached him Friday after the pair noticed the buses had stopped running.

"They were not even sure of the exact figures in dollars required to run the service, or even of the type of service required," Murphy said.

A meeting with the two to determine exact rates for holiday service in the future is scheduled for today, Murphy said. Murphy said the final cost of the service would be dictated by the number of buses required for adquate coverage.

Normal Sunday service is about one-half of Saturday service, explained Murphy. "Which do they want?" he asked.

Last spring the Undergraduate Student Senate approved a $100,000 budget for the transit service for fiscal year 1978, representing a $9,760 increase over the previous year.

While the Fiscal 1978 Budget Act acknowledges the increases with an added note that the amount "has been reserved by the Budgets Committee," nowhere in the document is there an expense-by-expense breakdown of the transit service budget.

Police pull plug on Kent State protesters

KENT, Ohio [AP] — Campus police literally pulled the plug yesterday on a rally protesting the construction of a gymnasium annex at Kent State University.

Members of the May 4th Coalition were demonstrating opposition to the school's plan to build the annex near the spot where four students were killed by National Guardsmen during an anti-war rally. The coalition wants the site kept clear as a memorial.

Coalition members had plugged their public address system into a dormitory outlet, but police promptly unplugged it.

Robert Malone, head of campus security, afterward said that the rally was not "approved or recognized", and that the campus was closed.

After the unplugging, rally leaders went to another part of the building and tried again, this time forming a human chain around the outlet in an effort to keep police away.

So the police cut off the building's main power supply.

Speakers went ahead with their addresses to the crowd of 200 anyway.

Later, the coalition posted what it called a "people's permanent injunction" which would bar not only construction of the gym but also police access to the site.

It also called for an end to what it described as police harassment of the coalition's efforts.

Before breaking up, the crowd marched to the campus residence of Kent State's new president, Dr. Brage Golding, but he was not home.

A court order barring construction on the controversial campus hillside expires this week. Contractor Bucky Arnes has said he is ready to start work next week.

Still pending is the coalition's request that Supreme Court Justice William Brennan order further delay in construction.

Decriminalization of 'pot' pushed

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-President Jon A. Hite in early August submitted to the state attorney general an Initiative Petition for an Act to decriminalize the use of marijuana in Massachusetts.

Eight states have already decriminalized the possession of minimum amounts of marijuana. The maximum penalty for possession of just one ounce or less under state law varies throughout the country.

According to a study by a Washington D.C. based group, the Center for the Study of Non-Medical Drug Use, South Dakota is one of the eight states which no longer treats possession of a small amount of marijuana as a criminal offense. The maximum penalty for possession of marijuana in South Dakota is a $20 fine.

In Arizona, where possession is still very much a criminal offense, the maximum penalty is five years to life imprisonment, and-or a $50,000 fine.

Here in Massachusetts, possession is also still a criminal offense. The maximum penalty is two years, and-or a $2,000 fine.

According to the study, "It is rare for a state actually to impose the maximum sentence provided by law. However, these penalties remain on the books. A court still has the option of sentencing an individual to as much as life imprisonment."

It is the belief that this law needs to be changed which first prompted Hite and the other nine committee members to take action.

"The law as they have it now is an enigma," Hite said. "There is no reason a person should have a record for possessing marijuana. I also think that if this law is passed, the legislature will find that they would be treating marijuana as equal to alcohol."

State Senator John W. Olver, D-Amherst, and State Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, both said in telephone interviews last night that they support the decriminalization of marijuana.

"Yes, I support the bill," Olver said. "I always have supported this."

"Yes, I've supported this bill in each of the last four years," said Collins. "Over the years the votes have steadily risen. I do think it's a good idea to have it on the ballot to find out the degree of public support.

"Overall," he said, "in terms of drug regulation, it would make more sense to have decriminalization of possession of less than one ounce, and to concentrate on a strong education and support program for people with drug related problems."

Collins said that he felt "the penalties should fit the drug." It would be better to have drug regulations, and for drugs such as, say, heroin to be bought out," Collins said. "There would then be no exploitation."

"Ultimately," said Collins, "We should concentrate upon drug education and support programs."

Another person who signed the initiative petition, Janis Wertz, assistant dean of students, last night in a telephone interview said she also agrees that the law needs to be changed. "In some ways, marijuana is the alcohol of prohibition. It needs to be dealt with," she said.

However, Wertz also pointed out other issues with equal, if not greater need to be dealt with.

"The bigger question," she said, "is why we spend so little time dealing with alcohol, which is a bigger problem. There are so many other issues we haven't dealt with, to put pressure on this is a misplaced priority...jobs, poverty, better drug education (including alcohol), also need to be dealt with."

Ramos' ensemble dances splendidly

By ZOE BEST

The Diana Ramos Theatre Dance Ensemble culminated summer performances sponsored by Rick Jeffries of Jazz Loft North at the Main St. Center in Northampton September 2nd and 3rd.

Eno Donald Washington danced a prologue before the dance suites choreographed by Ramos. In response to the anklet bells and congas beckoning from drummer Chris Henderson of Unity Ensemble, Eno with his belt of bells followed Kwaku Gyata playing an Ethiopian drum in a processional to the performance area. The vociferous congas calling to the bass drum, the dynamics of tempo between the rhythms and the hieroglyphic ritual being painted in space by the dance provided artistic movement and music from its African context. Eno's spiraling jumps, a floor spanning leap, strong and concise movements of great variety created the initial excitement that prevailed from thereon.

"Here Now" from BLUES MONTAGE by Ramos, combined a photo Montage prepared by photographer Edward Cohen featuring his own works and those of James Van DerZee, Fitz Walker and Eugene Smith. Sounds were from the Art Ensemble of Chicago. Yves Toussaint mirrored the human condition that gave rise to Malcolm's voice. As Malcolm's portrait faded, Toussaint rode a dialectic, falling and rising. Throughout the performance he merged dance and theatrics into definite imprints.

Patti O'Neal danced a wrenching agony to "This Child's Gotta Live". O'Neal conceived this dance for an anti-sterilization benefit. Eloquently, Beretha Redding sang a bluesy rendition of gospel and lullaby. Judyie Brandt recited improvisationally from Langston Hughes' "The Negro Speaks Rivers" and from Sarah Wright's "This Child's Gonna Live". Playing conga, Ramos pierced the choral of wailing with her own voice. Perhaps the audience wanted more of a sense of victory as O'Neal's sisters led her off.

In "Mary Alice" adapted from Edgar White's LES FEMMES NOIRES, Judyie Brandt played a cripple. She momentarily dreams that she can dance — the same way that the lifeless forms whom she witnesses on the subway emerging at 125th St., sees sunlight with children's eyes, only for a second. In another monologue from FOR COLORED GIRLS WHO HAVE CONSIDERED SUICIDE WHEN THE RAINBOW IS ENUF by Ntozake Shange, Brandt disclosed the real thoughts of a Black woman. Confidently with convincing gestures she portrayed each woman.

Diana Ramos, dancing solo in "Kathleen II", flailed an imprisoning space. Her faces moved like shadows while the thunder of a confined mind possessed each movement.

She lapsed into a slow motion unconsciousness which led to a prolonged open-mouthed scream and to the concluding crucifixion posture.

To "Blk People and Changes", a poem by John Williams, Ramos diverged from the introspective to a vibrant dance expressionism. After Williams unfolded progressions between man and woman, he revealed changes that sour into an "unnecessary dance". He did not leave the audience there. Reciting resonantly, with imagery of new life, he sparked Ramos with, ".... we be dancing again". Her white skirt billowed. Arches curved like smiles and sunlight was the mood to the exuberantly lifting piano suite by Marion Brown.

In "The Blues Ain't", a homage to Duke Ellington, Patti O'Neal and Yves Toussaint in solo and duet danced to an urban pace and in costuming of an imaginary night life. Ellington and the span of history that he conveyed in his music, though part of the presence, was not strictly interpreted. O'Neal, dancing with thoughtful restraint, unmasked a smile during the conclusion of this suite.

Diana Ramos successfully synthesized the textures of Black music, photographic images and dance forms into an energizing dance concert.

She, along with ensemble dancers, guests, musicians and technicians, were warmly applauded by the standing-room-only-audience.

Holiday weekend darkened for many

By JOE MAGLITTA

and The Associated Press

Torrential rains and severe lightning ripped through the Pioneer Valley last night, causing extensive flooding and electrical blackouts in Northampton and nine area towns.

Other local police last night reported minor automobile accidents, while the national weekend death toll reached 388, and Massachusetts' three.

Northampton police at midnight said about half the city lost power for over three hours starting at 8:18 last night. The failures were caused by lightning striking transformers and wires being knocked down, they said.

In addition, Northampton police said they received numerous reports of flooded cellars, overflowing storm drains and sewers, marooned cars, dangling live power wires, and one report of a house being struck by lightning.

No serious injuries were reported.

More than half of all the city's burglar alarms were activated by lightning strikes and flooding, police said.

The Northampton police said streets all over the city flooded, causing many motorists to abandon their cars.

"Any street with a dip in it, there were cars. The North St. underpass, Main St., any street, you name it, there were cars stuck there," police said.

Two minor automobile accidents were reported to Northampton police. Power failures also occurred in Florence, and Leeds and Bay State sections of the city, police said.

Police said they received the first emergency calls at 8:18. Most calls had stopped by "around 11", they said.

Power failures were also reported in Williamsburg, and Goshen, according to a spokesperson from Mass. Electric Co.

Northampton Fire Department also reported a 13,000 volt wire knocked over in the vicinity of Smith College.

At least three people were killed on Massachusetts highways over the weekend, according to the AP.

In Medfield, Richard Cushing, 19, was killed and two other youths were seriously injured Saturday night when their car went out of control and struck two utility poles.

Attorney Juris Udris, 45, of Concord a partner in the Boston law firm of Goodwin, Proctor and Hoar, was killed Friday night in Orange in a three-car crash on Rte. 2.

Kenneth Doehler, 18, of Fall River, was killed Saturday morning when his car collided with a truck on Rte. 106 in Easton.

William Castine, 15, of Merrimac, Mass., died Saturday night in New Hampshire when he apparently lost his footing on Cathedral Ledge in Bartlett and fell 300 feet.

Traffic was reported medium to heavy on all major Massachusetts highways and cars were backed up a short distance on Cape Cod at the approaches to the Bourne and Sagamore bridges, but state police said there were few serious delays.

One major exception was on Interstate 91, the major north-south route in the Pioneer Valley from Vermont to Connecticut, where cars were reported bumper-to-bumper between Holyoke and Northampton.

The jam apparently was caused by the combination of homebound vacationers and visitors to the Tri-County Fair in Northampton, where Labor Day harness racing was reported a big attraction.

The state police at the Northampton substation last night said no fatal accidents were reported to the station this weekend by troopers patrolling the area highways.

Eight injuries, however, were reported to the Northampton barracks since Friday night.

In accidents yesterday along Rte 191, state police said one driver in a two car collision was cited for bald tires. State police attributed both accidents to the heavy rains.

Joseph Kilian, of Danbury, Conn., was cited by state police for driving with bald tires after the car he was driving collided in the rear of a car which slowed down for traffic along the southbound lane.

Neither he or George A. Schrieder of New Haven, the other driver, were injured, state police said.

Housing problem almost solved

By LAWRENCE UCHMANOWICZ
Collegian Staff

The problem of where to house the additional students this fall is almost resolved, according to Jerry Quarrles, assisting housing coordinator for the University.

Noon today is the deadline for no-show students to claim their room in the residence halls; any student not picking up their assignment by then will lose the room.

Quarrles also said that most of the students in temporary assisgnments are now in residence halls. All that is left is 162 men in the Campus Center Hotel. He added that with the no-shows tomorrow, there should be no problem housing the remaining men.

At the peak of the overcrowding there were about 190 persons living in the Campus Center Hotel, 150 in fraternities and sororities, and about 65 in dorm lounges and private residences.

To help ease the housing pressure on the dorms, the Off Campus Housing Office last week began to hand out on-campus housing exemptions to juniors who had a place to live off campus.

Joanne Levenson, coordinator of the Off Campus Housing Office, yesterday said the market for off campus housing is tight, but there is still some housing available.

Most of the places left, she said, are either expensive or four-person apartments with only three residents looking for a fourth roommate.

Although the University expects to clear up the housing shortage today, the students in the Campus Center must be out by Sunday, because a conference is booked for the hotel this weekend.

The overcrowding is not just limited to UMass-Amherst either. Overcrowding has been reported at Boston University, Boston College, Northeastern, M.I.T., Tufts, Brown, Brandies University, and several other schools around the country, according to The Boston Globe.

One of the hardest hit schools, The Globe said, is Boston University, where the overflow of students reached 600.

To make sure there are no empty beds overlooked, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury yesterday said there will be another room check by the Housing Office today so that students left without an assignment can receive a room.

Ribicoff, Percy urge resignation of Lance...

WASHINGTON [AP] — The leaders of a Senate committee investigating budget director Bert Lance's financial affairs yesterday told President Carter they have uncovered new allegations "of such a serious nature" that Lance should resign.

Sens. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., both said they felt it was in the former Georgia banker's own interest that he resign. They did not disclose the allegations.

Bert Lance

There was no immediate response from Lance, who has been under investigation for his activities as head of two Georgia banks and for large overdrafts on his family's checking accounts.

Carter gave no indication that he planned to press for the resignation of his budget director.

The White House issued a statement after the 40-minute meeting saying only that the President was pleased Ribicoff's Senate Governmental Affairs Committee would resume its hearings without delay on Wednesday.

Ribicoff said he and Percy asked for the meeting "to bring to the President's attention allegations of illegality of serious enough nature that we felt an obligation to tell the President of our findings."

Ribicoff confirmed that three committee investigators had talked with a man serving an eight-year prison term for embezzling $1 million from Lance's Calhoun First National Bank.

The Atlanta Constitution yesterday reported that the convict, Billy Lee Campbell, had signed an affidavit implicating Lance in his criminal activities.

Lance, contacted at his vacation retreat in Sea Island, Ga. earlier yesterday denied any involvement in Campbell's criminal activities.

Ribicoff said the full panel would be brief on the allegations today. He also said the committee would decide then whether Lance would testify this week as scheduled.

Percy, the committee's ranking minority member, said the investigation may have to be expanded.

"My personal feeling is that a special prosecutor should be appointed," said Percy.

"It would be wiser for Bert Lance to resign," said Ribicoff. "I don't think Bert Lance can be an effective budget director pending the hearings and pending the investigation of all the allegations."

The White House issued a statement saying that Carter had met with the senators to be briefed on their plans to resume the hearings.

...as troubles mount

WASHINGTON [AP] — A House banking panel is summoning two top federal bank examiners to answer questions about the thoroughness of their probe of Budget Director Bert Lance's financial affairs.

The one-day hearing today by a House banking subcommittee is meant to be a review of banking laws, but the key witnesses are deeply involved in the original Lance investigation.

Among them are Robert A. Bloom, acting Comptroller of the Currency when Lance was confirmed as budget director; Donald L. Tarleton, administrator of the Atlanta region, and officers of the two Georgia banks Lance has headed.

The hearing is just the start of a new round of congressional inquiries for Lance. The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee plans to hold several days of hearings on the matter starting Wednesday, when both houses return from a month-long summer recess.

Meanwhile, the Atlanta Constitution reported Monday that a man serving an eight-year prison term for embezzling $1 million from Lance's Calhoun First National Bank has signed an affidavit implicating Lance in his activities.

Watergater Liddy, still silent, ends four-year jail term tomorrow

DANBURY, Conn. [AP] — After 52½ months in prison, G. Gordon Liddy is going home tomorrow, still holding the secrets of the Watergate burglary that he masterminded. Because of his silence, he has served more time than anyone convicted in Watergate or Watergate-related cases.

"He's in good spirits, very strong, just the same as always," said his wife, Frances, in a telephone interview from her Oxon Hill, Md., home where she is busy readying the house for his homecoming. She said she last visited him nearly two weeks ago. She will be waiting for him at the Federal Correctional Institution at Danbury.

His attorney, Peter Maroulis, who visited him last week, said, "Gordon hasn't said one word about Watergate."

Maroulis described Liddy, 46, as "looking fine, healthy and relaxed."

"He looks athletically good," said Maroulis. "He is in good physical shape. He looks better than when he went in. He was heavier. His hair is cut short and he still has his mustache. He has been working in the food service section of the prison."

But there is one more piece of business for Liddy before he walks through the medium-security prison, with its walls and guard towers, to freedom and the five teen-aged children he's missed growing up.

He must appear in Williamsport, Pa., this afternoon to take a pauper's oath before a U.S. magistrate and seek a delayed installment payment of a $40,000 fine. The fine was part of his original sentence of six years and eight months to 20 years on six counts of conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping.

"He's broke," said Maroulis, who filed pauper's papers last July in the Middle District Court of Pennsylvania, six months after Liddy was transferred from Danbury to the minimum security facility at Allenwood, Pa., which has neither walls nor guard towers and is much closer to his home.

But two weeks ago, he was returned to Danbury as a disciplinary measure, "suspected of intimidating others" during a food boycott at Allenwood, according to Superintendent Elden Jenson.

Jenson said Liddy, who frequently championed prisoners' rights as a jailhouse lawyer, had a pipe and wood club concealed behind the headpost of his bed. But Jenson added that the weapons were there for protection and should not be considered in a review of his parole.

Joseph A. Nardoza, commissioner of the U.S. Parole Board office in Philadelphia, said any delay in his parole because of the boycott would have been unjust.

"Liddy is not the average man," said Nardoza. "He doesn't have a history of violence, and no prior record. He served enough. I don't think Liddy is going to be a risk to society. He paid his debt, and all he wants to do is go back home and pick up the pieces of his life."

It has been a long wait for Mrs. Liddy, who has run the household on her salary as an elementary school teacher in Washington, D.C. The children are growing up fast and perhaps leaving too soon. Daughter Sandy, 18, the oldest, is a student at the University of Maryland. Grace, 17, is completing high school. James, Thomas and Raymond also are in school.

Liddy's determination not to discuss the aborted burglary at the Democratic National Committee Headquarters in 1972 cost him an additional 18 months in jail. A judge imposed the additional prison time when Liddy refused to testify under immunity to a federal grand jury.

The one-time counsel to former President Richard Nixon's re-election committee, Liddy once told former White House counsel John Dean that he would allow himself to be shot on the street by a sniper if there was concern that he would talk.

His silence carried to the point that in 1973 he refused even to give his name to a House committee investigating Watergate. He was convicted after a half-day trial on two counts of refusing to testify before a congressional committee and received a suspended six-month sentence.

Liddy reportedly owes thousands of dollars in legal fees for unsuccessful appeals that carried all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which refused to hear his case.

But last April, President Carter reduced his sentence to a maximum eight years, saying, "It has been made to appear that the ends of justice do not require that the aforesaid sentence be served in its entirety."

Until Carter's commutation, which came two months after Mrs. Liddy met with Presidential Counsel Robert Lipshutz, Liddy was not eligible for parole until May 1981. Carter's action made him eligible for parole two months ago, but the Parole Board fixed the date for Sept. 7.

Liddy has been in prison since Jan. 30, 1973, except for 99 days in late 1974 and early 1975 when he was appealing his case.

He is the last of the seven burglary squad members to be released from prison. The others served less time because they cooperated with prosecutors.

"The sold themselves for less time," Liddy once said. "I don't do that."

Liddy faces an uncertain future. He has been disbarred as an attorney.

Gang youths blamed in San Francisco murders

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] — Three gunmen who killed five persons in a sudden attack on a crowded Chinatown restaurant were revenge-minded gang youths aiming their bullets at rival gang members, police reported yesterday.

However, none of the dead was known to associate with the roaming gangs that have terrorized the famed tourist area during the past seven years.

Lt. Daniel Murphy said informants have told officers that the masked assailants who opened fire in the Golden Dragon restaurant early Sunday were members of a gang consisting mostly of foreign-born Chinese.

Their targets were members of the Chung Ching Yee gang, a group consisting mostly of American-born Chinese followers of Joe Fong, Murphy said the police was told by sources.

Fong, a reputed former gang leader, was convicted of conspiracy to commit murder in 1973 and is now serving a 10-year-to-life sentence in state prison.

Police received the information about the gangs after Chief Charles Gain criticized the Chinese-American community for "an absolute abdication of responsibility" in helping officers solve the crime.

"This is a tragedy we are constantly faced with. Chinese persons will not talk to police," Gain said.

Murphy said the killing may have been in retaliation for the July 4 murder of a member of the rival gang. That death was the 39th attributed by police to gang warfare in Chinatown since 1970.

The gunmen were aiming at two tables located at the east and west ends of the large dining room where the gang members were eating, Murphy said.

Most of the 16 people struck by gunfire were sitting near those two tables, he said.

Four of the dead were identified as Donald Kwan, about 20, Calvin Michael Fong, 18, Paul Wada, 25, and a waiter, Fong Wog, 48.

Massachusetts youth dies in fall from N.H. ledge

NORTH CONWAY, N.H. [AP] — New Hampshire State Police are investigating the death of a 15-year-old Massachusetts youth who fell 300 feet from Cathedral Ledge, apparently while trying to flee from a policeman who discovered a teen-aged drinking party.

The victim was identified as William Castine of Merrimack, Mass.

The youth was believed to be "trying to escape from the policeman" who encountered several carloads of teen-agers at a drinking party at the popular scenic overlook at about 10:30 p.m. Saturday.

A state trooper said the state police were requested to investigate because of the death.

A state police dispatcher said as Bartlett Police Officer Alan Eastman approached the teenagers, he saw a group of young people looking over the guardrail at the top of the ledge.

The dispatcher said the youths told the officer that Castine had stepped over the rail and fallen.

The youth's body was found later at the base of the rock wall. Officials said he died of massive head injuries.

Cathedral Ledge has been frequented by under-aged youths in recent weeks for drinking parties, police said.

Carter's energy plan... the Senate will decide

WASHINGTON [AP] — As Congress goes into the final phase of its 1977 session this week, it will be up to the Senate to decide whether President Carter's first year will see his top priority proposal enacted — a comprehensive energy bill.

The Senate Democratic leadership is prepared to sidetrack most other legislation to work out the inevitable disputes aroused by the complex legislation.

Before the two chambers left for a month-long summer recess that ends Wednesday, the House passed its version. It achieved a major compromise on the hardest-fought issue, pricing of natural gas. Proponents of an immediate end to government price control lost when the House approved a gradual increase in price. The fight will be renewed in the Senate.

Democratic leaders of both House and Senate are pledged to seeing the energy bill through. But House Democratic Whip John Brademas of Indiana would not predict flatly that the bill will be passed and the differences between Senate and House versions reconciled in the remaining six to eight weeks of this year's session.

"Powerful senators with strong views are at loggerheads," Brademas said in an interview. "It all depends on the extent to which senators can work out an agreement among themselves."

Some pending legislation cannot be set aside. A $60.2-billion appropriations for the educational, health and social programs of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has been held up by Senate-House disagreement on federal fundings of abortions for women on Medicaid. The House version would permit funding only in cases where the woman's life was threatened. The Senate provision is broader. Conferees must try again.

Another appropriation difference is expected to be settled more easily.

The House included in a $110-billion measure for defense funding $1.4 billion for a start on B1 bomber production. Carter later recommended this be dropped and the Senate went along. The House is expected to agree.

The House, with the main energy debate behind it, is likely to pass more major legislation, even if Senate action will have to await 1978.

Among the bills with fair to good chances of House passage are an increase in the minimum wage from $2.30 to $2.65 an hour and a measure to curb Medicare and Medicaid abuses.

Committees in both Houses begin work promptly on legislation to bolster the financing of Social Security, now threatened with exhaustion of its reserves by 1983.

Diplomats arrive for signing of canal treaty

WASHINGTON [AP] — Latin American leaders began arriving yesterday for the signing of the Panama Canal treaties as the Carter administration prepared for three days of ceremonies, receptions, public oratory and private diplomatic give-and-take.

President Carter returned from his weekend vacation retreat at Camp David, Md., ready for a meeting Tuesday with the other protagonist in this week's activities, Panamanian head of government Gen. Omar Torrijos.

Torrijos led a Panamanian delegation of more than 100 for the Wednesday evening ceremoney at which the Panama Canal treaties will be signed at the headquarters of the Organization of American States.

Nineteen other heads of government from Latin America also were expected, and Carter planned to meet with all of them between Tuesday and Thursday. All told, delegations from 27 countries were expected.

Court-ordered busing: will racial tension ease in Boston this fall?

'The greatest weakness of the parent movement is its lack of sensitivity to the effects of racism."
—Boston's Citywide Coordinating Committee

BOSTON [UPI] — Racial tension seems to have eased somewhat in this birthplace of the American revolution that in the mid-1970s became a citadel of violent resistance to school desegregation.

As Boston begins its fourth year of court-ordered busing to achieve school desegregation, many residents apparently have decided to "live and let live."

While some antibusing groups are predicting resistance will be stronger than ever this fall, particularly in predominantly Irish-Catholic South Boston, many authorities feel 1977 may be a turning point.

"We have found reason for cautious optimism," says the 15-member Citywide Coordinating Committee, a group of business, civic and higher education leaders.

In a report to U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity, architect of the desegregation plans, the CCC said:

"The long-standing pattern of abuse of the constitutional rights of black children which the U.S. District Court found in 1974 has by no means been removed root and branch."

Yet, the report added, Boston's public schools "have achieved a significant measure of stability and are on the road toward becoming a desegregated system.

"We believe there is cause for optimism, cautious and guarded, but optimism nonetheless."

Mrs. Eleanor McDonough, a parent involved in the Racial Ethnic Parents Countil at her child's school, said, "The live and let live attitude seems to have taken over.

"People are beginning to accept it."

Boston was the scene of fighting in the hallways, classrooms and streets when desegregation by busing was launched on Garrity's directive in 1974.

Mothers marched in protests, hundreds of pupils left the public schools and honking convoys of antibusing demonstrators wormed through downtown and residential streets.

So what can Boston expect this year?

Old ways die hard and, despite a general surrender to the inevitable, most observers and officials agree there will be some fighting, some racial harassment or some jeering and name-calling, though perhaps not as serious as in years past.

The summer was relatively free of racial violence, except for the almost-expected hot weather clashes between blacks and whites at Carson Beach in South Boston.

About 76,000 students are expected to register in the public schools this year, a big drop from the 92,000 in 1973.

There will be some resistance from the groups that have fought the plans all along.

"I would think that it's resistance going to be stronger than ever," said James Kelly of the South Boston Information Center, a focal point of antibusing sentiment.

In early August, Virginia Sheehy and Rita Graul, two of the most vocal opponents of busing, resigned from the executive board of the Information Center. Graul said it was to open seats on the board "for younger blood."

Both said they were remaining in the antibusing group, ROAR.

Kelly said South Boston resisters are heartened by what they perceive to be a growing sentiment in Congress for a constitutional amendment outlawing busing.

He is also encouraged by three recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions suggesting busing is not a viable means of achieving desegregation.

The CCC paints an otherwise bleak picture of the school system, but says implementation of the desegregation plans have "irreversibly set the school department on a forward-moving course."

Legionnaires disease hits, officials ponder outbreak

COLUMBUS, Ohio [AP] — Officials worried by the most serious outbreak of Legionnaires disease since it was identified in Philadelphia last year are re-evaluating recent pneumonia diagnoses and may have found a fifth victim here within a month.

Dr. John Ackerman, Ohio's health director, said yesterday a 65-year-old woman now in Riverside Hospital, where four other cases were reported, is being tested to see if she has Legionnaires disease.

Her case, which was termed serious, had been thought at first to be a common form of pneumonia.

"The chances are the disease has been in the community, the area and around the country and gone undetected for a number of years," Ackerman said.

So far, Legionnaires disease has been confirmed in the cases of a 56-year-old Columbus woman who died, two other women who are hospitalized, and a fourth woman who recovered and was sent home.

As part of an effort to re-analyze recent pneumonia deaths at Riverside and other hospitals in the area, state and federal health officials yesterday were flying blood samples to the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Testing for antibodies in the blood of Legionnaires disease victims takes about three days, officials say. The center, meanwhile, had sent two specialists to Ohio to lead the investigation.

Legionnaires disease is a respiratory infection caused by an unnamed bacterium that was isolated after 29 of about 180 persons stricken with the disease died during or after an American Legion convention in Philadelphia in July 1976.

The disease may go undetected because the symptoms are nearly identical to pneumonia. Officials say about 15 per cent of the cases are fatal, but even serious cases can be successfully treated with antibiotics if discovered in time.

Voyageur 1 blasts off

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. [AP] — Voyager 1 blasted off toward the outer planets yesterday in a near-flawless launch, joining its twin space probe Voyager 2 on a 675-million-mile journey to Jupiter and beyond.

"We have a successful flight in every respect," project manager John Casani said after the Voyager's picture-perfect blastoff aboard a Titan-Centaur rocket in bright blue skies and sunny weather.

It was the second launch in a $500-million program designed to provide valuable new information about the creation of the universe, the origins of the solar system and the formation of planet Earth.

Although it was sent up second, Voyager 1 is scheduled to reach Jupiter in March 1979 — about four months before Voyager 2, which was fired Aug. 20. Voyager 1 will overtake its twin because it is flying a more direct route.

The science and camera booms on Voyager 1 extended and locked into place about one hour after launch, dispelling fears that the ship might experience problems with the gear that had plagued its twin.

The second launch had been delayed five days to give project scientists time to analyze Voyager 2's problems and install extra springs on the locking apparatus of Voyager 1's research booms.

Casani said that since the trouble on Voyager 2 was discovered and corrected, it too is "working fine and healthy in every respect."

Both probes will conduct extensive scientific studies of Jupiter, Saturn, and Saturn's rings. Scientists say the spacecraft could function for 30 years, so one may be sent on to Uranus, Neptune and beyond. It would reach Uranus, some 1.8 billion miles from Earth, in 1986. Neptune, more than 2.5 billion miles away, may be reached in 1989.

The camera on Voyager 1 will be activated in about a month but research transmissions are not expected until December 1978.

Both Voyagers will send back pictures of the planets, measure the atmosphere, the magnetic field, cosmic rays and density.

Reorganizing higher education

Judging from Governor Michael Dukakis' recent efforts to reform both the higher education and judicial systems in Massachusetts, he may well be remembered as the states "Imperial Governor" long after his reign is over.

Dukakis' game plan in both areas has been to first show the need for and then request greater control over the bureaucracies involved, in the name of increased efficiency. Yet while there seems little doubt of the need for streamlining, and although more centralized, hierarchical control may be one way to achieve that goal, Dukakis' proposals — at least regarding higher education — present more of a threat than an improvement.

The plan for reorganizing higher education was released on August 24 as a draft called the "Working Paper on Public Higher Education", a 90-page document highlighting what Dukakis and State Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks view as the problems of and solutions for higher education in the state.

The first and perhaps most important objection to the plan can be levied without even having seen the document. The plan was released soon after the state legislature voted to set up a study commission to research the very issue of reorganizing higher education. To what extent the governor's articulated wishes will influence the commission remains to be seen, but Dukakis' timing was at best inappropriate. In addition, no student input was requested in formulating the plan.

The proposal itself can be criticized on the grounds that it represents a rather direct attack on the autonomy of the state's institutions of higher learning. Dukakis is particularly intent upon gaining more control ooer education budgets, and repeatedly insists that a closer administrative budget review does not conflict with the fiscal autonomy of the institutions. But in fact it does, and what Dukakis claims is an attempt to resolve the conflict by granting his branch of government budget review powers is actually an attempt to lean the situation in his favor. The plan would further weaken public higher education's self-defense by eliminating the position of one of its chief spokespersons, the UMass president, as the university would be divided according to campus location into three separate institutions with three separate presidents.

An additional objection could be raised to the proposal's general vision of higher education after reorganization. Reading the document brings to mind a corporation-like educational system, where professors and resources are shuffled and allocated according to student "demand". Dukakis' old hope of providing the most marketable education at the least cost to his voters is finally put into concrete terms with this proposal.

Such a concept of higher education and its role, in and of itself, is neither irresponsible nor unnecessary. Education must be responsive to changing student and public needs, and, alas, to the whims and fancies of the job market. What is irresponsible is that the governor ignores the other, equally crucial side of the argument — that of academics from the point of view of the academician. Dukakis never seems cognizant of any value to education other than that which appears on the bottom lines of budget sheets.

While state legislators may find much to disagree with in the proposal, students should not sit idle and hope for the best. Rather, they should make it clear that the governor's ideas about the university's future are not shared by those who will be most affected by them.

The reading list

By MARK WILDING

Miles Fitzhugh, the University of Massachusett's best known and most lauded English professor, turned to the final page of his latest literary acquisition, read intently for the span of a minute, closed the book, took a sip from his third bourbon and branchwater that afternoon, and laid down his copy of Southern Call Girl. A bizarre ending he thought, closely resembling Spillane's The Twisted Thing, except that Mike Hammer had discovered the couple wallowing in a great van of stewed ginseng, and not Tigers milk. He was wondering if his wife would agree to act out chapter two when her voice thundered forth from the kitchen to inform him that supper would be ready in five minutes.

Miles crawled out of the hammock, picked up Southern Call Girl, and, fondling the flap, crossed over the porch to his study. He placed the book on his "just read" shelf next to his hard bound copy of Bloody Sunrise, Louis L'Amour's Sore-But not from the Saddle, Carl Jonas' The Truth about Dracula, and Philip Roth's The Breast.

Turning to his "Must Read" shelf he debated which one he should read first. It boiled down to three choices really: Coffee, Tea, or Me, My Search for Patty Hearst, or Italian Women Confess. He was about to close his eyes and leave the pick to chance when his wife's voice cried from the kitchen that his dinner was on the table. He acquiesced and went into dinner.

Miles Fitzhugh, the University of Massachusetts' best known and most lauded English professor, turned to the final page of his latest literary acquisition, read intently for the span of a minute, closed the book, took a sip from his third bourbon and branchwater that afternoon, and laid down his copy of Southern Call Girl.

"Any calls dear?" he asked.

"Yes darling, a couple from students wanting to know what books they'll have to get for your course. "The role of self in contemporary Anglo-American masterpieces, past and present."

"What? Are they on my back already? School doesn't start for a week."

"Honestly Miles, it shouldn't take more than an hour to put together a reading list for them."

"Oh, I almost forgot. There's a package for you from Rawhide Press. I put it on your dresser drawers."

"Ah it must be that Russian authors latest."

After dinner Miles adjourned to his study, gathered up some typing paper, and typed out:

Reading list — The role of self in contemporary Anglo-American masterpieces, past and present.

T.S. Eliot — "The Wasteland".
W.H. Auden — City Without Walls and Other Poems
Evyln Waugh — Decline and Fall
James Joyce — Ulysses and Finnegans Wake
Virginia Wolfe — To the Lighthouse
Theodore Dreiser — An American Tragedy
Ernest Hemingway — All Quiet on the Western Front
William Faulkner — Light in August

This is just a partial list of the reading. The reading load for this course is very heavy. What you put into this course you will get out of it!

Pleased with himself on finally having wrung out the reading list Miles celebrated with a highball. After a long hot shower he slipped into bed, propped up his pillows, and reached for his package. Then, like a happy child at Christmas, who knows Santa has had the foresight and wherewithal to give him just what he wanted, Miles tore off the brown paper and settled down with wide-eyed delight to read The Sputnik Rapist.

Bringing a little sunshine to inner-city kids

To the Editor:

Life is hectic during these early September days. Soon though, our scheduling difficulties will be rectified, housing dilemmas will be solved and our lives will become less hectic. Unfortunately though, the everyday lives of some inner-city Springfield children do not become less confusing as the school year progresses. These children are plagued with individual scholastic problems and are unable to cope with the pace of their new class. Often a combination of companionship, love, and tutorial services are all that are required to turn these students into happier kids.

The Northjrn Educational Services [N.E.S.] is an R.S.O. program which has successfully brought a little sunshine into the lives of these children in past semesters. Hopefully, N.E.S. will be as effective this semester as it has been in the past. N.E.S. is a volunteer program with credit available to those involved. There are four community centers in Springfield which provide both tutorial services and companionship to these children. Each center is designed to aid different age groups and different problems. The pulse of the centers absolutely beats with the kids' enthusiasm to learn and to be friends.

N.E.S. is a giving experience on both ends. It is probable that in a couple of weeks you'll want an occasional diversion from the study-party routine. Please think about sharing a part of your week with kids who wait anxiously for the UMass bus to arrive at their center. If you are interested in the program or need more information t about the individual centers, please contact me at 546-1457 or contact the N.E.S. office located at 403 S.U.B.

Political rhetoric and the 'formative' years

By JERRY ROGERS

Just like Wonder Bread helps us to build strong bodies twelve ways while we pass through our physiologically formative years, rhetoric helps us to build strongly held beliefs during our politically formative years.

And the four years or so we spend attaining a higher education are four of the most influential years in establishing some kind of personal political identity extracted from the political flux that accompanies the onset of our right to vote.

Of course, political beliefs formation does not start around the end of our second decade of life, but much earlier. Most everyone goes through the process of following the beliefs of parents or other hero-role fillers, through the realization that politics is individual and right on up to the four years we are living out now.

And this year there promises to be plenty of politicking and plenty of spoken rhetoric passed off as politically formative discussion in our potentially fine working model of real life politics — the Student Government Association.

The resignation of the University administration's president, the onset of the first collective bargaining sessions between the faculty and the administration, and the potential reorganizations of both higher education statewide and the SGA will increase the flow of rhetoric and yield political battle.

The groups involved in these changing scenes range from the students, faculty, administration and staff of the University campus to the state administration-executive branch, state house representatives and senators and, ultimately, the taxpayers and residents of the state itself.

However, students are the only group that does not and cannot participate effectively in the mediation of disputes between any two or more of these groups. For even if students are directly affected by a subject of mediation between any other groups tied to higher education, they have neither the money nor the numbers to wield enough power to be invited to participate. (While it is true that the number of students is great they often do not act with enough independent unity of purpose to be a force that has to be reckoned with.)

Usually, students could therefore look to a confusing year with many setbacks to be suffered by them as a class — what with major personnel changes, two potential reorganizations and the more solidly united power wielding administration and the faculty union.

However, this may not be a usual year. The potential reorganization of the SGA can only be viewed as the single most important step toward the formation of the long sought Student Union. The democracy inherent in the guarantee of participatory power for every student is far more positive in intent than the alleged representative democracy of the present Student Senate. In the past few years, we have seen too much evidence to ignore that indicates the senate will remain essentially powerless as a bargaining agent for the student body, and will remain a political squabbling ground if it is not reorganized.

Unfortunately the obstructionist rhetoric has already begun to flow — from those student leaders who can't see the singularly honest and democratic intent of reorg, and from the paternalistic administration.

Chancellor Bromery himself has time and again warned both students and faculty of his concern for the potential ramifications of unionization. And it seems about right that he should fear the ramifications of faculty and student empowerment to a level equal to that of his administration.

And the rhetoric of the SGA co-presidents, Jon Hlte and Marion "Pinky" Batiste should also be quickly discounted. Batiste would have the studen body remain "coherent" rather than see itself empowered; unfortunately, coherency does not get students a place at the bargaining table where our education is being dissected. And Pinky's partner (almost laughingly) questions whether a union guaranteeing students direct participation in their own governance will deliver them services as forthrightly as the SGA — a body in which delivering services to students constantly is flung about as a political battling point and in which effective delivery most often gets tied up in political process.

Formative students will most likely see the absurdity of the positions of these leaders though and have their student senators vote for SGA reorg and empowerment.

Foster seniors for the homeless freshpeople?

By BOB MELIA

What do you do when your admissions office and your housing office have cooperated to leave 400 freshpersons homeless? The administration hasn't quite figured out the answer and I'm sure the problem has given migraines to a dozen denizens of Whitmore. Normally I'd be content to leave them with their own problems, but as I don't own any stock in pharmaceutical corporations I'm going to suggest a solution.

Actually the credit must go to a friend of mind, Fred Slegne. I can't decide if his idea is brilliantly simple or simply brilliant, (I suspect the former — Fred's a P.E. major) but it's certainly worth considering.

Fred thinks seniors living off-campus ought to adopt these poor, homeless freshpeople, and his idea has merit. First impressions are very important, and as apartment living is much more desirable than living four to a room in the Campus Center, Fred's plan will result in 400 people being more kindly disposed towards UMass. (And that will be useful in 1984 when Gov. Wood cuts the budget and Whitmore has to ask those 400 alumni for contributions so the dorms can be heated.)

I told Fred his plan was nice but couldn't work because of two major problems. First, such a simple solution would make the administration look stupid for not having thought of it themselves, and second, most seniors would be understandably reluctant to share their apartments with total strangers. Fred solved both problems with a single stroke of genius.

"Make it a course," he said. "Call it Introduction to Middle-Age Blues. It will be invaluable experience for the seniors because they will know 20 years in advance what it's like to raise a teenager. Give them three easy credits and they'll be waiting in line to adopt a freshperson."

"Brilliant!" I said. "Not only will the seniors be happy but the administration will look good. Instead of being blamed for mismanaging the housing situation, they can take credit for creating an innovative program."

"The possibilities are endless," Slegne said excitedly. "They could create a whole new major, Life Cycle Awareness. As a freshman you get adopted, as a sophomore you're an older brother or sister, when you're a junior you're a parent and finally you're a grandparent in your senior year. In 20 years the whole family structure could be revolutionized."

Just then a sudden thought hit me. "It can't be done," I said. "It's suicidal."

"What do you mean suicidal?" Slegne demanded.

"If Whitmore implements one simple, sensible and intelligent solution, they will be under tremendous pressure to institute other simple, sensible and intelligent solutions. And if they do, there will be no more aggravation and no more layers of bureaucracy to do things in circles. In short, there will be no more Whitmore."

Slegne took it better than I feared he might. "Oh well," he said, "I've got to go. I've got a check to cash and a class in an hour and if I get over to the Bursar's right away I just might make it.

Tiny Cocos Islands want independence or bucks

By PHILIP WEST

The diplomatic battle for influence in the Indian Ocean has reached the tiny Cocos Islands and their self-styled ruler, John Clunies-Ross, also known as King Ross V.

In recent talks with Clunies-Ross, the Australian government agreed to bargain on how much it will pay the "King" to abdicate his throne and allow the islanders — and the islands — to become a part of Australia.

Clunies-Ross has made it plain that if he is not adequately compensated, he will appeal to the British crown and the international court to stop Australia's annexation plans.

Several years ago, Australia offered Clunies-Ross nearly $4 million for the 27 coral atolls. He refused and reportedly demanded up to $22.5 million.

The Australians claim they want to buy the islands and give citizenship to the approximately 350 islanders, mostly Malays brought in to work the copra.

Some western diplomatic observers believe the Australians want something more than simple democracy for the islands. The main island has a jet landing strip capable of handling a 707 and is strategically located almost halfway between the American naval and air base at Diego Garcia island and the West Australian coast.

Thus, the Cocos could become a link in the sensitive communications and intelligence network of the U.S., Australians and the British.

Australia recently fueled such rumors by announcing it would subsidize any islander wishing to emigrate to Australia. If a military base is developed there, the main island would presumably have to be evacuated of all civilians, as was done at Diego Garcia.

The islanders now live in the same feudal style that has prevailed since Clunies-Ross' forefathers were granted perpetual title to the islands by Queen Victoria in 1886. Education for the islanders is limited to a few hours a day. They are paid in plastic tokens that can be cashed only at the stores run by Clunies-Ross.

While the United Nations has demanded self-determination for the islanders, the Australians have suggested a local council under the federal government.

Clunies-Ross appears to have outsmarted them with legal advice. He is not contesting on the grounds of land title, but only "on the right for these people here to decide what they want." He evidently believes the islanders will opt for self-control and frustrate Australia's claim.

In the meantime, the "Cocos King" is preparing to celebrate the 150 anniversary of his family's rule. He recently received an order of commemorative gold coins, which he expects to sell for a nice profit to coin collectors.

'Mad Women of Plaza' - a search for the missing

EDITOR'S NOTE — At least 2,000 persons have disappeared in Argentina this year in a continuing wave of violence, according to human rights organizations. Now the mothers, daughters and sisters of the victims are banding together to try to do something about it. Here is a report on "The Mad Women of the Plaza" and their campaign.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina [AP] — It is early afternoon. Slowly, almost timidly, the women begin arriving at the city's main square, Plaza de Mayo.

Soon there are scores of them, forming a tight group in the middle of the plaza, directly across from Casa Rosada, the pink-colored government house from which the nation is run.

Pedestrians ignore them, and the din of traffic drowns out their conversations, except to those close by. The gathering might pass for an after-church chit-chat session.

But this is different — the start of a weekly meeting of "Las Locas de Plaza de Mayo," literally meaning The Mad Women of Plaza de Mayo.

The women are relatives of victims of countless kidnapings by armed squads. The abductions have become a national issue in Argentina and provide the basis for widespread charges of human rights violations, which have strained relations between Washington and Buenos Aires.

According to human rights organizations here, at least 2,000 persons have been kidnaped and disappeared so far this year.

Security officials claim the abductions are the work of right-wing squads retaliating against left-wing terrorist operations. But human rights leaders, moderates, leftists, liberals and the women say security agents themselves are involved.

The meetings of the women at the Plaza de Mayo — which gets its name from the date of Argentina's independence, May 25, 1810 — have been taking place since the beginning of the year, every Thursday at 4 p.m.

But their activities went unnoticed until Terence Todman, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, met with the military president, Gen. Jorge Videla, in mid-August. It was a Monday, but the women were at the plaza to try to talk to Todman and tell him of their grievances. Todman did not meet them, but the women attracted a large number of foreign news correspondents.

Police tried to arrest a woman reporter as she was interviewing the women. The women turned on the police and rescued the reporter.

Since then, the police have harassed the women, not allowing them to congregate in large groups at the plaza.

The government has admitted that some security groups, acting on their own, may have carried out the abductions in their zeal to wipe out left-wing urban guerrillas. But the government denies any complicity.

Most of the victims are described as political liberals or moderates. Among them are more than 30 journalists, about 100 labor leaders and hundreds of students.

★ Panama Canal treaty

Hundreds of government officials have spent thousands of hours gearing up for the onslaught of presidents, prime ministers, foreign ministers and other members of the official parties.

The airport arrivals and departures, the private meetings with Carter, simultaneous dinners Wednesday at the White House and the State Department and other activities would represent a major protocolary test for any administration, particularly one in office for less than eight months.

First Lady Rosalynn Carter personally was welcoming leaders of the seven countries she visited in May and June.

Lady Bird Johnson, whose husband opened the canal negotiations with Panama 13 years ago, has been invited to the signing ceremony and will stay in the Queen's bedroom of the White House.

Why tomorrow's professionals choose Hewlett-Packard's first family of advanced calculators today.

They're proven performers. In space. On Everest. In the labs of Nobel laureates. Since we built the first, back in 1972, our advanced calculators have been tested by millions worldwide, and they've passed.

They have staying power. Today's classroom problems quickly grow into tomorrow's on-the-job problems. HP calculators are designed and built to handle both. They're investments in a future that happens fast.

They're straightforward. "Advanced" doesn't mean "complicated." It means "uncomplicated." HP calculators are, above all, straightforward.

They're easy to use. HP calculators not only grow with you; they grow on you. They feel natural, comfortable, because we designed them to work like you think.

They're efficient. HP calculators take the direct approach. All feature RPN, a time-saving, parenthesis-free logic system. All programmables feature a memory-saving keycode merging capability.

They're personal. Professionals design their own ways to solve their particular problems, and they expect their calculators to be versatile enough to accommodate them. Ours are.

There's a variety. To say we offer a full line is an understatement. We offer a choice. That's why we publish a unique "Selection Guide" that spells out the capabilities of each. Your HP dealer has your free copy.

(800) 648-4711. The number to call for more information and your HP dealer's name and address (unless you're in Nevada, in which case you can call 323-2704).

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6 — Born today, you are one of those highly independent persons whose personal freedom is more important to him than any career success, social acceptance, or romantic relationship. For whatever success you may have, it all turns to ashes in your view if you are not also free to come and go as you please. You insist upon taking independent action -- even though you may be opposed from every angle. You refuse to be restrained or limited.

You will no doubt seek personal happiness through a partnership with a loving mate. Unfortunately, you may mistake in another possessiveness for affection and a clinging-vine nature for romantic expression. This is a discovery that could very well sink your marital boat – a circumstance which, though it would cause you much grief, would also rescue you.

You cannot bear being with other people all the time. You need periods of solitude to restore your physical and mental energies. This aids you in gaining some perspective on your present situation, whether at home or work. It is important that you not give in to another's urgings to give up the time you have set aside for yourself, for it will imperil any relationship you may have with that other to do so.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Complete confusion can be avoided by consulting with one who has a finger in a few pies and can coordinate conflicting efforts.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Seek your own happiness today – but be careful not to step on another's toes while you're about it. Know where you're headed.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — A changeable attitude on the part of coworkers may make this a more confusing morning than you'd anticipated. Relax at evening.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — The unpredictable nature of the present situation at home may make it difficult to make decisions with confidence. But you must try!

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Undertake one more thing than you can possibly do and you will probably achieve most of what you had in mind for the day.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Make yourself receptive to the ideas of those who have had great exprience in your field. You may progress considerably now.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — If you insist upon treating life as a battleground, you are bound to be the loser at least once in a while. Take things as they come.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Exercise your naturally strong mental capabilities and you should be able to pull any number of chestnuts out of the fire today.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Social work on your part should prove more than a little satisfying. Don't expect to change things overnight.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — A reservation on another's part must not persuade you to change your mind on an issue of importance to your future. Keep to your own views.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Exercise additional caution if you would close out the day with success and well-being. Chances of gain increase by the hour.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Sympathy extended toward one who has lately been in the position of an unnoticed underdog can go a long way toward righting a wrong.

Monday Puzzle Solved:

Wadkins wins World tourney, Weiskopf 2nd

AKRON, Ohio [AP] — Lanny Wadkins, undisturbed by rolling thunder in the distance and the homemade lightning unleashed by Tom Weiskopf, leaped and cavorted to a five-under-par 65 that brought him a five-stroke victory yesterday in the prestige-laden World Series of Golf.

Wadkins, 27, who spent a couple of potentially productive years in a post-operative slump that ended with his dramatic victory in the recent PGA National Championship, broke by one stroke the course record at the long, wearying South Course of the Firestone Country Club with a 72-hole total of 267, 13-under-par on the layout many of the touring pros call the toughest on the tour.

The fired-up Wadkins aggressively ripped his shots dead at the flags. He galloped out of bunkers, sometimes falling on his knees, charging pell-mell up the rolling hills, hopping happily in the air on each birdie, and played his best when he needed it most.

That started on the ninth tee.

Weiskopf, who had opened the day's play five strokes back, vaulted into a tie. He birdied the first four holes, five of the first six and, with a 12-foot putt on the eighth, had gone six under for the day and tied Wadkins for the lead.

Wadkins faltered not at all. With $100,000 at stake and facing one of golf's most talented performers on one of his best days, Wadkins went to work.

He birdied the ninth from 12 feet. He birdied the 10th. He hopped into the air when a 12-foot birdie putt ducked into the hole on the 12th. And when Weiskopf bogeyed that hole after missing the green, Wadkins had made up four strokes in four holes.

Wadkins led by four with six holes to play and, from the slump of Weiskopf's shoulders it was all over.

Weiskopf, who played the front nine in 29, had an ordinary, uninspired 36 over the back nine and drifted back into a tie for second place with Hale Irwin at 272. Irwin, who had to win last week to get into this elite event, closed with a 69. It was the second time in as many years he was runner-up in this expanded, enriched tournament. Weiskopf and Irwin each won $35,000 from the total purse of $300,000.

Mark Hayes, 69-276 was fourth, followed by defending titleholder Jack Nicklaus, Ray Floyd and South African Gary Player, tied at 278. Nicklaus had a final-round 68, Floyd and Player shot 69s.

Tom Watson, the tired and overplayed winner of the British Open, Masters and three other American titles, shot 69-282 and U.S. Open champion Hubert Green had 72-292.

Watson collected $7,000 and pushed his leading money winning total to $305,428 for the year. With Nicklaus and the absent Johnny Miller, Watson became only the third man to surpass $300,000 in winnings in a single season.

Nicklaus remained second on the money winning list this year. He won $8,375 and went to $281,718 for the season.

Wadkins received $100,000 more than he totaled in the combined seasons of 1975-76 when he was struggling back from gall bladder surgery.

Carlton notches 20th as Phils, Bucs split

PITTSBURGH [AP] — Steve Carlton became major league baseball's first 20-game winner of the 1977 season yesterday, scattering seven hits in eight innings and rapping a home run, leading the Philadelphia Phillies to an 11-1 romp over the Pittsburgh Pirates and a doubleheader split.

Pittsburgh, which won the first game 3-1 behind the seven-hit pitching of John Candelaria and Rich Gossage, remained seven games behind the first-place Phils in the National League East.

Carlton, 20-8 overall and 3-0 against Pittsburgh, got all the runs he needed in the second inning on Jay Johnstone's two-run homer off loser Bruce Kison, 7-8.

Carlton opened the third inning with his third homer of the season, a solo drive over the right field wall.

Carlton singled home another Philadelphia run in the fourth and the Phils broke it open with five runs in the sixth off Larry Demery with the aid of four Pirates errors.

Carlton became a 20-game winner for the fourth time in his career. He was 20-7 last year, 27-10 in 1972 and 20-9 with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1971.

Are these the Rams?

LOS ANGELES [AP] — What has happened to the Los Angeles Rams?

They've signed Joe Namath. They've lost Merlin Olsen, who retired as the last member of the original Fearsome Foursome. They've changed the configuration of their home Coliseum field.

And they've stopped winning preseason games.

It appears that the four-time division champions of the National Football Conference West will have a tough time winning a fifth for coach Chuck Knox, who was wooed by Detroit after the 1976 season.

Olsen, who has turned to television and movie acting, was the wheelhorse of the Rams defense, and without him they haven't seemed the same, as a 1-4 record shows.

Los Angeles also traded away quarterback James Harris. He returned with the San Diego Chargers, who beat the Rams 26-25 for their first triumph over their Southern California rivals since 1972.

Quarterbacks are all-important. Los Angeles has Pat Haden and Namath, either of whom could be starters.

The kid has it

Tracy Austin takes a breather during yesterday's US Open match against Virginia Ruzici. The 14-year-old Austin topped her Rumanian opponent 6-3, 7-5, and advanced to the quarterfinals where she will take on Holland's Betty Stove. Austin, a pint-sized giant killer, has made a big impact on the world of tennis in her brief career on the circuit. A winner at Wimbledon, she now joins the elite few who have advanced this far at Forest Hills. (UPI)

Csonka unhappy

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. [AP] — He is a running back with the National Football League statistics to prove it. But Larry Csonka is not running right now and the New York Giants fullback doesn't like the situation.

Csonka played only one quarter and carried the ball only once for four yards in Sunday's 10-0 loss to the New York Jets. A week ago, against Buffalo, the numbers were four carries for six yards for the man who has gained 6,469 yards in his career, more than any other active runner in the National Conference.

"I guess I have a long way to go," said Csonka, coming back from knee surgery. He was hurt in the 11th game last season but he insists that he has recovered totally from the injury.

Still, the Giants, a team in desperate need of some offense, have preferred to go agonizingly slowly with Csonka. And the big back seems annoyed with that arrangement.

"My job is to run the football," he said. "I would have liked to play more and carry more. That might get me back to par. But they decided I would be more helpful as a blocker."

Coach John McVay would say only: "Csonka is hurting. We planned to play him only one quarter and that's what we did."

Meanwhile, perhaps for insurance, the Giants still have eight running backs on their roster. It is difficult to find sufficient playing time for all of them.

Csonka sat out the preseason opener against New England and has had limited work in the four games since then. Overall, he has carried the football 14 times for 38 yards and caught two passes for 14. Only Marsh White, who suffered a broken hand in the Jets game, has had fewer carries than Csonka.

Csonka was asked if he's happy. He produced a direct, one-word reply.

"No," he said.

LA, Cincy defeated

SAN DIEGO [AP] — Rookie left-hander Bob Owchinko fired a two-hitter last night to lead the San Diego Padres to a 1-0 victory over Los Angeles and halt the Dodgers' winning streak at four games.

Owchinko, 8-9, walked one and struck out five and never permitted a runner beyond first base in recording his first career triumph over the Dodgers.

Doug Rau, 13-6, worked seven innings for the Dodgers, allowing just four hits and one unearned run before leaving for a pinch hitter in the eighth.

HOUSTON [AP] — The Houston Astros broke Tom Seaver's seven-game winning streak with run-scoring hits by Cesar Cedeno and Bob Watson and Jose Cruz' sacrifice fly en route to a 5-1 victory over the Cincinnati Reds last night.

The Astros, who have won 10 of their last 11 games, scored in the first inning on Enos Cabell's solo home run in the first inning and catcher Johnny Bench's throwing error in the third before chasing Seaver, 16-6, in the sixth with three runs on five hits.

Cabell led off the sixth with a single and scored on Cesar Cedeno's triple. Cruz' sacrifice fly scored Cedeno and Joe Ferguson doubled and scored the third run on Watson's single.

Chisox split

OAKLAND [AP] — Eric Soderholm's sixth-inning double scored Jim Essian, giving the Chicago White Sox a 2-1 victory over the Oakland A's in the second game of their doubleheader yesterday.

The A's won the opener 8-7 as Mitchell Page drove in two runs, scored another and stole three bases.

Second-game loser Pablo Torrealba, 4-5, did not give up a hit until the sixth inning when Don Kessinger led off with a single and went to third on a double by Essian.

Kessinger scored on a sacrifice fly, then Soderholm doubled home the winning run.

Wilbur Wood, 7-7, got the win.

Defense triggers grid tie

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

We got everything we wanted to out of our scrimmage with Dartmouth but we wished we were a bit sharper," — UMass head football coach Dick MacPherson.

HANOVER, N.H. — The Minutemen played well enough to earn a 14-14 tie Saturday with Dartmouth in a pre-season scrimmage game here.

MacPherson brought 75 players to the game and used them all as his regulars played approximately a half. "We wanted to see how all our players would react to contact in a game situation, and also to see how far our offensive and defensive units progressed just before our first game with Army next Saturday," MacPherson said.

As a whole, MacPherson said, the defensive unit was more consistent than the offense. After allowing a Dartmouth score early in the first quarter, UMass shut out the Big Green until the fourth period. But Dartmouth tied the score with six minutes left in the game on a 60-yard drive, capped by a one-yard touchdown pass from Larry Margerum to Scott Daggs.

After sputtering through the first quarter, UMass finally came alive in the second as first-string quarterback Mike Fallon hit co-captain John Gladchuck on a 26-yard touchdown pass. Eight minutes later Mike McEvilly found sophomore receiver Kevin O'Connor in the end zone for a 12-yard scoring aerial.

Even though UMass scored both its touchdowns by the air, the strength of the offense was in the ground game. Out of the 15 UMass first downs, 13 were gained rushing and only two in the air.

The Minutemen had 151 net yards rushing compared to 113 for Dartmouth. Conversely, the Big Green had the better passing game as they completed 20-33 for 188 total yards in contrast to UMass's 9-18 and 112 total yards.

Dave Douvadjian was the leading ground gainer for the Minutemen as he picked up 53 yards on eight attempts with his longest good for 24 yards. Hank Sareault and Cliff Pedrow chipped in with 38 and 23 yards apiece.

The key to the running game was the offensive life of Russ Cooke, Russ Schubarth, Bruce Kimball, Jim Penta, and Gerry Greene. According to MacPherson they looked extremely tough on short yardage situations.

"We didn't pound it in the end one. But on many third down and short yardage situations, our men up front opened up a lot of holes. This is where our strength is this year-up front," MacPherson emphasized.

MacPherson said one preseason emphasis was on improving the specialty teams and he said this weekend the units showed tremendous progress in both punt and return coverage. The total yardage allowed in both areas was minus one yard.

"Dartmouth always has a fine football team, with a good solid defense. This year they are picked to contend for the Ivy League crown. We did reasonably well against them, but were sloppy at some periods. I will say that at this stage of the season we are ahead overall of where we were last year," said MacPherson.

Injury-wise, the Minutemen escaped any serious hurts with only junior fullback Chuck Balbonie and sophomore receiver Mike Newell listed as probable for this Saturday's opener against Army. Balboni has a shoulder problem, while Newell is doubtful with a bad ankle sprain.

Sox sweep Jays

TORONTO [AP] — Rick Miller knocked in two runs with a fourth-inning double and Reggie Cleveland pitched a five-hitter to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 6-0 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays and a sweep of last night's doubleheader.

Boston won the first game 8-0 behind Jim Rice's three-run homer, Carlton Fisk's three RBIs and the three-hit pitching of rookie Don Aase, 4-1.

The losses were the Blue Jays' ninth and 10th in a row.

Aase, allowed a second-inning triple by Ron Fairly, a bloop single by Steve Staggs in the sixth and a single by Al Woods in the ninth. The Boston rookie struck out four and walked two.

Fisk tripled home a run in the second and scored when Butch Hobson, who hit his 28th homer of the season to lead off the eighth inning, singled.

Rice hit his home run in the fifth with Rick Burleson and Carl Yastrzemski on base. Fisk doubled home two runs in the seventh.

Jeff Byrd, 2-9, took the loss.

In the nightcap, the Red Sox went ahead 1-0 in the second on Bernie Carbo's double and a single by Butch Hobson. They scored three more in the fourth on singles by Rice and Hobson, and doubles by Miller and Rick Burleson.

The Red Sox, winners of their last four outings, stay in Toronto for three more games in as many days.

Zimmer happy

TORONTO [AP] — Boston Red Sox Manager Don Zimmer couldn't have been more pleased with his club's 8-0 and 6-0 doubleheader sweep of the Toronto Blue Jays yesterday. But the day didn't start out all that well.

The Red Sox, following a Sunday night game in Texas, had to land at the Niagara Falls, N.Y. airport at 2:45 yesterday morning when the team's plane couldn't land at Toronto because of a curfew.

After the team arrived, the two buses that were supposed to meet them weren't there. Half the team took taxicabs for the nearly 90-mile ride to Toronto, while the other half, including Zimmer, slept in the airport waiting room until the buses arrived at 7 a.m.

It all turned out okay, however, as rookie Don Aase hurled a three-hitter in Monday night's first game as Jim Rice hit a three-run homer and Carlton Fisk knocked in three runs. In the nationally televised second game, Reggie Cleveland pitched a five-hitter to improve his record to 9-7.

"That was some kind of pitching performance by Cleveland," Zimmer said. "And Aase pitched super for us in the opener."

Zimmer said Cleveland had control problems early in the game, but then settled down and was "almost unhittable.

Yanks drop two

CLEVELAND [AP] — Pinchhitter John Lowenstein's leadoff homer in the eighth and a checked swing, run-scoring double by Andre Thornton later in the inning gave the Cleveland Indians a 5-4 victory over the New York Yankees and a sweep of yesterday's twi-night doubleheader.

Bruce Bochte, who drove in five runs on the day, singled home the winning run in a 4-3 first-game triumph that ended New York's seven-game winning string.

The Yankees overcame a three-run Cleveland seventh to take a 4-3 lead in the eighth inning of the nightcap. Lowenstein tied it up on the first pitch by Mike Torrez, 15-12, in the bottom of the inning.

Paul Dade then singled and moved to second on a sacrifice bunt. Pinch-runner Ron Pruitt scored the winning run when Thornton's looping double which fell just inside the right field foul line.

Austin leads advance

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [AP] — Tracy Austin and Billie Jean King bridged the generation gap with victories yesterday and advanced into the quarter-finals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

Austin, the nerveless retriever from Rolling Hills, Calif., absorbed Virginia Ruzici's hardest shots and beat the power-hitting Romanian 6-3, 7-5, becoming, at the tender age of 14, the youngest player ever to reach the quarter-final round at fabled Forest Hills.

King, 33, a four-time winner here, including 1967 when Tracy was four years old, survived a three-set thriller with ninth-seeded Kerry Reid of Australia. King, the No. 7 seed, won 6-1, 3-6, 7-6, taking the third-set tiebreaker 7-5.

Austin is due to meet Betty Stove of the Netherlands in the quarter-finals, a David and Goliath match if there ever was one. The 6' 160-lb. Stove has nearly one foot, 70 pounds and 18 years on Austin.

King will meet the winner of tonight's match between top-seeded Chris Evert and Nancy Richey of San Angelo, Tex. Evert lost her first five matches against Richey, but has won the next five.

Meanwhile, the men were given some time on Forest Hills' historic center court, but after Austin, of course. In a surprisingly easy match, stumpy Harold Solomon, the No. 12 seed from Silver Spring, Md., eliminated Vitas Gerulaitis of Howard Beach, N.Y., the No. 8 seed, 7-6, 6-3.

Solomon, a clay court specialist, becomes the first man to reach the men's quarter-final round.

Guillermo Vilas won his 36th straight match and 43rd consecutive on clay, 6-3, 6-1.

Vilas, the No. 4 seed, was effective against Jose Higueras from both the baseline and the net. The 25-year-old lefthander broke service in the eighth game of the first set and was in total command in the second set. In four matches at the 1977 Open, Vilas has won eight straight sets, dropping just 14 games along the way.

Vilas will meet Southern Africa Ray Moore in the quarter finals. Moore and Corrado Barazzutti of Italy, both unseeded, moved into the quarter-finals earlier in the day.

Faculty contract talks

Students win bargaining seats

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The undergraduate and graduate student governments will be participating in negotiation sessions for the first faculty collective bargaining contract with the administration, student leaders announced yesterday.

An agreement by the administration and faculty allowing students to sit in on sessions as observers with the power to bring up issues and concerns providing one of the parties invites them to speak is being viewed by student leaders as a victory for students since both faculty and administrators had previously indicated students would be only allowed advisory status during the process.

Advisory status would not enable students to sit in on the sessions, but provide for student participation to both sides through advisory committees.

Administrators and faculty began "housekeeping" sessions in June to agree on the ground rules for the negotiating sessions.

During these sessions the union initiated a proposal to allow students to participate in the process, Al Winder, the vice-president of the faculty union said in a telephone interview last night.

Union president Larry S. Roberts could not be reached for comment.

Bargaining over the substance of the contract, which will govern faculty salaries and working conditions, has not yet begun according to representatives from both sides.

Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Jon A. Hite and Marion "Pinky" Batiste and Graduate Student Senate President Sally Rees made a joint announcement to the Collegian late yesterday afternoon, minutes after notifying other top student leaders.

Hite and Batiste said both administrators and faculty agreed to allow students to participate in late August, but no announcement was made until yesterday so all parties could discuss the agreement.

The students have been working since the spring in an effort to get administrators an faculty to agree to student participation, they said, through meetings with UMass trustees, UMass President Robert C. Wood, Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, and officers and members of the faculty union.

Under the agreement, two students from the Amherst campus and two from the Boston campus will be seated at the contract table.

The union, organized by the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (MTA) which is the largest group in the state representing higher education teachers represents faculty at both the Amherst and Boston campuses.

Faculty at the Worcester medical school were not organized and are not part of the bargaining unit.

About 1600 faculty at the two campuses elected the MTA to represent them in a run-off election between the association and "no agent" in February. A three-way election was held last fall between the MTA, "no agent" and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

The 10-point agreement on student participation setting up the ground rules for students, enables both graduate and undergraduate students to sit in on the sessions and bring up any issues they feel are pertinnent, although they must be recognized by one of the parties before they speak, according to Zena Telona, a member of the administration's collective bargaining team.

The four students, as yet unchosen by the student government leaders, will be backed up by four separate advisory committees, composed of seven persons each.

The SGA president will serve as a defacto member of the advisory committee for the undergraduate representative, and the graduate senate president will serve in the same position for the graduate representative, while a similar system will be set up for UMass-Boston students, they said.

In a press release, the students said, "The advisory boards will be meeting both separately and together to insure that the interests of their constituencies and the student body as a whole are expressed at the bargaining table."

Both graduate and undergraduate student leaders must now begin the search for representatives for their sessions.

The students, who will be appointed by the SGA co-presidents and the grad senate president, will sit in on sessions alongside the faculty union negotiating team and a similar team from the administration.fAccording to

Tenant seeks inspection of home

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Health Tuesday will decide if a North Amherst building must have structural changes after the home was inspected last week for violations of health codes upon request of a tenant.

Vincent O'Connor has also filed a complaint about a rent increase with a local landlord tenant grievance board.

A hearing was held yesterday afternoon on the home following a second inspection of the house at 125 Summer St., but since the full board was not present, decisions on the various requests by owner Charles Mark of So. Deerfield cannot be made until next week, according to Howard A. Peters, a board member present at the meeting yesterday.

O'Connor last night said he requested the house inspection by the Board of Health after a letter he sent to Mark failed to persuade Mark to make requested repairs.

Mark last night said in a telephone interview he would prefer to withhold comment until after the hearing next week.

The house, a four bedroom Cape Cod, is one of five homes in Amherst Mark rents to tenants. According to O'Connor, Mark is a professor at North Adams State College.

O'Connor listed three health violations in his letter. The Board of Health found 30 in its first inspection, including 18 violations the board said could "endanger or impair the health and safety" of occupants.

Peters last night said some of the variance requests by Mark will probably be granted. A "couple of items" for which Mark is seeking a variance, said Peters, are "average" requests. Ceiling height and window size are two variance requests by Mark Peters said may be granted.

O'Connor said he will appear before the town's Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee next week to complain about Mark's proposed $30 increase in the monthly rent.

The four tenants at the house currently pay $420 for rent a month, plus utilities, O'Connor said.

O'Connor said Mark informed him of the proposed increase in August.

Kent State, seven years later: Building over a bad memory?

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

A crowd of 300 people gathered at Kent State University Monday on the site of the May 4, 1970 killing of four students by the Ohio National Guard during a student demonstration against the U.S. invasion of Cambodia.

The crowd was relatively small, as school had not started. A much larger rally is planned for this weekend with the presence of students from Kent State and campuses across the country.

According to Elliot Kass of the UMass Revolutionary Student Brigade (RSB), stationed at Kent for the week, "There's tremendous support and enthusiasm on the UMass campus for this national struggle and a lot of them probably will want to come." RSB is organizing an expedition to Kent State for this weekend's rally.

RSB has an information table on the Campus Center Concourse for anyone interested in attending or supporting the demonstration. A resolution expressing solidarity with the May 4 coalition will be sponsored at today's Student Senate meeting by RSB, Senate Speaker Brian Delima, and SGA co-President Jon Hite. Also, RSB intends to ask the Senate for funding for transportation.

Resistance to the gym's location is being organized by the May 4 Coalition, the same group that established the tent city on the proposed gym during the summer that led to the arrest of 196 people for disregarding an injunction to vacate the site. The area is now enclosed by a fence with copies of the injunction posted along it, most of which have been torn down.

The present site, located on a hill in the central area of the campus was selected by the University trustees from

Student volunteers needed to help mentally ill

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

Some students of the five-college area are determined to dismantle the Belchertown State School and society's misconceptions of mental illness through the Boltwood-Belchertown Project.

With social, recreational and community experience programs, residents of the state school and volunteers from the surrounding communities gain educational experience.

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project started in an Amherst College service fraternity in 1969 and has expanded from 90 volunteers to 300 volunteers in 1976.

According to Cindy Rogers, the project coordinator, there are 26 different programs with 16 student supervisors this year. These supervisors have spent two months of summer orientation preparing programs.

Programs include a coffeehouse, recreational activities, adaptive physical education, creative expression, cooking, music appreciation, leisure time activities, and community awareness.

Also included are programs on citizen advocacy where volunteers work on a one-to-one basis with former Belchertown State residents living in the community, and a public education program to facilitate awareness of what's happening at the Belchertown State School through newsletters and fund raisers.

"It's an educational experience, a chance to get out with people, to have fun, learn things, explore," said Rogers.

Volunteers described the project as giving them a sense of self-confidence, self-fulfillment, patience and sensitivity to people as well as a good chance to meet people from other schools with the same interest and gain practical experience for any major.

They also explained a new social awareness gained from the project. They feel society has created misconceptions about the developmentally disabled by putting them away in institutions. Their goal is to reunite the handicapped into the community. "Things are changing — it's exciting," said Neil Weinberg a volunteer.

Besides programs, educational workshops will be available for the entire college community. Topics will include Total Communication, Creative Expression and Police investigated an alleged gunshot at UMass radio station WMUA in Marston Hall at 9:50 p.m. on Sept. 4. Police took into protective custody a suspect who apparently entered the radio station, took the arm off a turntable, and broke a window as he left.

A bicycle valued at $25 was stolen from the second floor of Van Meter South on Sept. 2 between 1:00 a.m. and 8:00 a.m.

Police are seeking a complaint from court against a subject for malicious destruction of state property in a graffiti-writing incident at John Adams dormitory at 3:13 a.m. on Sept. 4.

Student co-ops help everyone

By LARRY UCHMANOWICZ
Collegian Staff

Through the efforts of many students here at the University a variety of student-run co-ops and services have sprung up, ranging from automobile repair to organic foods.

According to John Fisher, Economic Development coordinator for the Student Government Association (SGA), students should patronize these services whenever possible as the prices are often significantly lower than those found elsewhere, and the money they generate benefits students in other ways.

"My job," said Fisher, "is to help existing co-ops and student-run services, and coordinate any new co-ops interested in starting up."

The largest of these in membership is the Student Federal Credit Union (CSFCU) located in the Student Union Building on the main floor. This is the largest student-run credit union in the country, with a membership of over 2,500 students and assets of over $350,000.

According to Kevin Falvey, vice-president of the SFCU, it is strictly student-run. The workers are volunteers and are trained as tellers and clerks.

There is an initial membership fee for joining which is $.50, and a minimum balance of $5 is required. The SFCU provides high-interest savings accounts, low-cost loans, money orders, food stamps, and travellers checks. Falvey added the credit union can cash checks for members only, and no checks over $50 can be handled.

SFCU hours are Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The Student Union Craft Shop, located in the basement of the Student Union across from the Hatch, offers materials and instruction in a variety of subjects, such as leather, silver, pottery, and woodworking. For just the cost of supplies, a student can come in and make whatever they desire. In addition, the Craft Shop offers workshops in various metals and jewels, all of which are free.

According to Lucas Feinenger, a worker at the shop, the prices depend on the project. "Almost everyone at one time or another passes through here to make something." He added, "Christmas is always the busiest season."

The Craft Shop hours are from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and Saturday noon to 4 p.m.

The Stereo Co-op, located in 166 Campus Center has a membership of 4,500 students, and does upwards of $3,500 a week in business.

According to Debbie Herrick, coordinator of the co-op, they can sell stereo components and accessories at 20 per cent to 100 per cent off the retail price. "What we try to do," said Herrick, "is talk to the customer and try to build a set-up around students needs. The one thing we cannot sell is parts."

Hours for the Stereo Co-op are Monday, Wednesday and Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Tuesday 7:30 to 9 p.m.

The Photo Co-op in 319 Student Union, provides students with low-cost photographic supplies and film counseling to people wishing to buy equipment. "We also handle processing," said Chris Merrill, vice-president of the co-op. "We try not to push anything on the students, we just try to guide them as to the best equipment for their needs."

In addition, the co-op provides a free reference library and the workers are happy to answer any questions.

Other co-ops and services run by students are the Student Automotive Workshop (SAW), Level 1, Campus Center garage open Tuesday and Thursday 3 to 8 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The SAW provides tools, space, and expert guidance for students who want to work on their own cars. Experience is not necessary.

The People's Market, located in the back of the Student Union, is a student-run grocery store that centers around natural foods, but also offers a wide selection of other foods.

According to Mark Levitan, one of the three coordinators, the Peoples' Market handles an estimated 1000 customers a day. Although there is a regular staff of 19 students, they also accept volunteers for additional help.

The Peoples' Market opens next Monday, and hours will be Monday through Friday, 8:45 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Saturday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

There are many more student-run co-ops and services available to students, and they are only as far away as the phone book.

FAC looking for student stage help

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

If the dazzle and excitement of putting on live shows sounds more appealing than a job in the dining commons, work-study students should note the Fine Arts Center still has positions open for back-stage crew.

Students in theater, music and dance would be hard pressed to find better professional experience anywhere, with flexible hours and contact with some of the best entertainment in America.

The Fine Arts Center Production Services provides technical support to any company that performs at UMass. Composed of two stage managers, a master carpenter, and a technical director besides the stage-crew, they train students in lighting, rigging and set design among other aspects of back stage production.

Students sign up to work by the show, putting in as many hours as their schedules allow. "Some students work strictly on dance concerts or musicals," says stage manager Susan Van Dyke, "while others put in 40 hours a week."

Van Dyke says this production service is the only one in the area that brings in national touring shows. The theater productions of My Fair Lady, Cabaret, and Bubbling Brown Sugar will be here in the fall as will Boston Symphony Orchestra, Chuck Mangione and the Joffrey Ballet.

"We do about a hundred shows a year," explains Van Dyke, and most require working long hours, weekends and holidays. It's not an easy job."

Students of dance, music and theater can really benefit as the job gets crew members in touch with talented people. Says Van Dyke, "90 per cent of theater is not on Broadway, it's all over the country in roadshows. Jazz groups always have time to talk before or after their gig. Just being near performers and the live action is a reward in itself."

There will be a crew orientation Sept. 12 for those who signed up and all other interested persons. Workshops on lighting, rigging and set design will be conducted Sept. 13 and 14.

There are about eight positions open at the present time with a high turnover depending on the show, so students who aren't hired this time should keep checking back.

Albert Grimaldi, 19, and his mother, Princess Grace of Monaco, enjoy a quiet stroll across the Amherst College campus, where the prince is beginning his freshman year. Albert moved into a dormitory there last weekend and was allowed to register early to avoid some of the expected publicity. School officials said Monday they will try to give him "as close to a normal college experience as possible." While campus security and the Amherst police have been notified of Prince Albert's presence in Amherst, neither will take special security measures. It is expected the family will make private arrangements for his security. (UPI Photo)

★ Faculty bargaining

current state law, students are not able to vote, however.

Both faculty and administration employ professional negotiators for the talks. Students, however, have not been allowed to hire a professional negotiator, although they may hire a legal consultant to serve the advisory committees.

"In short, we're looking for a hot-shot undergraduate," Hite said. Any students wil a background in business, political science, education, collective bargaining and or labor relations is eligible for the appointment, he said, and interested students should apply at the senate offices in the Student Union.

Rees said the student leaders are looking for someone with as much technical expertise as possibel to handle the negotiations, while the advisory committees will serve as the "political" groups backing them up.

Since collective bargaining law prohibits any public discussion of what takes place in collective bargaining sessions, the advisory committees will provide the representatives advice and support on issues affecting students, Rees said.

The students also hope to get the faculty and administrators to agree to allow students vote on the final contract at the same time union members are voting to ratifying it.

While the student vote would not be binding, the student leaders said it would give everyone an idea of how much student support exists for the contract, which will cover such broad topics as professor's office hours and budgets, since the campus budget will be strongly affected by how much is paid out for salaries, an account which currently uses about 85 per cent of the budget.

Bromery, in a telephone interview last night, said the administration has been in favor of student participation in the sessions for a long time, and asked students to form an advisory committee on the administrators side at the beginning of the summer.

Bromery said he does not expect any problems with having students at the table because most of the people at the table, except the two negotiators, have no experience in collective bargaining.

Telona, in a telephone interview, said the reason the administration wants student participation is "because anything that happens will effect the way we do business" as an educational institution.

Speaker of the Student Senate Brian DeLima said the "real significance" of agreement is that it will enable students to make a stronger case for the development of an independent student union.

Co-President Batiste said she was extremely pleased with the decision.

Speaker urges non-violence

By ROBERT CONANT
Collegian Staff

Non-violent means of halting nuclear development in Europe was the main focus in a meeting last night held by the Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC).

Erich Bachmann, German delegate for the International Seminar on Training and Non-violent Ation was the featured speaker at the meeting. Bachmann presented a slide show depicting European protests to oppose the building of nuclear plants.

An advocate of non-violent protests, Bachmann said he believes the American movement, compared to the German anti-nuclear movement, is very strong in its non-violent opposition.

Bachmann also said most European governments consider nuclear power essential to achieve independence from oil-producing nations.

According to Francis Fortina, an activist in the German movement, the government there has declared a four to five year moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants until a solution for waste disposal is found.

Boston plans wanted posters for well-known tax delinquents

BOSTON [AP] — The City of Boston is planning to embarrass some of its better-known residents into paying their delinquent tax bills by splashing their pictures and tax bills on wanted posters tacked up in various public spots.

Details of the posters are still sketchy, according to George Regan Jr., Mayor Kevin H. White's press secretary, but they are supposed to be no larger than handbills. Regan would not identify any of the delinquents, but the posters are expected to be up this week.

Possible locations of the posters are in city hall and on the Park Square billboard in downtown Boston.

Regan said putting pictures on wanted posters would be harsh, but he said it would get the point across.

Boston has recently used several tactics to get its point across, all of which have been somewhat successful.

Last week, city officials, along with a pilot and television crews, tried to confiscate attorney F. Lee Bailey's helicopter at the Plymouth Airport. Bailey owes the city $18,000 in back taxes for his Center Plaza law offices. The plan was to land it at City Hall Plaza and display it as testimony of the city's determination to collect its taxes.

Bailey apparently caught winds of the scheme and locked the helicoper in a garage. However, his office did come up with a $5,000 payment.

Also last week, the city confiscated two taxi cabs whose owners have large, outstanding tax bills. One owner, who owes $16,000, immediately paid $6,000 and promised quick payment of the remainder.

The most successful effort to collect taxes was last spring when the city released and the Boston Globe published the names of 6,000 delinquent taxpayers. Tax Collector Newell Cook estimated that stunt brought the city about $2 million in the last six weeks of last fiscal year.

Officials estimate that about $50 million is owed in property taxes for the last three fiscal years.

Meanwhile in nearby Revere, the mayor was the first resident embarrassed by efforts to get the names of delinquent taxpayers publicized.

Mayor William G. Reinstein gave the city tax collector a check for $4,017.92 Tuesday, a few days after the Lynn Evening Item reported that he had not paid last year's property tax bill.

Reinstein told the Boston Globe he had forgotten about the bill until the Item printed the story Thursday.

Senate to formally investigate Lance

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A Senate committee voted yesterday to formally investigate Bert Lance in light of new allegations against him — an inquiry President Carter said he welcomed to bring out "all the facts" about his beleaguered budget director.

After a three-hour, 45-minute private session, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee announced a revamped schedule under which hearings on Lance's tangled financial affairs will start tomorrow rather than today as originally planned. Also, testimony by Lance himself has been postponed from tomorrow until Sept. 15.

Chairman Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., told reporters the first witness Thursday will be Comptroller of the Currency John Heimann, from whom the panel has received supplemental information not included in the Aug. 18 report which said none of Lance's financial activities warranted prosecution.

That information was forwarded to the Senate panel by a House banking subcommittee which yesterday opened hearings — prompted by the Lance affair — into the adequacy of federal banking regulations.

Full details of this new information was not being officially released until this morning.

But Reps. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., and Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., members of a House banking subcommittee, read excerpts indicating it dealt further with some of Lance's activities as a banker in Georgia.

There was no indication whether there was any connection between this new information and the new "serious.... allegations of illegality" against Lance which Ribicoff and Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., outlined to the President Monday at the White House.

The Senate committee approved a resolution by Percy, its ranking Republican member, authorizing the formal investigation of:

"Allegations about Mr. T. Bertram Lance, allegations that federal officials acted improperly in closing certain matters pertaining to Mr. Lance and the banks of which he was affiliated and matters respecting the confirmation of Mr. T. Bertram Lance; information made available to the committee for that purpose of activities of federal officials and others related to the confirmation."

Wallace's wife, Cornelia, leaves governor's mansion

MONTGOMERY, Ala. [UPI] — Alabama Gov. George Wallace's wife, Cornelia, moved out of the Governor's Mansion yesterday, saying she could no longer endure the "vulgarity, threats and abuse" in their six-year marriage.

"I've struggled for a long time to preserve my marriage," Mrs. Wallace said. "I have left the mansion for I can no longer endure the vulgarity, threats and abuse."

Her 57-year-old husband, crippled by an assassination attempt, already has retained a lawyer to file for divorce.

Mrs. Wallace, 38, said she had instructed her lawyers to do what is necessary "to protect me" and declined to comment further.

In a terse statement issued by his staff, Wallace said, "This is a private matter and I trust that our friends can treat it as such."

Mrs. Wallace's attorney, Ira DeMent, declined to say whether her leaving the mansion was a sign a divorce was imminent.

Wallace hired a lawyer more than a month ago to seek a divorce but the petition had not been filed.

"She's deeply hurt and distraught," said DeMent. "She states she has attempted in every way to save their marriage."

Mrs. Wallace supervised the loading of boxes on a small blue van parked at the side of the antebellum mansion.

Wallace, confined to a wheelchair since he was shot in 1972, chatted with DeMent and another of Mrs. Wallace's attorneys on the mansion porch during the move.

Friends of the governor said he had been increasingly angered by his wife's travels, but had hesitated to seek a divorce because of his family and because of political considerations. Wallace plans to run for the U.S. Senate next year.

Mrs. Wallace admitted last year tapping her husband's telephone, explaining she wanted to find out who was "spreading destructive rumors" about her. She said Gerald Wallace, the governor's brother, "spread rumors that I have slept with every state trooper around," but her brother-in-law denied the allegation.

Wallace considered the divorce when he learned of the tapping, but decided against it and urged reporters to let him and his wife work out their problems in private.

The Wallaces were married in January, 1971, shortly before he began his second gubernatorial term. His first wife, Lurleen, died of cancer in 1968.

Wallace had four children from his first marriage. Mrs. Wallace has two children from her earlier marriage to citrus heir John Snively.

Teachers boycott over lack of contract

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Several hundred Springfield and West Springfield public school teachers yesterday boycotted two ceremonies in separate protests of contract difficulties.

Springfield teachers stayed away from a convocation at Symphony Hall to protest the lack of a contract between teachers and the city. Springfield Federation of Teachers President Martin Manoogian said "just about all of the nearly 1,000 teachers in the union did not attend the meeting."

A school department spokesman said attendance was about "two-thirds what it normally is." But Magoogian said many of the people in the hall were administrators and bus monitors.

Teachers are upset because they will not receive increments when school starts since they are working without a contract. Their protest was not expected to affect the start of school for 27,800 students Wednesday.

In nearby West Springfield about 350 members of the West Springfield Education Association walked out of opening day ceremonies. The teachers walked out of the session as school superintendent Chris Grammaticas was about to start talking.

WASHINGTON: Panamian leader Brig. Gen. Omas Torrijos and President Carter met at the White House yesterday in preparation for today's signing of the Panama Canal Treaty. (UPI)

Carter meets with leaders, Panama pact signing today

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter took advantage of the parade of Latin American leaders arriving for the signing of the Panama Canal treaty to meet yesterday with five heads of state in talks he described as an "inter-American summit."

Carter met for the first time with presidents of Peru, Paraguay, Colombia and Chile for discussions on subjects ranging from the canal treaty to human rights and weapons spending, press secretary Jody Powell said.

The President will talk privately with other heads of state in a further series of Oval Office meetings today and tomorrow, he said.

Powell rejected suggestions that Carter should refuse to greet Chilean leader Augusto Pinchet Urgarte or other South American leaders at the White House because of antihuman rights activities in their countries.

"We've made it quite clear we do not feel that differences with other nations or in domestic politics, differences with other nations or in domestic politics, differences with individuals, should preclude conversations and meetings and frank explorations of areas of differences as well as areas of agreement," he said.

"We think that as a general rule, it's better off talking to people than not talking to them."

After spending 70 minutes talking with Panama's Gen. Omar Torrijos in the Oval Office Tuesday morning, Carter arranged separate meetings, at about one-hour intervals, with:

Adalberto Pereira Dos Santos, the vice president of Brazil; Paraguay's President Alfredo Stroessner; Peru's Francisco Morales Bermudez; Colombia's Alfonso Lopez Michelsen and Chile's Augusto Pinochet Urgarte.

Amin orders 12 executions of former Uganda officials

NAIROBI, Kenya [AP] — President Idi Amin has ordered the public executions of 12 former ranking government and military officials convicted of plotting to overthrow him, Uganda radio said yesterday.

Broadcasts monitored in Nairobi said the executions by firing squad were scheduled for 5 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. EDT under a clock tower on the outskirts of Kampala, Uganda's capital.

The radio said official government photographers have been assigned to cover the executions and that any others who attempt to take photographs will do so at their own risk.

Among the 12 doomed men are Lt. Ben Ogwanga, a former intelligence officer; Y.Y. Okoth; J. Olobo; A.S. Okidimenya; Abdalla Anyuru, a former chairman of the Uganda Public Services Commission, and Ben Ongoma, a former leading businessman in Kampala.

They were convicted of treason by a military tribunal on Monday and sentenced to death. Amin signed the execution orders early Tuesday, Radio Uganda said.

Two other defendants were also found guilty of plotting against Amin and were given 15-year prison terms.

Two more were acquitted and freed shortly after the trial got under way in Kampala City Hall on Aug. 22.

The accused had all pleaded guilty to planning the coup which, according to Uganda radio, allegedly was timed for last Jan. 25. That was the sixth anniversary of Amin's accession to power when he toppled former President Milton Obote. Obote was out of the country at the time of the coup.

It was the first public trial held in Uganda. The radio reported scores of Ugandans packed the city hall daily to listen to defendants outline their roles in the move to oust "Life President Amin."

Two held in Gardner murder case

GARDNER [UPI] — Two young Phillipston men are being held on murder and kidnapping charges in the death of an elderly man who police say was overpowered in his car, robbed and then burned to death in the vehicle's trunk.

State troopers said yesterday the charred body of Unto R. Laine, 61, of Phillipson, was found in the smoldering car in a wooded area of Phillipston Monday. Troopers charged Richard J. Benoit, 24, and his brother, Lewis, 17, with kidnapping, unarmed robbery, arson of a motor vehicle and murder.

Medical examiner Dr. Arthur Kanserstein said an autopsy yesterday confirmed the victim's identity. But he said the man was so badly burned it could not be immediately determined whether Laine suffered other injuries before the fire. Tests were continuing, he said.

The defendants spent much of yesterday being transported beteween Gardner and Worcester for court appearances. They were originally to appear in Gardner District Court but were ordered to Worcester Superior Court for appointment of counsel.

Swastika-wearing youth's shooting spree unexplained

CHARLOTTE, N.C. [UPI] — The father of a 17-year-old youth said yesterday he could not explain why his swastika-wearing son killed one person and wounded three others at a black church picnic before taking his own life.

"We do not condone any activity that may be considered subversive in any way," Carey Wilson said as he fought back tears at a news conference. "I honor the American flag. My son was involved in no Nazi activity in any way that I know of.

"I do not know why it happened. I hope I will be privy to additional information."

Kenneth Neal Wilson, described as an "official supporter" of the Nazi Party, sprayed a dozen bullets from a high-powered rifle across a softball field at the New Jonesville AME Zion Church Monday before killing himself.

The elder Wilson, describing his son as patriotic with an American flag covering one wall of his room, said he could not explain why he wore an armband bearing a swastika at the time of the shooting.

A handwritten note found on Kenneth's body reportedly said "I did it for name. I love you."

Police declined to say whose name was on the note but Wilson said it apparently was Stephanie Angela Stewart, a black woman Kenneth had dated until recently.

Wilson said he and his wife objected to the relationship between the two because the girl was considerably older than his son and "much more mature" than Kenneth, who suffered from dyslexia — a learning disability.

Wilson said his son broke off the relationship several weeks ago when the woman returned to college.

Kenneth, described as a quiet, disciplined student, was a World War II buff and a friend who occasionally took target practice with him said he admired Nazis.

"He said he really liked their ways and what all they did," the friend said.

Harold A. Covington, commander of the National Socialist Party of North Carolina, said Kenneth was an "official supporter" of the Nazi party but the party did not order the shooting of the blacks.

"If it was sponsored and proposed by our group, No. 1 there would have been a lot more casualties and No. 2 they wouldn't have caught any of our guys," Covington said.

Two of those wounded were released after treatment at local hospitals. A third victim, Jo Ann Terry, 28, of Charlotte, was reported in critical condition. Roosevelt Davis, 29, died of a gunshot wound to the chest.

Broke Liddy walks today

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. [UPI] — Convicted Watergate burglar G. Gordon Liddy, testifying his assets total just $310, told a federal magistrate yesterday he could not pay a $40,000 fine before his scheduled release from prison today.

U.S. Magistrate William H. Askey, however, accepted a pauper's oath from Liddy which allowed the Watergate mastermind to be released today from the Federal Correctional Institution in Danbury, Conn.

In taking the pauper's oath, Liddy said he owed $275,000 in legal fees and that made it impossible for him to pay the fine before he leaves prison.

However, the government said Liddy's freedom is tied to an agreement that the value of a Veternas Administration National Service life insurance policy worth $3,222 be applied to the $40,000 fine.

Liddy said word the government insurance policy might be counted among his assets came just before the federal hearing. U.S. Attorney Joseph Cimini valuables turned up the possibility.

Liddy's wife, Frances, said she believed the policy had lapsed because she was not able to pay the premium.

In imposing sentence on Liddy for his role in the Watergate scandal, U.S. District Judge John Sirica had said his parole would be conditional upon making arrangements for paying the fine.

Liddy said his assets include a 10-year-old camera, a German wrist watch and about $150 in prison commissary money.

Mrs. Liddy told the court she had been supporting five teenage children on an $18,000-a-year job as a grade school teacher in a Maryland suburb where the average annual salary is nearly $30,000.

Cimini also questioned Liddy about his role in the PLM Association, a Poughkeepsie, N.Y. corporation set up to handle money set up by his writing.

Labor day toll down from 1976

[UPI] — The Labor Day holiday death toll on the nation's highways was 469, well under last year's figure, a final count showed yesterday.

The 1976 toll for the three-day holiday was 526.

The toll this year also was one less than the National Safety Council's preholiday estimate that at least 470 persons — and possibly as many as 570 — would die in traffic accidents.

A United Press International tabulation showed that in addition to the traffic deaths, 44 persons drowned and 12 were killed in plane crashes — a total of 525 accidental deaths between 6 p.m. local time Friday and midnight Monday.

California reported 64 traffic deaths, up from a year ago but well short of the record 71 killed on the state's highways during the 1971 Labor Day weekend. Texas counted 33, Wisconsin 29, Ohio 26, New York 24, Illinois 21 and Colorado 20.

No traffic fatalities were reported in Alaska, North Dakota, South Dakota and Vermont.

Decriminalizing pot

For many UMass students, the state's marijuana laws are a joke, or at best something to be ignored. In this part of Massachusetts one seldom hears of someone getting "busted" for use or possession of pot. But the law does remain on the books, which means that anyone, potentially, could be fined $2,000 and-or thrown in jail for two years for smoking. And that would be no joke, particularly if the law were used to silence politically active smokers.

Public acceptance doesn't justify legalization or decriminalization, but it does indicate that the state's marijuana laws are blatantly unfair...

The medical evidence pro and con surrounding the marijuana issue has been somewhat inconclusive, although it seems a safe bet at this point that moderate pot smoking is safer than either alcohol or cigarette use. Heavy marijuana use has been linked to poor academic performance and lung damage (it contains 'tar', just like tobacco), but as most users will testify, seldom is the stuff smoked in such massive quantities as to have adverse effects.

On the pro side for pot is evidence linking smoking to the alleviation of asthma and glaucoma, as well as its relaxing effect which may be beneficial to individuals with heart problems or who are under stress.

Regardless of the contradictory evidence that is endlessly tossed about, one thing seems certain — pot is here to stay. No longer just the domain of young anti-establishmentarians, smoking has gone "legit". Public acceptance doesn't justify legalization or decriminalization, but it does indicate that the state's marijuana laws are blatantly unfair when compared with the legality of alcohol and tobacco.

Eight states have moved to decriminalize pot, which is to say that the possessor of small amounts in those states is subject to a traffic-ticket type of penalty. That degree of punishment is eminently more reasonable than that presently on the books in Massachusetts, at least until the final medical verdict comes in on the drug.

Meents '76
CPS

The initiative petition presented to the state legislature by SGA Co-president Jon Hite is a welcome move toward updating the state's pot laws. Students should write their representative and urge the passage of this act whether they consider themselves "heads" or not. The present prohibition is both unreasonable and unenforceable.

Soothing the skeptics

By GREG TARPINIAN

Joe: What's this I hear about the reorganization of the student government here at UMass?

Josephine: Oh yeah, they finally realized that students are getting their pie cut for them.

Joe: So, what does this reorg do? Isn't it just going to be the same heavyhanded "politicos" running the show, not interested in advocating our interests, but only interested in what they can put on their resume?

Josephine: I don't think so. I think they're talking about abolishing the present bogus structure of "Senators". You know, just like the U.S. Senate? There's them and then there's the people.

Joe: You mean they're going to try to get rid of 'upward mobility'? That's a joke.

Josephine: No, no really. They're going to provide an avenue for students interesting in changing things.

Joe: You mean people interested in making real immediate changes, and not hanging around "smoke-filled" rooms?

Josephine: Look, it says here that the key to trying to put pressure on a group more financially powerful — like Whitmore — is participation.

So, they set up these mini-groups called "councils". Councils would exist in departments and dorms, and are composed of students who are pissed off about things like shitty course offerings and triple rooms. Anyone could belong. They would advance demands to the department or resident head in an effort to negotiate a contract that would be binding.

Joe: Sounds good. They're right you know. That's what the American Revolution was all about; a bunch of people getting together to off a few rich Englishmen. But what does reorg have to do with it?

Josephine: Simple. The fake "representatives" we have now — you know, Senators — wouldn't be around any longer.

student unionization

The Senate would be based on councils of students. The councils would make decisions and voice their interests and preferences to an elected "spokesperson" who would have the job of relaying the exact sentiment of the people in the council to a larger body called a General Assembly. Unlike the Senators, the spokesperson would not have the authority to not meet with his or her constituents, and only convey his or her interests and thoughts. It would be impossible. The spokesperson speaks for the people, not above them.

Joe: That sounds great. Real participation at the grass-roots. No more bureaucracy. No more Senate "big-whigs". Sounds like I finally have an opportunity to vent my frustration in a way that will create real change, not hot air. Is it really true?

Josephine: It appears that way in black-and-white in this report. It's more complicated, but you got the general picture. All our problems won't be solved, but it looks like a big step in the right direction. You can get a copy of this report which describes most of it in the Student Union building Rm. 420. You better get there quick, this is hot stuff.

Joe: Hey, isn't that room the Student Senate's Office? Sounds fishy.

Recycling project ignored in Back to Campus issue

To the Editor:

As I read over your Back to Campus edition of the Collegian I became angry at what I felt was a terrible oversight on your part. That oversight was your failure to inform your readers that there is a viable and ongoing recycling service here at UMass. The Student Senate Recycling Project has been struggling for over a year helping to deal with the Herculean task of solid waste disposal at UMass. Yet there was no mention of the Recycling Project in your "Directory of Campus resources", or in your "Rolling into another Semester" section, which did mention the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture, People's Market and other student run services.

The Recycling Project recycled over 120 tons of glass and paper from UMass last year. Yet even this large amount barely scratched the surface of the solid waste problem here at the university. The Recycling Project has provided a convenient and efficient way for you to recycle your paper, glass and aluminum, and now it is up to you to make it a success. You the people who run the Collegian are the major source of information at UMass and you have to help us get the word out. And you the students, faculty and staff at the university, you have to make the important decision to recycle today's and every day's Collegian.

Tenant's rights violated in Colonial Village incident

To the Editor:

I would like to make the community aware of an unresolved problem concerning my past tenancy at Colonial Village. In June, both my roommate and myself moved out of the apartment without having located someone to sublet the apartment. Though we paid our June rent and I had been to the apartment for a three day period in June, when I arrived at my apartment on June 23, our remaining furniture had been removed from the apartment. The apartment was in the process of being repainted and revarnished.

Kamins, the realtor who manages the Colonial Village complex, has not located the furniture to this date. Though I wrote a letter to the owner of the complex at the beginning of July stating that I considered the lease terminated, I have not yet received the return of my security deposit, June's rent, or reimbursement for the missing furniture. I am now taking the matter to small claims court.

I would like to publicly thank the people who gave me help and support, especially the UMass Legal Services and the Colonial Village Tenants' Union. I hope that my experience will motivate others to become more aware of and involved in the tenants' rights organizations in this area.

Court decisions 'legalize' rape

The word is out now that not wearing a bra and hitchhiking are secret codes for, "I want to be raped, anybody available?" at least according to court personnel in California and Wisconsin. In fact Judge Archie Simonson, of Dane County, Wisconsin, seems to think rape should be legalized.

Are women on the streets who dress with their "nipples fully exposed" and "dresses up over the cheek of their butts" asking to be assaulted?

"It sure raises a lot of questions on my mind from time to time," said Simonson.

"The lone female hitchhiker in the absence of an emergency situation, as a practical matter, advises all who pass by that she is willing to enter the vehicle with anyone who stops and in so doing advertises that she has less concern for the consequences that the average female.

"Under the circumstances it would not be unreasonable for a man in the position of the defendant here to believe that the woman would consent to sexual relations," was written in July by Justice Lynn D. Compton, of Los Angeles, with two other judges concurring.

The woman to whom Compton and friends were referring had left her car at a service station for repairs. Simonson's "victim" was wearing blue jeans and a turtleneck sweater over a blouse.

Are rapists being freed because of these judges' confusions between personal freedom and sexuality?

People in Wisconsin are taking to the polls today the old myth that women want to be raped. Simonson is up for reelection, with five candidates opposing him, just enough to split the vote....

Women are taught to use the only tool they've been left with (appearance) to gain the only kind of power they can. But what's really the difference between a woman trying to be attractive and a man doing the same thing? And in trying to be attractive is a woman looking to be beaten up?

Rape is almost always accompanied by violence. Psychologists have said men often rape, not for the sexual gratification they may receive, but in order to dominate a woman.

Judge Simonson has obviously not been reading up.

And since when have hitchhikers ever given up the freedom to turn down a ride they feel to be potentially dangerous?

In short, there are massive holes in both judges' arguments.

What is the answer? No, we shall not be forced to lead non-lives cringing at home after dark. Women must have the threat of attack removed, but until rapists are punished we haven't even made a start.

Cleaver's Christian crusade: black, white and anti-red

By REGINALD MAJOR

SAN FRANCISCO, June 29 — "We are involved in spiritual warfare between God and the Devil," declared Eldridge Cleaver, explaining the missionary zeal behind his newly launched "Eldridge Cleaver Crusades."

" 'Crusades,' " he says, "captures the urgency which I feel. I seem to hear the Lord saying to me, 'Against these evils, thou shalt crusade.' "

Thus far the chief evils against which the former Black Panther Minister of Information directs his famous rhetoric are communism and black militancy. And among the chief supporters of the incorporated crusade are some of the leading luminaries of the predominantly white, new right evangelism.

Looking like a preacher and sounding like a politician, Cleaver dishes out a hearty blend of old-time religion and fundamental, conservative politics. And his mission — apart from keeping him out of jail — appears to be bridging the wide gap between the black and white evangelist movements — a feat that, if accomplished, could cement a powerful new conservative political coalition.

The anti-communist nature of Cleaver's new crusade has renewed charges among his critics that his actions and statements since his return from exile in November 1975 are basically "opportunistic," clever stragegems designed to win him public approval in his bid for freedom.

Cleaver still faces charges of assault and attempted murder stemming from an April, 1968 shootout with Oakland police. His trial is expected to begin in September.

The former radical — who may soon become the Reverend Eldridge — has consistenly denied all charges of collaboration. "I have not made a deal with anyone except Christ," Cleaver declared before an all-black congregation of San Francisco's Providence Baptist Church in mid-June.

When he declared that Castro's Cuba displayed a form of racism more insidious than South Africa's, critics became convinced that Cleaver's statements were bought and paid for.

The former radical - who may soon become the Reverend Eldridge - has consistently denied all charges of collaboration. 'I have not made a deal with anyone except Christ,' Cleaver declared.

But apart from small contributions to the defense committee, by March 1976, still in the Oakland jail, Cleaver had yet to find a constituency with enough resources and power to support his legal battles.

He found it in Arthur DeMoss, a Philadelphia millionaire who is chairman of the board of the National Liberty Corporation and a top financial contributor to the ultra-conservative Campus Crusade for Christ and the Christian Freedom Foundation.

DeMoss visited Cleaver in jail following contacts that indicated the former Panther might be ready to become a born-again Christian. DeMoss provided $100,000 for Cleaver's bail and sufficient living expenses to maintain a $100,000 home in the plush Los Altos hills south of San Francisco.

Along with Cleaver and his wife Kathleen, DeMoss is an officer in the Eldridge Cleaver Crusades Corporation.

Since then, Cleaver has gone on the religious lecture circuit, appearing at some 30 colleges, more than 20 churches and virtually every major religious TV talkshow.

He and Kathleen were baptized in October, 1976 and placed their two children in a Los Angeles Christian school. "I don't want my children corrupted by bearded teachers who don't agree with me," said Cleaver.

Cleaver's first appearances were limited to white evangelical groups who responded enthusiastically to his "testimony" about how an ex-communist and black militant had become one with Christ — even though there is no evidence Cleaver ever was a communist.

When skeptics charged that he was avoiding black audiences, Cleaver began appearing at all-black churches such as the Providence Baptist Church, whose pastor, Calvin Jones, is a locally well-known conservative and a sponsor of the Eldridge Cleaver Crusades. His reception there, while not overly enthusiastic, was approving.

Throughout his testimony, Cleaver subtly hinted that white political control is closer to the proper order of things.

Says one long-time black activist in Oakland who has followed Cleaver's byzantine career from the beginning, "Eldridge's religious message seems to be one of convincing blacks to chain themselves to the rock of ages after they steal away to Jesus."

In fact, Cleaver's brand of Christian activism is closely related to the kind of evangelism that in the past has been characterized as decidedly anti-black. Some of his key supporters among the leading white evangelist powers have carried the anti-communist zeal to uncritical support for the white minority governments of Rhodesia and South Africa.

While Cleaver has avoided embracing such a position publicly, he privately takes a hard, critical line toward the black African states involved in southern Africa's racial wars.

In an interview, he decried as "racist" any support for "those niggers trying to push our brothers into the sea" in southern Africa.

The future of the Eldridge Cleaver Crusades is now being mapped out from a Stanford, Calif., office. In the meantime, the organization has already begun publishing a "Crusader" newsletter appealing to readers to "send us a generous contribution towards the founding of this ministry."

Soviet police seize '1984', 'Animal Farm'

MOSCOW [UPI] — Soviet customs police confiscated copies of George Orwell's "1984" and "Animal Farm" before they could be exhibited at the Russians' controversial First International Book Fair, publishers said yesterday.

The Orwell books — the British author's satires on totalitarian regimes are considered classics and are available everywhere in the Western world — were among a series of works the Soviets considered objectionable, the publishers said.

American paperback editions of the Orwell books were confiscated by teams of customs police before they could be displayed at the exhibits set up by U.S. British and West German publishing houses.

Chester Kerr of Yale University Press, secretary of the Association of American Publishers, and Martin Levin, president of Times-Mirror Co., which published the New American Library Orwell editions, said they would protest to the fair directors.

Kerr said he met for one hour with Boris I. Stukalin, chairman of the Soviet Union's State Publishing Committee, and Stukalin told him it was "a customs matter" and he would look into it.

Controversy surrounded the fair long before Tuesday's opening, with the American publishing industry debating the issues of censorship and human rights violations in the Soviet Union. Only 25 U.S. exhibitors are taking part, compared to 375 at the annual Frankfurt fair.

The Soviets notified the 1,300 exhibitors from 64 countries in advance they must not show books containing pornography, excessive violence or "advocating war or race or national exclusiveness, offending the national dignity of other exhibitors, publications incompatible with public morals, etc."

In addition to the Orwell books, three from the Association of American University Publishers were found objectionable.

They were "The Secret Police in Lenin's Russia," by Lennard D. Gerson, Temple University Press; "The Sino-Soviet Conflict and Europe and the East," by Jacques Levesque, University of Montreal Press; and "Images of an Era: The American Poster, 1945-1975," from the National Collection of Fine Arts of the Smithsonian Institution, MIT Press.

★ Kent State gym proposal

a possible seven sites in 1973. At one point the university purchased 17.2 acres of land adjacent to the campus for the gym. The present proposed site is not exactly where the National Guard fired or the four students were killed, however, included in the architect's blueprints are plans for landscaping the scene of the incident with a road to the gym and artificial contours.

The Guard circles around the "Hill" where the gym is planned, pursuing students with tear gas until they reached a campus building and fired. One student was wounded on the presently enclosed site.

In the parking lot where the students were felled by the Guard's bullets stands a marble memorial to four dead tudents. "In living memory of Allison Krause, Jeffrey Miller, Sandra Scheur. Dedicated May 5, 1971 by B'nai B'rith Hillel. Rededicated May 4, 1975 by members of the Kent State University faculty." A motion to make the site an official historic place failed by a five to four vote of the Ohio Historical society.

The May 4 Coalition is having some internal problems, but none serious enough to severely split the coalition. At a coalition meeting Sunday night, a proposal was introduced condemning the aggressive, intimidating tone of discussion at previous meetings, sectarian bickering, mainly between "militant" and "liberal" attitudes and tactics, urging that the coalition should try to broaden its support by bringing in new people instead of demanding "political purity" of its members, accused certain factions of undermining the democratic process, opposed the "insinuation of violence" and asked that coalition legal defense funds not be used in the case of "unprovoked violence," as violence alienates the public.

Also, it was requested that the Marxists and Maoists respect the Trotskyites, Yippies, anarchists, independent radicals and liberals.

The proposal inspired great controversy and was debated for five hours to little or no avail.

Monday afternoon, just after the rally was getting underway, Officer Elmer Leeper of the campus police pulled the sound system plug from the outlet on the exterior wall of Taylor Hall and was rapidly confronted by about 30 people who claimed they had tacit permission from the university to use its electricity and promised to pay for it if necessary.

However, coalition members felt reasonably certain the orders to pull the plug had come from the Kent State administration, as they had used university outdoor electric outlets in the past. Argument proved futile, so the students moved to another plug, which they defended with a human chain, and others at the rally tossed them red bandannas and red baseball hats to avoid identification.

Half an hour later, as Episcopal minister Charles Rawling, who had been arrested during the charge onto the fenced off area in July spoke, the power was cut off from inside the building. The speeches continued, however, minus electric amplification. Albert J. Canfora councilman from Barberton, Ohio, also arrested in July, and whose son Alan, had been wounded during the 1970 demonstration, told the rally, "We told America that what we did was right."

After the speeches there was a march on the university president's house, who turned out not to be home, and many marchers allowed the police video camera sticking through the curtains of an upstairs window to record them making obscene gestures for posterity.

Turner okayed by fellow boaters

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — The committee that selected the 12-meter yacht Courageous to defend the America's cup yesterday denied it ever had discriminated against skipper Ted Turner because of his flamboyant style.

"I don't know how such garbage got started," said selection committee member Robert C. McCullough, commodore of the New York Yacht Club.

The committee decided Aug. 30 that Turner would defend sailing's top prize against foreign challenger Australia in final races beginning Sept. 13. McCullough said the choice was based on Turner's sheer sailing ability, proven in summer long trials against rivals Independence and Enterprise.

"If we had any reason, we'd have put a lot of pressure on the syndicate to get rid of him (Turner) in the beginning," McCullough said. "We're trying to defend the cup. If there had been any reason not to choose Turner, we would have been balking like mad."

Turner, the millionaire owner of the Atlanta Hawks and Braves, has brought a controversial style to the cliquish sport of yachting with frequent outbursts that grabbed news headlines. Major magazines are planning cover stories on him and he has hired an agent to market his name for product endorsements.

The only pressure to curb his style, he said, came from King's Point syndicate head Lee Loomis who retained the right to fire Turner as skipper if his behavior became too outrageous.

"We had our results from the whole summer," McCullough said. "Not just the box scores, but a matter of preparedness and the whole works."

When the committee had decided Turner was their man, they moved quickly. Independence, skippered by Marblehead Mass., sailmaker Ted Hood, got the axe after losing to Courageous by one minute 23 seconds Aug. 29.

West Coast challenger Enterprise, which had fired skipper Lowell North in a last-minute move to improve performance, was knocked out the next day after losing to Courageous by one minute, 26 seconds, leaving Turner to defend the cup.

Enterprise had been unable to beat Courageous in final trials that started Aug. 16, and Independence had defeated Turner's boat only once.

"Courageous had nine victories and one defeat in the August series," said selection committee chairman George Hinman. "There was just no future. We eliminated Independence and it appeared to all of us that Enterprise was in the same situation."

He said it was best to avoid further unnecessary trials "because we were wearing out the sails on the defender."

Independence Tuesday sailed as a trial horse for Courageous as she began final preparations for the finals.

Courageous successfully defended the cup in 1974 with Hood at the helm.

Shavers talks big

CALCUTTA, Ohio [UPI] — Ernie Shavers says he can't understand why heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali is attempting to negotiate a bout with ex-titleholder Joe Frazier later this year.

Shavers, who meets Ali for the title Sept. 29 in New York, ridiculed the reported offer by making public his own plans to defend the title against Frazier if the former champion is serious about a comeback as recently announced.

"Me and Smokin' Joe," said Shavers at his training camp here, "has got to be the greatest punchers fight of all time."

"Ali," Shavers snorted, "he just don't figure in any plans. I'm taking him out in seven just like I promised all along."

It was learned from boxing insiders that Yank Durham, Frazier's manager at the time, turned down a match with Shavers about five years ago despite a seven figure purse guarantee.

Frazier and Shavers are regarded as tops among boxing's all-time hardest hitting punchers.

Indiana trades Buse to Suns

INDIANAPOLIS [UPI] — The Indiana Pacers yesterday completed their second major trade in a week, sending All-star guard Don Buse to the Phoenix Suns in a straight player deal for guard Ricky Sobers.

Coach Bobby Leonard said the trade was part of his effort to build the Indiana franchise into a playoff contender. Last week, the Pacers sent All-star swingman Billy Knight to Buffalo for NBA Rookie of the Year Adrian Dantley and Mike Bantom.

Buse, a five-year veteran from the University of Evansville, led the league in both assists (with 3.47 per game) and steals (8.5 per game) last season, Indiana's first in the NBA. His 281 thefts were a league record. He was named to the west squad for the 1977 All-Star contest.

In 1975, the last season for the old ABA, Buse, 6'4" 195-lbs., also was tops in both departments. However, last year he averaged just eight points a game.

Sobers, 6'3", 198 lbs., was a first-round draft pick for the Suns in 1975 out of Nevada-Las Vegas and started most of the season for the team in its charge to the NBA finals, where Phoenix lost to the Boston Celtics.

He averaged 13 points in the playoffs that year and hit for a 13.6 average last campaign.

He started 29 games as a rookie and 48 games last season. In his two years in the league, Sobers has averaged 11.4 points per game and 2.9 assists.

"This is a trade that should help both teams as each team is trying to fill a particular need," Leonard explained.

He said that owners were "trying to build a playoff team here in Indiana and in our situation we need some scoring punch from both guard spots. Don can do a lot of things for a ball club, but we feel Ricky can do as many, plus can score and is three years younger.

"I just didn't feel like we could come back with the same team and win as many ball games as last year," the Pacers' general manager added. "When you're not a .500 ball club, you have to make some changes to fill particular needs."

KC star Brett predicts Royals to take pennant

SEATTLE [UPI] — Defending American League Batting Champion George Brett of Kansas City says the Royals now are in full stride, the best team in the American League and in shape to take the pennant from the East Division winner, whether that be the New York Yankees or some other club.

"I think we are the best team in the American League no matter what the Yankees and Reggie Jackson say," Brett said at a sports lunch yesterday.

Of West Division competition, he said he is more concerned about the Texas Rangers "because of their pitching" than of the Chicago White Sox or Minnesota Twins.

In the playoff for the pennant, Brett said he would rather face the Yankees or Baltimore. "I think Boston would be a more dangerous club. They have eight or nine guys who can hit it out of Fenway Park."

Facing the Yankees would give the Royals an opportunity to avenge last year's playoff loss to New York.

Brett said the Twins' Rod Carew already has the 1977 League Batting Crown in his pocket. "The way Rod Carew is going, nobody is going to catch him, believe me."

However, Brett said he is happy with his .309 batting average this season and has been more productive in terms of runs scored and batted in than when he finished at .334 last season. He socked his 18th homer of the year Monday night to help the Royals beat Seattle 8-4.

"I love this ball park (Seattle's Kingdome)," he said. "I'd hate to see players like Babe Ruth play in this park (measuring 317 feet down the lines and 357 in the power alleys). With the short fences and the rabbit ball, they would set records that are unbelievable."

Asked how many homers he figures he would hit in a season if he played for Seattle, Brett said, "Oh, about 20 or 25."

"About 35 to 40," interrupted Seattle pitcher Tom House, sitting next to Brett.

House, speaking from the perspective of 11 years in pro baseball, compared the Expansionist Mariners to the early years of the Royals.

"This (Seattle) is just a young Kansas City ball club," he said. "I predict that in four to five years you are going to see a contender."

Pats at 48 player limit

SMITHFIELD, R.I. [AP] — The New England Patriots put rookie linebacker Jerry Vogele on the injured reserve list and waived rookie wide receiver Don Westbrook yesterday to reach the National Football League's 48 player limit.

Coach Chuck Fairbanks refused to release two other changes until tomorrow.

Vogele, who was injured in Sunday's game with the Washington Redskins, needs knee surgery and will probably miss the whole season, Fairbanks said.

He said rookie tight end Don Hasselbeck, also injured in the 45-7 rout of Washington, had suffered only a bruised knee.

Hasselbeck plans to practice with the team this week at training camp here and could be ready for Sunday's game with the Atlanta Falcons, Fairbanks said.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7 — Born today, you are not the type to accept gracefully any changes in your everyday activities. A person geared to routine, you expect to be stimulated by the same things every day. Surprises are more apt to leave you either angry or frustrated rather than delighted. Associations with other people are inclined to suffer unless they are maintained on an almost daily basis. Friendships with you need almost constant attention. It is not that you do not form deep and close relationships; rather, it is that you are inclined not to trust a bond that you have not recently evaluated.

Although not easily ruffled, when you are the fur really flies. You can be counted on to "go up in smoke" when you are crossed too often or too severely. You will happily answers tactful questions about your personal life, but have no time and are apt to overreact to questions bluntly or sarcastically put. Time, of course, heals all wounds, including these – but you will yourself have to practice the art of forgiveness. You are quite willing to help anyone who should solicit your aid, but you aren't too quick at recognizing these needs unsolicited. Your inclination to spend a great deal of time alone may be responsible for your inability to recognize another's troubles; time spent in society should cure such social blind spots.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22) — Astute consideration of a question of time should enable you to come up with the answer to your present difficulty. Move quickly.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Determine your own position on issues of importance before you demand to know another's. Don't depend on outsiders for support.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — An artistic or literary endeavor should prove entirely successful today – if you are careful to get off to an accurate, decisive start.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Deal with those new to your ways so that the course is eased for them as well as for you. Relationships prove exciting at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — More than one hope is fulfilled today. Make an effort to bring others into such a position that they are under your protection.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Cater only as much as you reasonably can to the wishes of others. Determine the degree of acceptance your ideas are gaining.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — A wonderful opportunity to make friends with one who can be of considerable help to you in the future comes your way in AM. Take advantage of it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — So long as your commercial talents don't interfere with your creative instincts, all is well. Learn a lesson from the young.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — This is a day for financial caution. Be directed by your own good sense; be warned by another's recent failure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — An inventive approach to an old problem may see you with more than one solution to choose from by day's end. Don't fear your own creativity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A studious nature must not be confused with a solemn one. Know where your limits lie and what your real assets are.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Self-esteem and self-confidence are inextricably bound. If you can establish a foothold on your next project, do so; if not, don't worry about it.

Borg withdraws from Open; Evert triumphs

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Bjorn Borg's dream of capturing the U.S. Open Tennis Championship and securing the World No. 1 status he gained with his second straight Wimbledon title this summer ended suddenly in mid-match yesterday when he finally gave in to his painful sprained shoulder and defaulted to 10th-seeded Dick Stockton.

The 21-year-old Swede, who injured himself in practice the day before the Open began, stunned a capacity stadiium court crowd of 12,333 when he made his decision to quit on the change of service with Stockton leading 3-6, 6-4, 1-0.

"In the first set it hurt, but not as much as in the second," Borg said. "There was too much pain to serve — it's a mental thing. Everytime you throw up the ball, you wonder if it is going to hurt. There was no way I could put an overhead away."

Asked if he would have continued if he had beaten Stockton in the second set, Borg replied:

"It doesn't matter. In the next match I would have had to play three of five (sets) and there was no way I could do that."

Borg, who played with torn stomach muscles when he won his first Wimbledon title in 1976, never broke up or showed much emotion after his default.

"I'm very disappointed. I thought I had a really good chance in the tournament," he said. "Still, I have plenty more years to come. I knew the matches would be tougher and tougher. The first three guys I played preferred fast surfaces. I knew before the match with Stockton, it would be difficult because he's a good player."

Borg feared even before the match that he might not be able to compete.

"We have to wait and see," Borg said. "There is still pain. I don't know. I hope. We see."

Borg tried but he just was not able to perform the way he is expected to, or the way he expects himself to. As he had in his first three matches, his serves were soft and easy to return, with just enough power to break an egg.

Stockton, from Carrolton, Tex., was the first quality player to test Borg and after dropping the first set in 34 minutes came charging back in the second set. Borg grew weaker as Stockton began to jump on his serve and attack the net. After Borg took a 2-3 lead in the second set, Stockton grabbed the next three games and closed out the set on service.

In the final game, the first of the third set, Stockton beat him at 15 with a passing shot. As the two were about to change sides, Borg grabbed a towel, wiped his face and told the umpire he must default.

Borg, his face as expressionless as ever, was led quickly back to his locker. Surrounded by newsmen and security guards, he sat silently for several minutes, his arms on his knees, his head bowed.

Stockton, who now goes to the quarter-finals against Harold Solomon, quipped "the guys are afraid of me. This is the third time someone's defaulted to me this year. I'll take it any way I can get it. I thought I was playing the best clay court tennis I've ever played."

Stockton admitted he was disappointed he didn't get a chance to beat Borg squarely rather than win by default.

"I really felt I was going to win the match," Stockton said. "I played a good first game in the third set. I was refreshed again, I wasn't tired and I felt like I was in complete control. Y'know that (default) always takes a little bit away from it, people are gonna say 'he beat Borg but he really didn't beat him'."

Stockton knows what counts, however. "What matters is whose name is on the scoreboard and that will be mine."

Stockton exploited Borg's injury by hitting lobs and stretching him to his forehand side.

"He's one of the nicest guys around so it's hard to say I'm going to pull him into the net and lob," Stockton said. "It's hard to exploit his injury but I saw in the newspaper he said his opponents should be lobbing more. So he's the one who told me to do it."

In other afternoon matches, third-seeded Brian Gottfried, Lauderhill, Fla., edged Poland's Wojtek Fibak 6-7, 6-3, 6-4; fifth-seeded Spaniard Manuel Orantes ended the upset hopes of 18-year-old John McEnroe, Douglaston, N.Y., 6-2, 6-3; women's top-seed Chris Evert, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., ripped Nancy Richey, San Angelo, Tex., 6-3, 6-0; and second-seed Martina Navratilova, Dallas, beat Marise Kruger, South Africa, 6-2, 6-1.

Marinaro, Marangi cut; NFL clubs reach limit

[UPI] — Ed Marinaro, the former NCAA record-holder while at Cornell, and quarterback Gary Marangi, who took over for Joe Ferguson last year when the Buffalo Bills' regular quarterback was injured, were the major casualties yesterday as NFL teams reduced their rosters to the 48-player limit.

While other teams were cutting players, however, the Seattle Seahawks signed running back Al Hunter, recently suspended from Notre Dame, to a series of one-year contracts running through 1980.

Marinaro, who was leading the New York Jets in rushing and receiving last year before an injury sidelined him midway through the season, was one of three players placed on 24-hour recallable waivers Tuesday by the Jets.

Marinaro signed a one-year $80,000 contract with the Jets last season after playing out his option with the Minnesota Vikings. He appeared in six games, gained 312 yards on 77 carries and caught 21 passes for 168 yards before suffering a foot injury which idled him the rest of the season. He was slow recovering from the injury this year and appeared in only one game two weeks ago against New Orleans.

Also put on recallable waivers were second-year wide receiver Howard Satterwhite and veteran middle linebacker Carl Russ. Satterwhite was acquired on waivers from Washington and Russ was obtained from Atlanta just before the start of the 1976 season.

While at Cornell, Marinaro, 27, set the NCCAA career rushing record of 4,715 yards, since broken by Heisman Trophy Winners Archie Griffin and Tony Dorsett. His 203 yards per game average is still an NCAA mark. A second-round draft pick by Minnesota, Marinaro had his best year as a pro in 1975 when he rushed for 358 yards on 101 carries and was third in the NFC in receiving with 54 catches for 462 yards.

Marangi waived by the Buffalo Bills had been traded to Green Bay last week for a future undisclosed draft choice, but was sent back to the Bills and the trade nullified after he failed to pass a Green Bay physical.

Marangi, the Bills' third-round choice in the 1974 draft, had been the team's backup quarterback until losing that spot to Ken Johnson in the pre-season.

Also released was Pittsburgh Steelers' third-string quarterback Neil Graff, who joined the team last season when Terry Bradshaw was injured. Leaves the team with only two quarterbacks, but a team spokesman said there was a possibility someone else might be recalled.

The Cleveland Browns waived eight-year veteran defensive back Terry Brown, 30, from Oklahoma State University, who was obtained from Seattle last year and wound up as the Browns' regular strong safety.

The Green Bay Packers sent veteran defensive end Alden Roche to the Baltimore Colts in return for an undisclosed future draft choice. Roche, 32, a 6-foot-4, 255-pound eight year veteran out of Southern University, was acquired by the Packers in 1971 in a trade with Denver and has been playing right defensive end.

Curtis cut by Seahawks

SEATTLE [UPI] — Linebacker Mike Curtis, a 12-year veteran who made four pro bowl squads during his career with Baltimore, was put on waivers by the Seattle Seahawks Tuesday to cut the club's roster to the 48-man limit.

The Seahawks also waived running back Ralph Nelson, defensive end Mark Chalmers, linebacker Bob Simpson and defensive end Horace Jones. George Adzick, a rookie safety, was placed on the injured reserve list.

Curtis, once one of the most ferocious and feared linebackers in the NFL, was picked up by Seattle from the Colts in the expansion draft before the 1976 season.

At his own request, he was shifted from the middle to an outside linebacking spot and started all 14 regular season games for Seattle. The previous season he played in only six Baltimore games because of injuries.

The former Duke fullback and linebacker was Baltimore's first-round selection in the 1965 draft. He was named to the pro bowl squad in 1968, 1970, 1971 and 1974.

Curtis was named MVP of Super Bowl V for a clutch interception that set up the winning field goal in the Colts' 16-13 victory over Dallas.

He intercepted one pass for the Seahawks last season, raising his career total to 23, recovered his eighth NFL fumble and blocked his first field goal to preserve a 13-10 victory over Tampa, one of Seattle's two wins.

Connors advances in rout

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Defending champion Jimmy Connors roared into the quarter-finals of the U.S. open tennis championships last night with a 6-0, 6-2 rout of Roscoe Tanner after Wimbledon Champion and top seed Bjorn Borg quit in pain in mid-match against 10th seed Dick Stockton.

"Connors is bionic," one fan yelled out from the stands between serves. And the 25-year-old second seed from Belleville, Ill. practically played that way, drilling shot after shot exactly on the taped lines and returning impossible serves from the hard-slamming Tanner to win in 54 minutes.

It was if Connors, who has been complaining of chronic back soreness, suddenly found a health potion with the demise of Borg. Tanner, the 11th seed from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., hadn't played well on the disagreeable clay surface going into this fourth round match, struggling through two of his first three matches, but he was talking to himself nearly from the start as Connors repeatedly ticked the tape.

Tanner's only response was to blast his serve even harder and he managed to win the eighth game with the help of two aces.

Marvin Barnes freed?

Parole decision today

CRANSTON, R.I. [AP] — After almost four months behind bars, basketball star Marvin Barnes of the Detroit Pistons came up for parole today under a program for special inmates.

Barnes started serving a one-year sentence at the Adult Correctional Institutions here May 16 for violating a probationary sentence imposed for attacking a Providence College teammate.

"Technically, Marvin would not have gone before the board this time," said Lillian G. McDaniel, Corrections Department spokeswoman. "He would have come up six months after serving 120 days.

"But he and Jimmy Gordon, who is going to graduate school, are going early," Mrs. McDaniel said. "He and Gordon are thought to be unusual cases.

"The purpose of parole is to get them back on the outside where they can be productive and we feel they have an excellent chance of doing that."

Mrs. McDaniel added that Barnes, who is expected to receive a parole, would probably be kept at the institution six days to two weeks after being approved for release.

If Barnes' parole is turned down, he must wait six more months before being considered again.

Scott sits out 2; not ready to play

TORONTO [UPI] — George Scott, the Boston Red Sox' power-hitting first baseman, refused to play in the second game of Monday's doubleheader against the Toronto Blue Jays and again refused in Tuesday night's game.

Scott told manager Don Zimmer after the first game of Monday's doubleheader, "put somebody else in; I'm not really prepared to play."

When asked if Scott would be playing in Tuesday night's game, Zimmer replied: "I had his name in the lineup. When the bus got to the park, I had one of my coaches ask him if he was ready to play and he said, 'No, he was not really ready'."

Scott, currently batting .263 with 31 homers and 82 RBI, has been a key hitter in Boston's attack all season.

"We had no problems with him before yesterday," said Zimmer. "He's been perfect... absolutely perfect. When asked if he planned to talk further with Scott, Zimmer replied, "No, I've got other guys who want to play. It's that simple."

Bernie Carbo was inserted into the Red Sox' lineup in place of Scott. Carl Yastrzemski moved from left field to first base.

Siani returns home; quits walkout tactics

OAKLAND [UPI] — Oakland Raiders wide receiver Mike Siani has returned to the team's practice field after abandoning his plan to show up only one day out of five to demonstrate his desire either to play more or be traded.

He said he had been advised by Ed Garvey of the Players' Association that he could be put on the involuntary retired list if he were gone five days, not necessarily consecutively.

"I either want to play or be traded. So I was going to go to practice once every five days until something happened. I know that the New York Giants and Philadelphia Eagles are interested in me, and maybe the Chicago Bears," said Siani.

But the Raiders have not shown any inclination to trade Siani, a valuable backup man to Cliff Branch and Fred Biletnikoff.

Asked what would happen if he were not traded and did not play, Siani said, "I'm not sure about anything right now. I only know I want to play. I'd like to be with the Raiders, but if I can't play here I want to go someplace I can."

Foli foiled

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — San Francisco Giants shortstop Tim Foli Tuesday was suspended for five days and fined $500 for his run-in with Atlanta pitcher Dick Ruthven Monday night.

A Giants spokesman said the penalty was levied by National League President Charles S. Feeney.

Foli and Ruthven, who pitched a four-hitter in the Braves' 4-0 victory, got into an argument after the Giants infielder grounded out to end the seventh inning. The two players exchanged words and began scuffling.

All four umpires blamed Foli, who was ejected, for the incident.

Experts examine violence

BRUSSELS [UPI] — What makes soccer fans run amok in stadiums, go rampaging through streets smashing windows, damaging cars? What can be done to curb violence in and outside sports stadiums?

These and many other questions will be discussed for two days by more than 100 experts from 22 European nations at the first international congress on violence in sports, starting today at the Brussels Egmont Palace.

"We want to put an end to violence in sports. But like for any illness, we first need a diagnosis — where is the evil? What are the causes? What means can be used to do away with this evil? Who should apply these remedies?" said Vic DeDonder, attache to the Minister of Flemish culture.

The Minister, Mrs. Rika DeBacker, got the idea for the Congress when the Belgian government ordered a general study of violence in the contemporary society about a year ago.

All member-countries of the council of Europe and the international sports federations have been invited to send delegates to the congress.

The congress will split into four working parties — scientific research into the causes of violence, measures that can be taken by federations and clubs, measures by the authorities, and the mass media and sports.

East results

Pirates 5, Phils 4

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Dale Berra, who had only two hits in his previous 18 major league at bats, singled home Al Oliver with none out in the 11th inning last night to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 triumph over the Philadelphia Phillies.

The victory enabled the Pirates to climb within six games of the first place Phillies in the National League East.

Oliver opened the 11th with a single and Duffy Dyer also singled off reliever Gene Garber before Berra delivered his game-winning hit.

Rich Gossage struck out three of the six batters he faced in gaining his 10th victory against nine losses.

Mets 5, Expos 3

NEW YORK [UPI] — Steve Henderson drove in three runs yesterday to lead the New York Mets to a 5-3 victory over the Montreal Expos, although the Mets were held to just five hits by six Expo pitchers.

Henderson singled home Lenny Randle and Bruce Boisclair in the sixth inning and drove in another run in the eighth, to raise his RBI total to 51 in 75 games with New York.

Fred Holdsworth, now 2-1, was the starter and loser for the Expos.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 1

CHICAGO [UPI] — Ted Simmons batted in two runs with a home run and a single yesterday and Tom Underwood pitched his first complete game in 14 starts, scattering six hits, to lead the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Lou Brock stole two bases, the fourth time this year and the 130th in his career that he has swiped twice in one game, and scored the Cardinals' first run. Brock opened the game with a single, stole second, reached third on a passed ball and scored on Garry Templeton's single.

After Templeton was caught stealing in the first, Simmons hit his 18th homer. Then in the third, Templeton beat out an infield single, reached second on Steve Ontiveros' error, advanced on an infield out and scored on Simmons' single.

West results

Dodgers 3, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO [UPI] — Bill Russell scored from third base with the tie-breaking run when third baseman Mike Ivie threw low to first base with two out in the 10th inning yesterday, enabling the Los Angeles Dodgers to nip the San Diego Padres 3-2.

The victory lowered the Dodgers' magic number to 14 for clinching the National League West Division pennant. Reliever Elias Sosa, 2-2, picked up the win and knuckleballer Charlie Hough earned his 20th save by hurling the bottom of the 10th.

With two out, Los Angeles loaded the bases in the 10th when Russell singled in the infield and losing reliever Dan Spillner, 6-5, walked Reggie Smith and Ron Cey.

Astros 8, Reds 3

HOUSTON [UPI] — Art Howe drove in three runs with a double and a single last night to lead the Houston Astros to their 10th win in the last 11th games, an 8-3 decision over the Cincinnati Reds.

Joaquin Andujar, 11-5, making his first start since July 14 when he pulled a hamstring muscle, hurled the first six innings to pick up the win. He is 5-1 lifetime against his former Cincinnati teammates. Joe Sambito finished up, recording his sixth save. Doug Capilla, 6-7, was the loser for the Reds.

Howe's single scored Bob Watson, who had doubled, with the Astros' first run in the second.

Giants 12, Braves 2

ATLANTA [UPI] — Bob Knepper hurled a five-hitter and Willie McCovey drove in four runs to pace the San Francisco Giants to a 12-2 shelling of the Atlanta Braves last night before a sparse crowd of only 877.

San Francisco scored once in the first when Derrel Thomas led off with a single, went to second on a wild pitch by starter Eddie Solomon, 4-5, and scored on a single to right by McCovey.

The Giants knocked out Solomon with five runs in the third. Knepper and Thomas led off with singles, Rob Andrews walked and Darrell Evans followed with a two-run double.

AL East - status quo

Jackson, Fisk spark wins

Yankee George Zeber is tagged out by Indians' catcher Fred Kendall after trying to score from second on a single to left. The mistake didn't prove fatal, though, as New York broke a two-game losing streak with an easy 8-3 win over Cleveland. The victory keeps the Yankees 2½ games ahead of the red hot Red Sox in the wild American League East Race. (UPI)

Bill Lee stalks on top of the mound toward Carlton Fisk during last night's 11-2 Boston win. Toronto tagged Lee for 11 hits, but the Red Sox lefty held the Blue Jays at bay until getting relief help. The win was the second in as many starts for Boston's only left-handed starter. It was the Red Sox' fifth straight win. (UPI)

Reggie - 3 RBI

Yanks down Tribe...

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Reggie Jackson drove in four runs with a double and a three-run homer last night and Lou Piniella belted a solo shot to spark an 8-3 victory by the New York Yankees over the Cleveland Indians.

After Piniella snapped a 2-2 deadlock in the sixth with his 10th homer, the Yankees chased starter and loser Dennis Eckersley, 13-12, with a four-run seventh, capped by Jackson's drive deep into the rightfield seats. It was Jackson's 24th homer.

Run-scoring doubles by George Zeber and Jackson gave the Yankees single scores in the second and third innings, but the Indians rallied back with single runs in the fourth and fifth.

New York starter Dick Tidrow, making his third start of the season and sixth over the last three years, allowed only five hits but walked six batters before departing in the sixth after giving up a pair of walks with one out. Sparky Lyle came on to pitch out of the jam, but the Indians tagged the left-handed reliever with one run in the seventh before Lyle struck out Rom Pruitt with the bases loaded.

Mickey Rivers' infield single scored Roy White from third with the final New York run in the eighth as Tidrow notched his ninth victory against four losses and Lyle chalked up hsi 22nd save. The victory also enabled the Yankees to maintain their 2½ game lead over Boston the American League East.

...Sox silence Jays

TORONTO [UPI] — Carlton Fisk drove home seven runs with a grand slam homer in the first inning and a three-run shot in the eighth while Fred Lynn drove in two others with a solo homer and a single last night to power the Boston Red Sox to an 11-2 rout of the Toronto Blue Jays.

The victory was Boston's fifth in a row and enabled the Red Sox to remain 2½ games behind the division leading New York Yankees in the American League East.

Left-hander Bill Lee spaced 11 hits over seven innings to record his seventh victory against three losses. Jim Willoughby finished up. Rookie Mike Darr, making his first major league appearance, lasted only 1 1-3 innings and gave up five runs in taking the loss.

Fisk's grand slam, the second of his career, came with two out in the first after Darr gave up a single to Rick Burleson, a walk to Lynn and hit Jim Rice with a pitch. Fisk then highlighted a five-run Boston eighth with his 21st homer of the season after Rick Miller opened the inning with a single and Rick Burleson followed with a double. Singles by Lynn and Rice accounted for two runs prior to Fisk's blast.

Lynn's solo homer, his 16th, came in the sixth off reliever Tom Murphy.

Sale could prove costly

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Red Sox, which have been put up for sale, have lost money in two of the last five years and could be a bad investment, according to figures obtained by Boston television reporter.

In a broadcast aired last night, Clark Booth of television station WCVB reported the team's average profit from 1972 to 1976 was $570,174.60. Booth said he obtained the complete financial report of the Red Sox prepared for the executors of the estate of Tom Yawkey, the team's late owner.

The Red Sox lost money in 1972 and 1974, the report said, while reaping their largest profit in 1975 — when the team won the pennant and pushed the World Series to seven games.

When Yawkey died last July, his affairs were turned over to a trust. The Red Sox were put up for sale April 1 after members of the trust decided running the team was not a good investment. In his 42 years of ownership, Yawkey lost approximately $7 million.

Questioned once on why he spent so much money on his team, Yawkey snapped, "What business is it of anyone how I spend my money? Other people indulge in hobbies. Why shriek about it if I want to spend money on something I like?"

Booth's figures, checked by a Boston auditing firm and circulated among the groups bidding to buy the team, seem to verify the opinion the team is not a good investment for a businessman who is not a baseball fan.

The report says generally sports investors want a complete return on their investments in 10 years. WCVB has learned the average bid for the team was aboot $13 million.

The report says considering the average profit over the last five years it would take at least 22 years for the investor to get his money back.

In 1976, the team made $1,484,755 in profits, $1,635,284 in 1975, and $94,275 in 1973.

On the red side of the ledger, the Red Sox lost $134,346 in 1974 — when they faltered toward the end of the season, and lost $229,116 in 1972 — when the season was shortened by a players' strike.

The detailed analysis contradicts a statement made by general manager Dick O'Connell at the time the Red Sox were put up for sale.

In announcing the team was accepting bids O'Connell said, "The Red Sox have made money for the past 10 years, with the exception of one year that they broke even."

There oughta be a law

There oughta be a law.

Where has the time gone?

Seems like only yesterday spring training had ended. The Red Sox were returning to Boston from Florida, ready for the regular season to open.

And when it did, fair weather fans were almost sorry it even bothered to start.

The Sox were the last team to win their first game, starting off the year with four losses.

That seemed to set the pace for the rest of the season.

The roller-coaster Sox have slumped and shone in streaks. To steal from The Globe, they've been consistently inconsistent (or is it inconsistently consistent?). Whatever.

And now it's almost over. There isn't enough time left in the season for the Sox to have both a long losing streak and counter it with a winning one too. They're going to have to make up their collective minds to make a run for it, or blow it.

And they can do either next week.

For the benefit of those who forgot to pack their Sox schedule before leaving home, check this out: beginning next Tuesday, the Yanks and Sox will go at it three times in New York, before Boston heads to Baltimore for three there. When the Sox return to Fenway, Reggie and the boys will be waiting there for a two-game series.

Should the Sox be out of it, mathematically, following their closing game vs, the New Yorkers (it is possible) they can use Sept. 21 and 22 (open days) thinking up excuses.

Look at it this way, A lot has been printed on whether the Sox can still climb into first place or not. If they do, it'd make a heart-warming movie.

If they don't, sports fans in the area can turn their attention to the Patriots, who are all set to begin their regular season.

And sooner than you think, both the Bruins and Celtics will get underway. The Celts are always good, right in the race until the end.

The Bruins don't have to be good. The National Hockey League is fixed so that almost any team that can afford to pay the entrance fee will make the playoffs (so the Canadiens can win the Cup).

Sports all year long. Baseball, football, hockey, basketball. Then the cycle repeats, over and over and over and over....

I wonder what would happen if there weren't sports. That would eliminate the sports page (oh, no!!).

The Spalding Company could go out of business.

And 'exciting' announcers like Ken Harrelson and Len Berman would be unemployed. Heaven forbid.

Yeah, I guess it's good that sports exist.

Now if our guys down there in Fenway would be good enough sports to overtake the Yankees, everything would be A-OK.

We can't have the Yankees representing the American League in the World Series. Not after that display they put on last year (vs. Cincinnati).

Plus, they give their batboys too big a share of Series money.

There oughta be a law.

Nummo Editorial Policy:

Black Student Activism.

Nummo News Editorial Policy
by Wadada Tzake

Classes have begun and a new school year permeates the environment. But before we get to heavily involved in the process of studying let us pause for a moment to highlight the historical responsibility of Black students.

The mere fact that you are at UMass places you among the "privileged" class of youth of the world for much less than 10 per cent of the people in the world under the age of thirty have opportunities to obtain knowledge as easily as we have — knowledge is the foundation of action; what you can do depends on what you know. If you don't know, you can't do.

As Black students we must become concious of our position in the economy in America and flow with the tide of humanity against oppression. If we work for the continuation of the American economic system (capitalism — inhumanity) — we will be destroyed when the process of change is instituted. Reality does not transform itself, we are the ones who have to transform it. Students in South Africa are still demonstrating to the world that the youth will never accept oppressive confinement. Despite the overwhelming odds these students have been unrelenting in the struggle to end oppression. Here in America Black students who are now in college will have to deal with the reality of the oppression of being "qualified" and "unemployed" after graduation.

If Black college youth can't get the "pie in the sky" that immediately implies that no segment of the Black population can either. Black students should take heed of their historical responsibility to supply leadership to the disinherited brothers and sisters. The struggle for Black liberation against racism, and all forms of oppression of man by man should be one of our principal concerns.

We have a critical role to play in the future of the world. Mere assimilation into the institutional framework in an individualistic attempt to "get over" is useless. It is essential for us to transcend our individuality, to percieve our collective reality and to try and transform it for the elevation of our race. Understand that the American educational system was also designed to perpetuate the oppression of Black people but that as a student here you will be exposed to many learning experiences which can be utilized to end that very oppression.

The thing to do is to become involved in transforming action. The principle outlet for this transforming action is your academic area. Whatever may be your educational objective, it should be persued from the perspective of utilizing it to help organize Black people, both nationally and from a Pan Afican ideology, for their own improvement and elevation.

In addition to your academic area, another very significant outlet for a Black student to gain experience in transforming action is through involvement in Black student organizations. Organizations such as Afro Am Society, Drum, Black Scientist Society, Nummo News, BMCP and the Third World Women's Center are all avenues through which Black students can again invaluable experience in organizing skills and in administration responsible positions.

However, due primarily to a lack of collective spirit among Black and other Third World students most of these organizations are understaffed and suffering from a lack of student participation.

Presently, Nummo News in particular, is suffering from a lack of student participation. We are in serious need for Third World Students who are studying in the field of Mass Communications and Journalism or have even a slight interest in the area of Black publications, to come and take responsible positions on our staff and participate in informing the people. There are three paid editorial positions; News Editor, Cultural Affairs and Managing Editor, along with two paid workstudy secretarial positions. Any Black or Third World student who is interested in training for any of these positions should attend our weekly staff meeting on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. in 103 New Africa House.

Nummo is a swahili word exemplifying the communicative unifying power of the spoken and written word. It is a weekly publication of the Black students at the University of Massachusetts and is located at room 103 New Africa House, UMass, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

The newspaper is meant to be a communicative instrument for Black and other third world students and organizations at the University. It contains news and information by and about third world people for the entire Pioneer Valley community.

Nummo will serve as a bridge to bring about a better understanding of the struggle and suffering of poor and oppressed people to all its readers.

The newspaper welcomes items from everyone: news, letters, to the editor, announcements, book reviews, and commercial advertisements etc.

Copy deadline is on Friday by 5:00 p.m. Typed submissions may be placed in the envelope on our office door.

The Third World corridors in Webster (7th fl) and Grayson (5th fl have been systematically abolished. For the past 6 years Third World Students have resided on Orchard Hill in Grayson and Noah Webster dorms. There has been a continual Cultural Renaissance that has helped Third World Students keep their perspective of where they are, where they are going, and what they are about.

The Third World corridors are not an attempt to segrate Third World Students to a specific area. Third World Students have found it necessary to be centralized because of the racism that exist. There have been confrontations of this sort in the past and inorder for Third World Students to prevent being victimized they set-up the Third World corridors.

Lisa Clarke has been trying since the beginning of the semester to recruit Third World Students to Noah Webster. Lisa Clarke is the counselor of 7th floor Noah Webster. Lisa Clarke stated that she was allotted a certain amount of time to recruit Third World Students before the Third World corridor rooms would be assigned to Non-Third World Students.

Lisa Clarke got together with Samaj Lycurgus and organized a recruitment drive in New Africa House which was very successful. Many Third World Students turned out and pledged for the Third World corridors. But, the Head of Residence of Noah Webster. Nancy O'Neil has assigned rooms on the Third World corridor to Non-Third World Students jumping the gun and stopping her efforts to fill all the rooms on the Third World corridor.

Lisa Clarke stated that when Third World Students arrived at Noah Webster and asked to be assigned to a room on the Third World corridor they were lied to, they were told that the rooms were all filled up when they weren't.

According to Lisa Clarke the Head of Residence of Noah Webster Nancy O'Neil is the blame. According to Lisa Clarke, Nancy O'Neil said she would assign people to Third World corridors who have funny sounding last names, knowing full well that the students she assigned were not Third World Students.

The Third World corridor in Noah Webster had at the beginning of the semester 27 possible spaces for Third World Students. Out of the 27 possible spaces 14 are filled by Third World Students. The remaining 12 spaces are filled by Non-Third World Students.

Education and Race

By W.J. Wheeler
Reprinted from
Nummo News 4-11-77

Education and Race is very important in this country in that it can account for the election of Presidents or the non-election of Presidents.

These are the words of Dr. Wilfred Cartey, author and educator. He talked about Education and Race in his historical perspective of it at The Center for Racial Understanding. The following are the chosen words of Dr. Cartey.

Dr. Wilfred Carter: author and educator

Some years ago I remember George Wallace standing in front of the door of a University trying to keep out a black student from entering. If we think of that it is a very odd thing to do, to stand and say you give your life to prevent a man from going into a room to hear words that he should be hearing all the time.

I think that this is a model that education and race are linked together in that if you educate a man then you cannot enslave him, and if slavery means than race is enslaved. To educate a race means that you cannot continue to think that a race is inferior and you are superior.

Education in this country has been used to deny blacks entry into the basic environment in this country. I am not saying that the environment is good for blacks or bad but any education is meant to feed a person and give him or her the necessary tools to enter into the environment, to live with it and benefit from its growth, adding to it and receiving from it, any education that does not do that is a waste of time. The only reason which anyone should get an education is to live to create to help to add to the environment and to support it. But blacks have been left out of the environment, that interaction, that intersection of living in that environment of just breathing lifes vibrations blacks' have been excluded from that or if they have not been excluded they have been included only when violent actions have taken place, court cases. The process is a to and fro movement all the time of exclusion and inclusion, inclusion at the price of violence.

The period in which we are now in is again a period of exclusion which is now called reverse discrimination following a period of inverse inclusion.

Africans were snatched out of their environment and placed into a different environment and no education was replaced, no education meaning none, except to try to christianize, was to deny the basic human rights. Clearly then that has been the pattern of the relationship between education and race, the denial of basic rights to blacks in this country and in Africa and in other countries during colonial times again an attempt to deny the basic rights of people in their own country. So the play between education and race is a very intrinsic play. The movement of blacks in this country towards education has been a movement to reach back to Africa to the traditional sense of things either well or badly not having known these traditions very well and at the same time to attempt to integrate into the society, a word which we know so well.

The christianization of blacks in this country was not by accident. The christianization was a way to educate into acceptance of an animal status. The christianization of blacks was to martyr them without giving them the validity of being martyred, and the process away from that has been a process of education and race. To integrate into the society is to lose one's self, as you go into something else you become integral by going into another process which is not of yours. The shutting out of blacks from the societal and environmental and the attempt of blacks to enter into life here even while trying to reach back to Africa has become that ambiguous ambivalance search for many blacks. The basic search for one's self and the basic holding on of one's self.

If you follow me then you see that from slavery to freedom there is a movement of blacks into selfdom and into their own education, so that when we look at people like Booker T. Washington and Dr. W.E.B. DuBois we see a confrontation of inegrate non-integrate, except, reject, various searches into possibilities of the technical non-technical approach into the society. The validation process interms of education and race has infected blacks and that comes back from that whole enslavement self and that whole inegrating into something else.

Built into the educational process in this country still is that process that started with slavery, that of negating the tradition and negating the presence and negating the human qualities of blacks. This meant turning blacks heads around to value themselves as trying to be white. So linked to education is a whole psychological transformation.

Education has been made into a dislocated process in the last five hundred years, and in this country the same process took place. Education can only come to blacks when they know themselves, when they don't have to grasp outside to try to validate themselves. When black can work with their hands if they have to then they can work with their heads when they have to, that combination of essences they have to bring together. Education is the most important thing for blacks, they have to know technology, they have to know chemistry, biology and they must retain soul, the humanistic and technological ends.

Organizing The Black Community

Scence outside New Africa House at Unity Rally Spring '76

by Mark Hickson

This summer marked the reconvening of the New Africa House Steering Committee on a regular basis. To those who are unfamiliar with the Steering Committee, it is nothing new to the Third World Community. In fact, the Steering Committee was formed during the transformation of Mills House into New Africa House in 1970. It was then that the Committee took on the responsibility of the overall maintenance and upkeep of New Africa House and the overseeing of the activities which took place in it. But since 1970 the Steering Committee has met sporadically and inconsistently.

This summer some ten concerned Third World students came together to try to remedy this situation by reorganizing the Steering Committee and establishing some tangible goals to be achieved. The result has been that since June 2, of this summer the Steering Committee has been meeting weekly and sometimes bi-weekly. From these productive meetings have come new ideas, new concerns and new objectives concerning the Steering Committee and its relation not only to the Black community but to the entire Third World community as a whole.

With some new ideas at hand and using a combination of politics and culture, the Steering Committee sponsored two events this summer. In July the musical group Jade was brought to the Lumumba Room of New Africa House for our first summer community gathering. Jade, the backup group of singer Jean Carn, combined an original blend of rythm and blues with some contemporary creative funk which kept the packed audience jumping all night. In conjunction with this event, the Steering Committee passed out a questionnaire to the community audience. The purpose of the community questionnarie was to get new ideas and suggestions concerning Third World events and to get a general political consensus of the Third World Community.

The second activity sponsored by the Steering Committee featured the Unity Ensemble. The Ensemble, a familiar guest among the Amherst community, had the Lumumba room filled as they displayed their technical prowess and genius; creating their own unique brand of creative Black music. During intermission more anouncements were made concerning the Steering Committee and its goals and objectives.

Also this summer during CEEBS Orientation, the Steering Committee passed out questionnaires to incoming Third World freshmen. This was to get a general idea of what kind of skills the incoming freshmen have and what kinds of things they would like to do this year outside of their academics.

Objectives for the present-Ples to .Third World Organizations

With the groundwork firmly laid for a progressive year, the Steering Committee would like to voice some ideas which we think the Third World Community should seriously think about.

One of these ideas is that we would like to see .Third World activities organized and coordinated in a much more oderly-centralized manner. One way of helping to ameliorate this problem of poor coordination of activities is to organize activities around specific themes. Here, the Steering Committee has proposed that the theme for the month (Sept. 1977) for the Third World community be, "Student Involvement in the Third World." We feel that this is an appropriate theme for this month because this is the time of year when organizations are actively recruiting students to join them. Therefore, student involvement is the prerequisiste for all organizations if they wish to function. If this theme is continually reiterated and attempts are made to actually recruit Third World students into organizations, then we have the makings of some real progress with positive direction. The Steering Committee has also suggested some themes for the following months such as: Craeman Gethers-Earl Brown-Kenny Chin, The Struggle in South Africa, U.S. Imperialism in Puerto Rico, Africa and South Korea, and University cutbacks of Third World students and programs.

In speaking of student recruitment for Third World organizations, the Steering Committee will attempt to do this on a mass level later this month on September 20 when we sponsor a mass Third World Community meeting -Organizational Fair. At this meeting we hope to have tables set up so that each Third World organization can give out information about its organization while it recruits new students into its organizations. More information will be printed in the next Nummo News about this meeting.

We would also like to make the Steering Committee a centralized coordinating body for the Third World Community. This could be accomplished if each Third World organization had representation on the Steering Committee by sending at least on of its members to the weekly Steering Committee meetings held on Tuesdays at 5:00 p.m. With all Third World organizations represented under one coordinating body, then centralized coordination of activities, funds and ideas could take place. This would also alleviate the possibility of activities clashing with one another when they occur at the same time.

Another idea is to have a centralized calendar set up in New Africa House so that students will have a consistent source of information concerning community events. Efforts are being made right now to see that the community calendar becomes a reality. The Steering Committee also plans to redecorate the Lumumba Room (where Yvonn's restaurant is located) with picture collages, posters and plants.

These are just some of the ideas that the Steering Committee is now trying to implement. To make these ideas a reality we need more support from Third World Students and Third World organizations. Again we urge all interested students and representatives from Third World organizations to come to the Steering Committee meetings on Tuesdays at 5:00 in the Shirley G. DuBois Library on the second floor of New Africa House. Bring all the ideas and proposals you have with you.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Nummo News

It's important to reiterate sorne of the issues around the Bakke-California Supreme Court decision because of the possible repercussions it may have upon Black and minority student enrollment at the University of Massachusetts. When we talk about using 10-15 percent quotas for minority student admissions in order to meet federal government affirmative action guidelines, we're not talking about discriminating against 'qualified whites.'

Specific quotas for minority enrollment, employment, and promotion were introduced by the federal government in-an attempt to combat institutional racism and to make up for past discrimination and injustices toward our Black population. Furthermore, people recognized that it wasn't practical for white middle-class professionals to work in Black and minority communities, which they knew little or nothing about.

How is it possible for a physician, psychiatrist, or teacher from a white middle-class background to effectively treat, or work with Black and minority patients, or pupils from a low-income status environment? Even if a physician, or teacher from outside the minority community obtains an overall view of the neighborhood he's about to work in, there will still be a considerable lack of subjective and cultural identification that might detract from the provision of quality service.

Quotas are a simple way of dealing with previous racial discrimination and with the imbalance between Black and other minority professionals and clients. Rather than looking at specific minority communities, matching the overall ratios of professionals and residents with the general population, and requiring each university to be responsible for training 'their share of' Black and minority professionals, 10-15 percent admission quotas, hardly enough to make up for the past injustices, are much easier to work with.

Where There Is Unity , There Is Strength

Nobody knows the trouble I see

by David Jackson

Where there is unity, there is strength...

Many folks are crying and lying — "There is no place to go and nothing to do" — lies, trash and garbage; ironically the door is there, open it and use your God given ability to love and support what the Creator has given you. This valley is abundantly graced with innumerable artists seriously dedicated in the arena of the performing arts. Be careful one to another, for the loss of loved ones from this fold, not only weakens our "tower of poer," but may somehow count use unworthy of their goodness. Think about it!

On the evening of the third day of this ninth month, Diana Ramos and the Theater Dance Workshop Ensemble, sponsored by Rick Jeffries of Jazz Loft North in Northampton's Main Street Center, unconditionally initiated and acted upon the goodness and pleasantry of dwelling in an uniquely harmonious atmosphere.

The mid-evening production was inaugurated with an instrumental call by anklet bells and conga from precussionist Chris Henderson of Unity Ensemble with a response from Kwaku Gyata playing an Ethiopian bass drum. These spirited rhythms dually inspired and ushered guest dancer Eno Donald Washington to the performance area. Washington's structured improvisation was the force, power, or energy permeating the entire upper row. His spastic variety of wing-footed jumps and leaps spiraling between his vigorously precise and consie movements perpetuated the commonness of rhythmic thought and sensationalism preserved thereafter.

"Here Now," an excerpt from a full length work, BLUES MONTAGE, commissioned by the National Endowment for the Arts, was choreograph by Diana Ramos. The excerpt was adapted as a folo and performed by Yves Toussaint. Toussaints's virile and theatrical dance of the unsupported vision of a leader enhanced the photographic montage prepared by photographer Edward Cohen highlighting his own works and those of James Van Der Zee, Eugene Smith and Fitz Walker. The sound of the Art Ensemble of Chicago, tape arrangement by Diana Ramos, ritually baptised Toussaints's vibrant portrayal consistent to human condition of ache, disbelief, glory, pain and strength.

Black People and Changes

The blues ain't

"This Child's Gotta Live," especially prepared for an anti-sterilization benfit, conceived and performed by Patti Oneal, was directed superbly by Diana Ramos. The prologue to this work was elaborately improvised by vocalist Beareather Reddy's wholesome excerpt of "Brown Baby": Diana Ramos' conga playing, mourning and wailing throughout Ms. Reddy's additional spontaneous vocalization eloquently surmise the ritual in agony. Patti Oneal's interpretive dance of anguish and grief was manifoldly captured in Judyie Brandt's improvisational narration of excerpts from Longston Hughes' "The Negro Speaks of Rivers" and Sarah E. Wright's novel "This Child's Gonna Live."

Mary Alice

Judyie Brandt remarkably portrays a woman who believes herself to be crippled, a Black woman alone she speaks to herself in "Mary Alice," a monologue adapted from "Les Femmes Noires" by Edgar White. Brandt effectively drifts in alcoholic nonsenses, rhetorically in and out of past thoughts and conversations — from rats to retirement, from a train ride by a "brother to" daddy said, black and poor and can't play a piano.

"Passion Flower," monologue excerpt from "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow is Enuf," written by Ntozake Shange, MS. Brandt convincingly reveal the negative and positive thoughts of A Black women who must somehow live above and below the hatred of her livelihood.

Diana Ramos' self-choreographed solo dance in Kathleen II personified and reminsced the trials and tribulations of Black women in oppression. The agility of Ms. Ramos' movements, together with use of her magnificently fluent facial distortions, reflected a pure possession of agony and pain. As a puppet on a string weakened by the power of its manipulator, Ms. Ramos' unlimited retardation with each mastered movement escorted her "givin up the ghost" shriek. The termination of Kathleen II hailed the taking of her burden and finally collapsing in the crucifision posture. This work was performed as an answer to the University of Massachusetts and its administration.

This Child's Gotta Live

Kathleen II

Piano Piece, excerpt from piano composition by Marion Brown, was accompanied by poem, "Black People and Changes, written and recited oratorically by John Williams. A work in progress inspired by Amina Meyers' interpretation of Marion Brown's piano composition "Sunday Come Down" the fusion of these to ideas was choreographed and joyously danced by Diana Ramos, as if she was grazing in the grass of a new found peace.

In "The Blues Ain't" a homage to the master, Duke Ellington, the solo and duet of Patti Oneal and Yves Toussaint culminated the evenings richness of imagery throughout the many fiery episodes.

Black Studies For Black Students

Professor Chester Davis: Associate Chairman of the Dept. of Afro-American Studies.

One concrete development that came out of the struggle of the 1960's was the establishment of Black Studies Departments on white university campuses. Prior to that time not only were blacks excluded from attending white campuses, their historical and cultural role in American society was not found in the curriculum of the Universities. Due to the increasingly complicated and technically oriented society institutions of higher learning were called on to play a vital and definitive role in the solution of the social problems facing America. Here are excerpts of an interview conducted with Chester Davis, Associate chairman of the Afro-Am dept on the history, ideology and future of the Afro-Am department here at UMass.

Nummo: What events led to the establishment of the Dubois Studies Department and what role did the Black students have?

The events started in 1969 when black students from UMass and other schools along with the climate in the rest of the country decided that they would like the establishment of an Afro-Am program. In 1968 the first significant amount of black students arrived at the University of Massachusetts through the CEEBS program. Before that in 1967 they were fewer than 40 black students on the UMass campus. The students and the few black faculty that were here decided that they would like an Afro-Am dept. They began to agitate. The black students took over the building that is now the New Africa House. After a series of negotiations with the administration the building was converted into the headquarters for the department, CEEBS and the cultural center. Before NAH was established Afro-Am courses were offered through the English department. The major for the department was developed in 1972 after the department had been in existance for 2½ years. By 1973, the department had 18 faculty members. In regards to the student participation, the students were the spear-head of the whole operation. Had it not been for the students nothing would have happened. Other colleges to, at that time established departments as a result of the momentum that existed at that time.

Nummo: Does the department have a clear cut ideology in regards to the liberation of Black people? Is so what is it.

If by ideology you are referring to marxism, pan Africanism cultural or revolutionary nationalism, the department does not have such an ideology that is precisely defined. Overall the majority of the faculty members lean towards Pan-African socialism as an overall ideological perspective. (Over the past 10 years through — out our experience with black studies departments we have found that for departments to lock themselves into a particular ideology can be self defeating. Vicious struggles have occured in departments which have committed themselves to specific ideologies. Many departments have been destroyed and this does a great disservice to the students. Departments which commit themselves to particular ideologies tend to hire faculty that reflect that particular ideology. We have tried to hire people who represent a particular expertise in their particular area and we have also tried to hire people who have been involved in the movement. Our faculty members are not only academics with degrees but have also been involved in community developments. Our committment is to black liberation. We understand that blacks have to liberate themselves and cannot depend on outside forces. Because international racism is tied into the whole question of capitalism and capitalist expansion and imperialism this is why we tend to lean towards a pan-African socialist view. Of course not all of our faculty members agree on everything but we do have a basis of agreement that allows us to function together.....

Nummo: What is the future of the department?

I feel that the black studies department here has an excellent future because we have institutionalized ourselves as a part of the university. We understood from the beginning that in order to be any use to the black students we had to stabilize ourselves as a department within the college of Arts and Sciences. We function like any other department. We have commanded the respect of not only the campus here but the whole university system. Our faculty have worked hard and the University realizes this. The department has 7 tenured faculty out of the total 15. This is a sign of stability. The department is now creating a graduate program in Afro-Am literature. We also plan to expand nationally. The 2nd annual convention of the national council of black studies will be held here next April. By heading these we will not only be hosting the convention but we will be establishing a black presence in the commonwealth of Massachusetts. We hope because of our stability to become a part of the national move that is beginning to develop black studies as a real national presence.

Afro-Am Needs Your Support

— A portion of the Afro Am courses for fall '77 are below the minimum enrollment. Afro Am is designed to dispel the myths about Africa, the myths about slavery, the myths about black people up from slavery and to the present. Afro Am explores the meanings of racism, capitalism, catholicism to the black experience in America and throughout the world. Some of the courses offered by the Afro Am department can be interchanged with English courses so that if an English major wants to take an Afro Am course without losing an English department required course this option is open to you. The add-drop period is from Sept. 1 thru 15, so look into the Afro Am courses right away.

The following courses have openings for the fall semester. Core designations are in parentheses ( ).

NATO Conference

Dr. Floyd Williams

By W. J. Wheeler

Dr. Floyd Williams, Professor of mathematics at UMass, has been invited to speak at the Nato Mathematical Conference in Liege, Belgium. The conference, which runs from September 5 thru 17, will feature outstanding Mathematicians and Physicists from the world over. Dr. Williams will deliver a paper entitled "Cohomology of discrete series representations".

Dr. Williams is the author of "Reduction of tensor products of principal series representations of complex semi-simple Lie groups", which is on the shelves of the UMass Library. He has also written several research papers which appear in various mathematical journals throughout the world.

This will be the first time that Dr. Williams has been invited to speak abroad, he has spoken at several conferences throughout America. At the last Conference where Dr. Williams spoke which was held at Williams College, Williams Town Massachusetts his topic was "Holomorphic analysis on homogeneous space". The Williams Town Conference was from Aug. 1 thru 21, 1975. Conferences such as this one and the Nato Mathematical Conference are held to bring together various mathematicians to discuss their theories. Dr. William's theory can be applied to the formulation of symetry principles and sub-atomic physics.

Open Letter To The Third World Community

So far, every Monday you have witnessed Nummo News — a supplement to the Collegian. You may love Nummo, you may hate it — but Nummo is the Voice of Our People, and if it seems weak, or ineffective, it is your fault. So far the responsibility of Nummo has fallen on the shoulders of a small band of people whose professions are not necessarily journalism. We, the Nummo staff are trying our best, but we are overworked.

Nummo invites talented and interested students of the 5-college community to come in and take leadership roles. Nummo invites those who do not have time for the commitment to contribute as often as they can. Contribute: thoughts, essays, artists, reviews, photographs, drawings, poems — and most of news. We need news correspondents from each of the 5 colleges. For instance if something of importance happens at Smith or Mount Holyoke LET US KNOW. If something is going to happen, LET US KNOW.

Nummo can be what you make it. Joining the Nummo staff — you will have a say in redirecting energies, pushing toward a higher consciousness. Don't accept Nummo as it is. CHANGE IT, DEVELOP IT. There are great possibilities for more funds to be allocated. There are possible credits to be earned as internship-independent study. There is a lot of experience to be gained by watching how our staff does lay-out. Learn journalism and lay-out techniques.

I want to express the fundamental and heartfelt wish of the Nummo staff. We want Nummo to survive, and we want you to CARE.

Resources For Third World Students

SELF-DETERMINATION FOR THE AFRO-AMERICAN NATION!
DEATH TO THE KLAN!

Who Are We?

Upon arriving at UMass we find that we are described as Third World students, whereas in our home communities we may have identified along racial and ethnic lines, i.e., Black, Latino, Asian-America, Chicano, Native American. Now it becomes necessary to understand the concept of Third World and how it applies to us as students. "Third World" is an economic and political term defining a group of underdeveloped countries whose natural resources support the powerful international capitalist countries, or the "First World". Being locked into this oppressive system, the lands and peoples of the Third World are exploited and are continuously involved in struggles to regain control over their native lands. This definition broadens when applied to Third World students. We are residents of the United States who share a common heritage of political and economic exploitation within the boundaries of this nation. We are subjected to an educational system that denies even our most basic cultural identities.

Our early struggles

During the late 1960's, Third World students around the country organized to confront the educational system's inadequacies. Some of the most immediate demands were for more meaningful courses, the hiring of more Third World faculty, an end to discrimination in admissions policies, and funding for Third World student organizations.

Black students at UMass challenged the University on all of these issues and emerged victorious. Students took over the building which is now the New Africa House, as a place to focus the activities of the Third World campus community. It is our responsibility as the present generation of Black, Latin and Asian-American students to work towards change in terms of what we are learning, who is teaching us and how well we are prepared to do meaningful work once we graduate.

How to become involved

At present, there are numerous Third World student organizations on campus which cover a whole spectrum of interests; communications and media, journalism, music, theatre, martial arts, political education, sciences, women's issues, graphic arts — essentially, wherever students have skills and talents to share. Following is a list of the organizations and a brief description of their functions:

Black Mass Communications Project

BLACK MASS COMMUNICATIONS PROJECT (402 Student Union; 545-2426) is currently responsible for programming over twenty hours a week of Black and Third World oriented radio programming on the campus radio station, WMUA. BMCP has afforded students a chance to develop skills in editing, newscast training, production work, remote tape recordings, and training to obtain a third class radio license.

Afro-American Society

AFRO-AMERICAN SOCIETY (424 New Africa House; 545-0794) is a student organization whose purpose is to reflect the many aspects of Afro-American culture. The group sponsors concerts, films, lecture series and other activities.

Asian-American Students

ASIAN-AMERICAN STUDENT ASSOCIATION is designed to bring awareness and understanding of one of the least recognized and understood minorities — 'the Asian-American'. The organization is active in political and educational areas on campus and in the community.

Black Scientists Society

BLACK SCIENTISTS SOCIETY (425 New Africa House; 545-0794) is comprised of any Third World student declaring a science major. BSS offers resources pertinent to the educational experience of such majors and forms study groups to aid its members.

Bilingual Collegiate Program

BILINGUAL COLLEGIATE PROGRAM (504 Goddell; 545-1987) was formed to meet the special needs of the state's Spanish-speaking residents who want a post-secondary education. The BCP has fostered development of bi-lingual couses. Their efforts have made the entire University community more responsive to the needs of Spanish speaking students by publicizing and promoting interests and issues shared by bi-lingual students on this campus.

THIRD WORLD

Black Affairs

BLACK AFFAIRS (113 Campus Center; 545-3500) is a news service published three times weekly through the Daily Collegian — the UMass student newspaper. Black Affairs provides up-to-date reporting on issues and events that effect the Third World campus community.

CCEBS

CCEBS — Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students (New Africa House) is an advocacy agency which offers academic counseling, career guidance, and tutorial services to Third World students at UMass. Through its autonomous admissions system, the CCEBS program can accept many Third World students. Once here CCEBS actively assists those students with economic and academic problems.

Third World Women's Center

THIRD WORLD WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION (B16 Baker House) offers workshops, discussion groups and special programs in a supportive atmosphere for Black, Latin, and Asian-American women.

Third World Senate Caucus

THIRD WORLD SENATE CAUCAS (420 Student Union; 545-0341) is a group of fifteen students representing the Third World student body within the Student Senate. The caucus members are involved in decisions concerning budget allocations, policy making and the general business of the Student Government Association.

WBLK

WBLK (424 New Africa House; 545-0767) is an independent radio station located in New Africa House. The station will serve the needs of the University and surrounding communities by highlighting a variety of issues from a Third World perspective.

Ahora

AHORA (407 Student Union; 545-2479) is the organized and united voice of the UMass Spanish-speaking community. Specific purposes of AHORA include recruiting Spanish speaking students for the University, promoting educational programs directed toward careers and job advancement, and supporting efforts to counter language barriers and cultural isolation.

Nummo News

NUMMO NEWS (103 New Africa House; 545-0061) is the Third World community newspaper at UMass, supplying news coverage by and about Third World people. The publication acts as a student training and placement organization for reporters, photographers, artists, and lay-out personnel.

Drum

DRUM (424 New Africa House; 545-0767) is the Black literary magazine at UMass catering to the Third World struggle in the Amherst area and world-wide. DRUM is published once each semester and provides an outlet for the literary and artistic talents of the Third World community.

Malcolm X Center: Center For Racial Understanding

MALCOLM X CENTER and THE CENTER FOR RACIAL UNDERSTANDING offer courses, and colloquia in Black Studies, racial awareness and understanding, community outreach, and courses that develop recognition of ethnic and cultural diversity.

The overall co-ordinating body of the Third World community is the NEW AFRICA HOUSE STEERING COMMITTEE which is comprised of representatives from every Third World organization. The Steering Committee meets regularly to assess the various programs that are offered and to dicuss community related issues. All Third World students are urged to participate on the Steering Committee, for by doing so we develop a strong collective ideology for our entire community.

With your input and your voice we can come together as a diverse yet unified group whose ideas become reality and whose lives are enriched. Our very survival depends on your active involvement.

Black Teens-Permanent Joblessness?

The plight of black teenagers, whose unemployment rates were not only the highest during the recession but have also proved the most unyielding, is viewed as a permanent part of the country's economic system.

These black youths are regarded as part of a secondary labor class, with little chance of moving out of the perpetual state of joblessness or of escaping the vicious cycle of low paying jobs that lack security or chances for advancement.

This is the picture that emerged in interviews with economists, labor analysts, manpower experts, community leaders and black teenagers themselves.

Contrary to the expectations raised by the Great Society programs of the '60s which aimed to break the cycle of poverty through training, remedial work and job counseling, the cycle proved resistant. In fact, as the recession lifts slowly for everyone else, the job condition of black teenagers and young adults is steadily deteriorating.

"The worst part of being unemployed for me is that I don't seem to belong anywhere," said Denise Davis, a 15 year old high school dropout from the Watts section of Los Angeles.

"I don't fit into school anymore. I don't have a husband or a baby to take care of. And I don't have a job. I just feel lost."

The argument by some economists that joblessness among black teenagers will be reduced by the normal process of labor market activity is contradicted by the persistence of the high jobless rates even in prosperous ties

In 1955, the jobless rate for black teenagers was 15.8 per cent, compared with 10.3 for whites of the same age. In 1965, it was 26.2 per cent, compared with 13.4. And in 1973, it was 30.2 per cent for blacks, compared with 12.6 for white youths.

The most recent statistics are equally dismal. As of June 1976, that rate, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, was 40.3 per cent for blacks, compared with 16.1 for whites of the same age.

Furthermore, the rate of joblessness among white teenagers, though still high, is expected to attenuate as a result of a declining birthrate of whites. The black birthrate, however, is three times that of whites and increasing.

Experts and teenagers alike contend that new policies must take these factors into account, as well as others, such as discrimination.

Dr. Bernard Anderson of the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania said, "Fiscal and monetary policies alone are not going to solve this problem. You have to have measures intended to increase job skills, that invest in human capital and that attack institutional barriers.

"The failure to attack these problems," Anderson said, "is tantamount to writing off the future of black people."

Earlier this year, the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, noting the predictions of severe unemployment through at least 1980, expressed its concern about the social, economic and psychological impact of the unemployment on young people.

"I don't think I have much of a future," said Rachel Smith, a high school dropout, who lives with her mother in Watts. "I just get by from day to day."

By most accounts, the economic plight of black teenagers is worsening.

In many cities, so many adults are out of work that funds once used to aid unemployed youths are now being diverted to adults.

In some cities, federal aid itself has been cut.

Though some of these problems may be eased somewhat during an economic recovery, others, like discrimination and poor schooling, are viewed as more intractable.

Adults and students alike complained that students were not being prepared in school academically or through vocational counseling.

At the same time, however, Anderson's research indicated that job hunting for black youths was "less favorable" than for white youths largely because of discrimination.

Veron Evans, a graduating high school senior in Los Angeles, said that he had applied to "about 110 places" but has had no luck.

"Employers are very afraid to hire black men today," he said. "Even if you come to an interview clean-shaven, short hair, looking real nice, they think you are going to rob the place or do some kind of damage. You might be a genius, but they will never give you a chance."

Third World Community Orientation

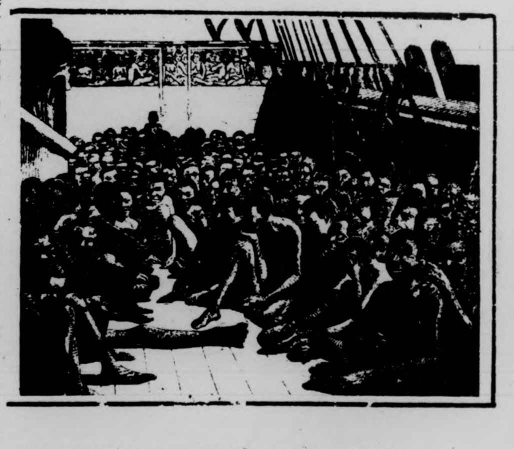
Attention all Black, Asian and Latin students. There will be a Third World Organization Fair and Community Meeting on Tuesday, September 20 at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. All Third World Students are asked to attend.



The slaveship "Wildfire" as it arrived in Floride in 1860. Our labor was needed in 1860 - to the point of kidnap, rape, murder... but in 1976 we are no longer economically in demand by racist whites. What is the future for our black youths?

Main Street Center; Summer Spot For Black Music

Internationally reknowned saxophonist Marion Brown

Unity Ensemble featuring Sulaiman Hakim on reeds and Chris H. Henderson on drums and African percussion opened an array of summer concerts at the Main Street Center in Northampton. Jazz Loft North with Rick Jeffries made the arrangements and scheduled performances for the series. Jeffries, looking back to the planning stages stated, "We wanted to see if the people who live here year-round would support quality music." He concluded after noting the success of the Ramos Theatre Dance Workshop Ensemble of this last weekend, "We have a solid core here."

Unity Ensemble performed early in July, singer Semenya McCord added her moving vocals to each set. The ensemble played as tight as ever but took off in surprising ways. In mid-July Michael Gregory Jackson performed with instruments — acoustic and electric guitar, flute and his own vocals which included poetry and improvisational recitations. Though his performance coincided with the two hottest days of the year, people attended and conveyed that they had heard alot. Jackson's album, CLARITY has just been released.

Unity Ensemble performed August 19th and 20th to a full house. Kalem Zarif (Billy Galt) was guest keyboardist and dance artists Eno Donald Washington was introduced to the area. People got into the arrangement with Chris Henderson playing congos and Eno dancing in an African motif. For both concerts. Unity Ensemble added a rich bass section calling on the talents of Kevin Ross and Avery Sharpe. Butch Campbell who plays guitar debuted his composition "Anu" in honor of his newborn son, and "all Black people". Sulaiman Hakim and Chris Henderson, as they always do, dissipated any attempts to corner their music definitionly. Rhythms and reed songs, complex and serene; balafon solos; blues streaming from the brass throat — drum talk and crescendos, full ensemble arrangements. This gave examples of Black classical music in it's most vibrant state. Unity Ensemble is on the more.

Sulaiman Hakim

Chris Henderson

The Marion Brown-Steve McCall Duo played August 26th and 27th, again to another full house very generous and ready with applause. This concert was the 10th anniversary of the Brown-McCall musical association. Those listening applauded the opening phrases of Brown's "and then they Danced."

The Unity Ensemble

Steve McCall

The duet dissolved time settting forth spontaneous improvisations, basic sketches, solos and a repertoire of compositions by Marion Brown. Brown has a quartet album to be released by Timeless Records this fall.

Diana Ramos and the Theatre Dance Workshop Ensemble performed September 2nd and 3rd. She directed the fusion of so many elements and art forms besides the dance works that she has choreographed. If this dance concert is sign of what she has in mind for the coming period, we have a lot to look forward to.

Diana Ramos

This summer series was made possible by the forsight of Floyd Andrus despite warnings from fellow business men referring to the May Day concert fiasco. Andrus wanted to support quality music and artists and provided the space and personal assistance that in fact proved his point. Presently he with Jeffries are planning a Fall-Winter series that will guarantee top quality concerts twice monthly. Jeffries said, We are trying to breakdown distinctions between musical styles. We also want to provide a showcase for younger musicians. We want to blend in local talent along with bringing to the ever growing audience here, musicians who are traveling. After we get a footing, musicians themselves will want to check out this area knowing that their is interest and support here. With this, we will be doing our part to continue a music tradition."

Eno Donald Washington

some people and groups to perform will include Vea Williams, Tim Moran, "Avatar," Joe Fonda, Brandon Ross, Steve McCraven, Terry Jenour, "Air," "John Betsch Society," Marion Brown, Unity Ensemble, Archie Shepp, Max Roach, Vishnu Wood, Kalem Zarif (Billy Galt), The Ed Blackwell Trio, Oliver Lake, and Michael Gregory Jackson.

Chris Henderson and Sulaiman Hakim in a recent interview stressed how appreciative they were of the people who attended their concerts and who inquire about their forth coming appearances and recordings. Henderson said, "We feel good playing in this area. I dig it. I dig the people who come to hear the music."

Black Unemployment Rates

WASHINGTON [AP] — The summer unemployment rate among black youths this year rose to the highest level ever recorded, with more than one out of three unable to find jobs, the Labor Department reported Wednesday.

The department said the number of unemployed blacks, aged 16 to 21, increased by 100,000 since July 1976 to a total of 756,000 this summer. Their jobless rate, at 34.8 per cent, was up almost 4 per cent.

By comparison, joblessness among all youths in the 16-21 age group, whites as well as blacks, declined slightly from last summer, dropping to 15.3 per cent from 15.9 per cent in July 1976. But the department said it was only white youths who benefitted.

By comparison, the over-all U.S. unemployment rate in July was 6.9 per cent. The rate for blacks and other minorities was 13.2 per cent while the rate for whites was 6.1 per cent.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall called the figures for black youths "most disturbing."

But Marshall defended the Carter administration's efforts to create jobs against recent attacks by black leaders and organized labor who have contended that the administration isn't doing enough.

He told a news conference "it's a serious misstatement of the situation to say we're not doing anything.

Marshall announced plans to establish three new Job Corps centers — in Albany, Ga.; San Bernadino, Calif., and Benton, Pa. — and the signing of an interagency agreement with the departments of agriculture and Interior to administer the new Young Adult Conservation Corps for jobless youths.

Both measures were part of a $1-billion program recently signed into law by President Carter to put 200,000 young people to work in public service jobs, park and forestry projects.

The announcements came as Carter met with municipal officials at the White House to assure them that his administration will move more rapidly to spur housing and economic development in the nation's cities.

Marshall told reporters that the various administration programs will have a "substantial effect" on unemployment among young people. Many of these programs will focus on inner city blacks, who have traditionally suffered the severest unemployment problems.

The three new Job Corps centers will be the first of a planned dozen new ones planned in the next 12 months. The administration is proposing to double the size of the corps from about 50,000 presently enrolled in 61 centers to about 100,000.

Free Assata Shakur

Assata Shakur

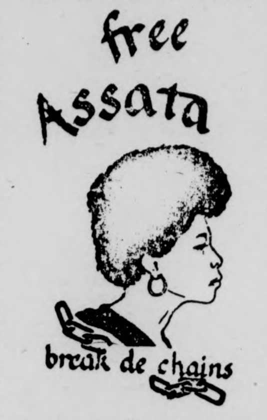
Assata Shakur-Joanne Chesimard, Sundiata Acoli-Clark Squire, and Zayd Malik Shakur were stopped on May 2, 1973 by state troopers on the New Jersey Turnpike. The shoot-first, ask-questions-later incident that ensued resulted in the murder of Zayd as well as the serious wounding of Assata. Trooper Werner Foerster was killed. Assata and Sundiata were charged with several counts of murder, assault, and possession of weapons. Finally the state had these Black revolutionaries in a position they had wanted them in for some time, as part of the government's ongoing attempt to crush the movement for Black liberation in this country. Sundiata was tried in 1974, convicted on no direct evidence, and sentenced to life plus 30 years. Assata was tried in 1977 and was similarly railroaded. In April 1977 she was sentenced to life plus 30 years.

As supporters of the Black liberation struggle, we recognize our responsibility to do support work for Sundiata as well as support work for Assata. The first manifestation of this has been the initiation of a campaign to publicize the conditions at Trenton State Prison. This first Assata-Sundiata Bulletin contains important background information as well as the latest update on the situation of both Assata and Sundiata.

Assata Shakur is a Black revolutionary woman who has long been a freedom fighter in the struggle for the liberation of the Black nation in the U.S. A. childhood in the south and an adolescence in New York led her to recognize that "anybody's life doesn't mean anything if you are Black in Amerika." After a series of slave labor jobs, Assata took the GED and enrolled in Manhattan Community College where she became a part of the Black student organization, and I met a lot of sistas and brothas who were into Black history and culture and who were talking about freedom for Black people. I took to them like a fish takes to water. I started reading everything I could get my hands on about Black history, culture and then politics and ideology. It was like being born again. Everything started falling together and for the first time in my life I had a clear understanding of the world I lived in. I began to see this country as the imperialistic octopus it is and to understand that this system cannot be improved — it must be destroyed and replaced by a complete change, a revolution. It was around then that I decided that the most important thinv in life for me was to struggle for the liberation of Black people and all oppressed people, to struggle against all forms of racism, capitalism, imperialism, sexism, and oppression. (1976)

Assata worked with the Black Panther Party in the community breakfast program, setting up free health centers and studying to be a para-medic as part of a medical cadre.

As the government's war against the Black liberation struggle escalated, Assata became a target of Cointelpro (Counter Intelligence Program). Cointelpro was part of the government's campaign to smash third world liberation forces and other struggles, a campaign which continues to this day. Cointelpro used a variety of repressive techniques including writing phony letters to create distrust, framing individuals on criminal charges and even resorting to murder.



Therefore, once she was captured, Assata was accused of a variety of charges including bank robbery, kidnapping and murder.

In the four years since the arrest on the Turnpike, in a series of trials, Assata has been consistently vindicated. Only the Cointelpro-inspired shoot-first policy of the state troopers has put Assata Shakur behind bars, adding her to a growing list of imprisoned Black leaders throughout the country.

In her trial in New Brunswick, which began January 17, 1977, the outcome was apparent from the start. Despite the findings of the National Jury Project that 80 per cent of the local population from which the jury would be drawn were convinced of her guilt and anxious to see her punished, Judge Appleby denied a change of venue; Appleby denied the defense the right to voir dire the jury; Appleby refused to allow Assata or her lawyers to read her opening statement, or to place the trial in a political context; Appleby ruled out any reference to Cointelpro and its declared war on Black people. The all-white jury, not interested in the truth, added to the racism of the entire proceedings. After a trial that lasted three months, less than two days of deliberation led to a verdict of guilty on all counts.

Throughout her four years of detention, Assata's status as a political prisoner has been clearly recognized by the government. Constant surveillance, isolation, denial of visitors and wrist and ankle shackles illustrate the government's insistence that she is a "high security risk." To further secure Assata's total isolation, she has been incarcerated in all men's jails and prisons for three years. Having spent 1¼ years in Middlesex County jail for men awaiting trial, she was, upon conviction, transferred to Clinton Correctional Institution for women. Simply because of her presence there, new harassment procedures were immediately instituted throughout the prison: daily strip searches, restricted yard and visiting privileges. The women protested by work stoppages. Assata was promptly transferred to Yardville Correctional Facility for adolescent males, where she was kept for four months. In July Assata was transferred to the Women's House of Detention on Rikers Island to face trumped-up charges in Brooklyn.

The treatment of Assata and Sundiata at the hands of Amerika is not unique. It simply illustrates what all Black brothers and sisters who struggle inside or outside prison walls can expect from a racist government, a government built upon and sustained by the lives and labor of the Black people detained within it. But no people will be held down forever. Black people in Amerika are rising and their chains too will be broken. Around the globe imperialism is under attack. The capital of capitalism cannot survive.

ASSATA UPDATE

Assata is still facing murder charges in Brooklyn Supreme Court. Of the 3 others indicted in the case, Twyman Myers was murdered by NYC police, Andrew Jackson's charges were dismissed and Avon White is a well-known agent who has testified in several cases. Assata's last appearance in this case was July 6 on a previous date — June 27 — the case was adjourned when Assata fell down on her way into court and was hurt because of the ankle and wrist shackles she is forced to wear. At the July appearance, September 19 was set down by Judge Starkey for pre-trial motions. Attorneys are preparing motions for dismissal based on failure to prosecute and the federal removal rule which makes it illegal to move a detainee back and forth between states more than once.

On the N.J. Turnpike case, the N.J. Appellate Division recently denied a motion for an appeal of Judge Appleby's denial of a fuller hearing on the mis-trial issue of Juror McGovern's escape from sequestration. A letter has now been sent to the N.J. Supreme Court asking for the right to appeal this further. Also, in the Turnpike case, the N.J. Public Defender's office is undertaking the appeal of the conviction because of Assata's indigent status.

Finally, the fact that the state of New Jersey keeps Assata in an all men's prison when she is in their custody — a violation of state law which has survived a hearing before Judge Fisher — is being appealed by P.R.O.D. and the National Conference of Black Lawyers.

Citizens review commission

On the weekend of October 21-23, The New York Citizen's Review Commission on the FBI will hold hearings on the conduct of FBI-Cointel-pro projects and activities. The purpose of the Commission and of these hearings will be to investigate and make public, the harassment, extra-legal and murderous activities (i.e. murders of Fred Hampton, Mark Clark, Sandra Pratt and Anna Mae Aquash) by the FBI and other law enforcement agencies. These activities have been and are used against the national liberation struggles, the women's movement, peace action groups, gay people, labor unions and other people struggling against U.S. imperialism.

Similar meetings were held recently in late 1976, in Minneapolis, focusing on the Minneapolis FBI Regional Office and its jurisdiction in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. The hearings focused on FBI activity against the American Indian Movement. The FBI, which had been invited to testify, refused to appear. The Minnesota Hearing Board Report and recommendations are available from the Native American Solidarity Committee (777 UN Plaza, NYC 10027). Four video tapes of the hearings are also available.

As in Minneapolis, the New York Hearing Board will be composed of about 25 people selected by the Review Commission and representing the viewpoint of Third World, religious, labor, educational and political communities. They will listen to testimony from a wide and representative spectrum of individuals and groups who have been the objects of FBI abuse. The testimony will reflect the methods used by the U.S. in foreign nations such as Vietnam, Cuba, Chile, and Angola. It will highlight the historical and present use of these tactics against Native American, Black, Chicano, Puerto Rican struggles and progressive people, as part of everyday U.S. policy.

Your help is needed. For the hearings to be effective, they must have the broadest possible participation and support from individuals and organizations concerned about constitutional guarantees and democratic rights.

It is our hope that you will want to sponsor the hearings, participate in one of the organizing committees and share this information with your membership, your friends, families, church, unions and other groups.

Testimony

If you or a member of your group can give pertinent testimony about government use of the FBI or any other agency to deprive and limit the exercise of democratic rights through harassment, intimidation, reprisals, surveillance or any other activity, we are interested in your participation. Testimony should run about 15 minutes. Recounting first hand experience is preferable, and should be documented if possible. It will in no way be censored. Presentations will be given by the groups and individuals submitting testimony; if you are unable to participate you can submit testimony to the Board. Final decisions on what will be presented will be made by the Hearing Board Steering Committee.

RESEARCH ASSISTANT

The C.A.O.S. (Counseling Assistance for Older Students) is looking for undergraduate and graduate students to fill the position of Research Assistant. Applications are being accepted now through Sept. 9th. Salary is paid through work-study at UMass. Familiarity with UMass and non-traditional students is helpful, but not necessary. A minimum of 10 hours per week is anticipated, and hours are flexible. Applicants should preferably be 23 years of age or older.

The Research Assistant will assist the Research Coordinator in updating the 1978 edition of the publication, "If Only I Had Known", and assess further needs of the non-traditional student. Other projects might include serving on a committee to develop a student teacher-course evaluation book, implement reform of dorm policy and conditions, etc. Although the Research Coordinator will oversee all research activity, the Assistant will assume responsibility and initiative for individual projects.

NEWS PERSON

The position would be to create and maintain a Third World Women's section of the EWC (Everywoman's Center Newsletter). Number of pages would be negotiable according to the person's desire and time. (The person would be getting ideas for stories, researching, reporting, and writing all the items in this section — so there will be time limitations.) There is a great deal of flexibility in content and in creation of the section in general.

The person would be working collectively with one EWC staff member and one credit intern in production of the total product. In addition to writing copy each member would edit, type copy for layout, do layout, and help distribute the Newsletter. The person would also work collectively with the other people in the group in doing correspondence and business related to the Newsletter — and perhaps writing an occasional press release.

Other duties include attending a staff meeting of all the Center's members for two hours per week and staffing at the front desk for two hours per week.

If you are interested in this position please come to Everywoman's Center before Sept. 9 anytime between 10:00 and 3:30 and talk to Buffy Spencer.

Ethel Waters

Ethel Waterp

CHATSWORTH, Calif. )UPI) — Ethel Waters, stage and screen star who captured the hearts of millions of fans with her earthy spiritual and blues renditions of "Stormy Weather" and "Am I Blue," died yesterday of an apparent heart failure at age 76.

Miss Waters, whose entertainment career spanned more than 60 years, died at the home of friends at 7:45 a.m. She had been ill for a number of years.

A deeply religious woman, the grey-haired Miss Waters made her Broadway debut in "Plantation Revue of 1924," scoring one of the great song hits ever when she introduced "Dinah". Miss Waters still was making television appearances in her 70's until she was beset by illnesses.

Stricken with diabetes and heart trouble during the 1960s and living on a small social security check, Miss Waters once commented, "I couldn't be happier because I'm at peace with the Lord."

It was her renditions of Negro spirituals that brought her greatest fame and she was the first woman ever to sing "St. Louis Blues."

For the past 15 years, Miss Waters devoted most her time to the Billy Graham Crusade in the United States, Europe and Asia. For the last month, she had been staying with friends Paul and Julie Dekorte in Chatsworth in northern Los Angeles County.

Funeral services were pending at Forest Lawn Moruary in Glendale, Calif.

Miss Waters was born Oct. 31, 1900, in Chester, Pa., and said later the fact that her family was so poor probably was the reason she never held on to the fortune she made.

She made her initial stage appearance at 17 and after achieving considerable success, toured with a jazz group and developed into a leading theater and cafe personality. She became deeply interested in religion and gave up singing in nightclubs to concentrate on spirituals.

The motion picture industry recognized her talents and cast her in "As Thousands Cheer," "At Home Abroad", and "Rhapsody in Black". She received an Academy Award nomination in 1950 for her role in "Pinky".

Her last picture was "The Sound and the Fury" made in 1958. She then turned to television, appearing on the "Tennessee Ernie Ford Show," "Daniel Boone" with Fess Parker and "Route 66".

Her autobiography, "His Eye is on the Sparrow", was a best seller in 1951.

She was philosophical about the wealth she made and lost. When forced to subsist mainly on Social Security in later life, she said, "If half the people that owed me money paid it back, I'd be a rich woman."

She refused to compromise her past glory by making commercials, maintaining her dignity as she lived out her years in Pasadena, Calif.

Miss Waters' later illness kept her activities down and also forced her to lose weight which once had been more than 250 pounds.

She confined her singing to gospel songs, appearing on the Billy Graham crusades or at Salvation Army camp meetings, explaining, "I don't keep my love of God to myself, I sing it our loud."

Senate telegrams Kent State

Marilyn Mankowsky

Brian DeLima, speaker of the student senate.

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to express their support of a Kent State University student group opposed to the construction of a gymnasium on the site where four students were killed by Ohio National Guardsmen in 1970.

The telegram to the group — the May 4 Coalition — reads in part: "The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate hereby condemns all moves by the Kent State University Board of Trustees and administration to plow Blanket Hill (site of the May 4, 1970 killings) and the memory of Kent and Jackson State into oblivion."

Included in the list were also demands to rename four buildings after the four slain students; admit the injustice of the murders; and cancellation of classes on May 4.

It was also announced last night that Jazz musician George Benson will perform at Curry Hicks Cage on October 13, 1977. Tickets will be $5 for UMass students and $6.50 for the general public. Tickets should be on sale in a few weeks, according to Union Program Council Organizer Bonnie Levetin.

In other business, Student Senate Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins last night presented his resignation to about 43 members of the Undergraduate Student Senate. A successor to Kerrins will be elected by the Senate at its next regular meeting on September 14.

The Senate heard the Summer reports of Kerrins, Brian J. DeLima, Speaker of the Senate, and Student Government Association Co-Presidents Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste. The Senate followed a very limited agenda as it awaits the election of new senators during the last week in September.

Student Senator Susan Birmingham presented to the Senate the finished report on the progress of the Student Union at UMass. The 30 page document entitled Student Empowerment: Status Report Fall 1977 was the result of a series of summer meetings between representatives of nearly twenty student organizations and officers. The meetings were mandated by a resolution passed last spring by the Senate "to reconstitute itself with the prime objective of student empowerment."

Birmingham also emphasized that participation and organization would be very important factors in the success or failure of the student unionization movement here.

Speaker Brian DeLima also announced the distribution of a four page survey "to determine student opinion on the priority of campus issues for Fall, 1977." The results of the survey will be used at the Student Unionization Issue Identification Conference to be held Sunday, September 18th.

According to Greg Tarpinian from the Student Organizing Project, about 500 of the surveys will be distributed to a scientifically random sampling of students. Tarpinian said he hoped an additional 2000 students who are not part of the controlled random sampling will complete the fifteen minute survey and return it to the Student Senate office.

Speaker DeLima is expected to be a strong supporter of the unionization plan for students, although the plan as presented in the "Student Empowerment" document is expected to face some tough criticism. The SGA Co-Presidents are already known to be opposed to some portions of the report.

Treasurer resigns

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) Treasurer Thomas Kerrins last night submitted his resignation to the Undergraduate Student Senate. Kerrins will serve as acting Treasurer until a replacement is elected next week.

Kerrins told the Senate because he was no longer a student he did not feel it proper to continue to handle Senate finances. Kerrins said he will graduate as soon as he finishes some incomplete courses, which he said resulted from his activities as Treasurer. Kerrins was elected Treasurer by the undergraduate senate in September, 1976, following the resignation of then Treasurer Henry Doyle. He was re-elected by the senate in March 1977.

When interviewed after the meeting, Kerrins characterized himself as a "political treasurer." He said his aim was to increase student control over their own funds, and to see that student money was used to advocate the interests of the student body as a whole. He said he used his position as treasurer to promote such programs as Economic Development and Unionization.

Kerrins said he feels he has left the Senate with a sound financial base to work with in the coming year. The next treasurer should, he said, try to straighten up the financial and "clean up abuses".

Kerrins said he favored the proposed plan to re-organize the student government because he feels it would make it easier for future treasurers to stick to accounting and leave the political chores to others. In the past he saw a lack of political direction within the Senate, but said he feels that such direction should be coming this fall.

When asked how he felt about Kerrins' resignation, SGA Co-president Jon Hite said that after working with him for several years, he feels Kerrins was very competent. "I'll miss him as a friend," Hite said.

Senate Speaker Brian DeLima credited Kerrins with the initiation of many programs, such as the Distinguished Visitors Program, several student cooperatives, the Student Video Project, and recycling programs. Senator James Gagne called Kerrins "one of the hardest workers around here."

Kerrins said he eventually plans to attend graduate school.

Reaction mixed on abortion vote

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Local reaction to the Massachusetts Senate's decision to ban public funding for abortion was varied.

- Some students and staff members give their opinions:

Lori Krasner, a junior French major from 203 Greenough said, "It certainly isn't good. People should be able to have abortions. What happens when someone doesn't have the money to take care of this?

"It'd be much worse in a lot of ways. If a woman was raped and ended up with a kid, it'd be a lot worse for the government if she had to go on welfare to support the kid."

Said a female zoology major who lives in Melville: "I think it's correct. I don't think there should be public funding for abortion. I wouldn't want my tax dollar being used in that way.

"I read in an editorial somewhere recently the suggestion of having a box you could check on your income tax return as to whether you wanted your tax money spent in that way. I think that'd be a good idea," she continued.

"I'm very happy that they've stopped using tax dollars for that," said a male employee at UMass.

Jean Elshtain, professor in the Political Science department, said, "The genuine moral issues get clouded by both sides."

"It's clearly a perpetration of injustice to impose certain standards on the poor and less fortunate that those who are upper class needn't adhere to.

"This doesn't take into account the objective situation women find themselves in," she said.

"Public funding is a problem. I have my own moral problems with abortion. But with the existing circumstances it becomes a hypocritical step.

"I mean things like the absence of a national health care plan, need for full employment, the welfare policy. Now, there is no provision whereby women can receive welfare if their husband has a job, continued Elshtain.

"My ideal would be to have no laws regarding abortion on the books at all. That way people could make their own choice, but there'd be no public sanction.

"The problem on a wide scale is how to put a value on human life. They've been funding wars all this time. They should raise questions on other issues too if they're going to on this one," she concluded.

Others were more curt. "I disapprove of the ban. Everyone should have their own choice. They gave it to them, why should they take it back," said one student.

Joe Dugan, a junior forestry major who lives at 27 Flintlock Lane in Amherst said, "We should use federal and state money for people who can't afford it. Some people can't affort to go into a private hospital for an abortion.

"It's worse to bring a kid into the world they don't want. It's bad for the kid, and bad for them," said Dugan.

"That's bad. Certain types it's necessary for, like rape victims ... Doesn't the government want to control masses of poor people from overcrowding?," said an Environmental Science major from Amherst.

A female campus employee: "It limits the availability of abortion for certain women, especially poor women. Abortion is a woman's choice. That choice now becomes a matter of money."

Dave Murphy, a Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration major from James said, "I don't agree with that. If someone with ten kids and a low income can't afford an abortion, then it's an extra mouth for them to feed.

"How would they feel if they were in those people's shoes?"

Judy Van Handle, Collegian Sports Editor, said, "I feel it's unfair to poor women. However, I think there should be another alternative which will not tax the already overburdened taxpayer. There should be more birth control education for all women so that an unwanted pregnancy will not occur."

Senate bans funds

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate gave final approval to legislation banning use of federal or state money for abortions without debate Wednesday.

The roll call vote was 23-15. The 15 'no' votes are one more than needed to sustain the veto of the measure promised by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The bill, approved by the House earlier, needs only routine enactment in both branches before going to the governor.

The vote on the bill came after Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, ruled that three amendments to the bill proposed by Sen. Robert A. Hall, R-Fitchburg, went beyond the scope of the original measure.

The highly controversial bill, as approved, bans the use of public funds for abortions except to save the life of a prospective mother.

Two of Hall's amendments would have permitted spending of public money on abortions to protect the life or health of th mother and in cases of rape or incest.

The third was designed to reduce use of abortion as a birth control method by giving family planning information and materials to those eligible for medical assistance.

Water report: you WILL live

By RANDALL BARISH
Collegian Staff

Southwest residents who noticed a sudden drop in water pressure followed by brown water yesterday need not be alarmed. You will, it seems, live.

But lest you think that brown water is all there is to this story, I present the heretofore unrevealed story of what really happened beneath the streets of UMass yesterday.

It all started last week when a construction crew working on a sewer near University Ave. accidentally ruptured a water pipe feeding Southwest, according to Coordinator of Community Relations Gerald Grady. Naturally, the water valve had to be turned off while workers patched the pipe.

Grady said the closed valve was forgotten about for a while.

Due to another malfunction on Fearing St. yesterday, Southwest's remaining water pipe had to be temporarily shut down. Down went the water pressure.

Grady said the forgotten water valve was quickly re-opened and the backwash of murky water that had been sitting in the pipe since the construction accident came trickling into the dorms.

This condition, however, lasted only a brief time. Grady added that the water was not hazardous to your health.

Lance denies report he will resign

WASHINGTON [AP] — Budget Director Bert Lance said last night he has no intention of resigning, despite newspaper reports claiming he will step down later in the month.

Newhouse newspapers reported last night Lance will resign after defending himself against the allegations before a Senate committee Sept. 15.

Robert Deitsch, Lance's chief spokesperson, denied the report. He said he did "not know how they would get that impression. He Lance, says he is looking forward to testifying before the Ribicoff committee and is not resigning."

Two banks gave Bert Lance unusual treatment when they loaned him money and covered for his overdrafts before he became U.S. budget director, the federal bank regulator said in a report yesterday.

The regulator, Comptroller of the Currency John G. Heimann, came to that conclusion in a report on two secondary issues in the Lance controversy.

Heimann is still preparing reports on Lance's personal use of bank aircraft and the original comptroller's investigation of Lance's banking affairs.

In his latest report, Heimann criticized the Calhoun First National Bank for its practice of having a bank employe write checks to cover $2 million in Lance's overdrafts from December 1975 to August 1976. Lance was chairman of the Calhoun bank at the time.

The checks were drawn on the National Bank of Georgia, which Lance then headed. If Lance became overdrawn in the Calhoun bank, the money would automatically come from his account at the other bank.

The comptroller said the service was also available to some other customers, including directors, and they were not illegal.

But the practice caused the Calhoun bank to lose interest revenue and no penalty fees were charged Lance, the report said.

The comptroller also questioned whether Lance did enough business with the Calhoun bank then to warrant waiving service charges.

"If such a practice were detected during the course of regular examinations, the comptroller's office would criticize the management," the report said.

Heimann also traced about $800,000 in loans that Lance and his family received from the Fulton National Bank of Atlanta when he had been president of the Calhoun bank.

The Calhoun bank had entered into a "correspondent relationship" with the Fulton bank before these loans were made. That meant the Calhoun bank deposited money without interest in the larger bank and received services in return.

The comptroller concluded that Lance received his loans only because of the correspondent account.

Bankers often get loans from other banks where their banks do business. Some have been prosecuted, however, if their banks keep an unusually large deposit in the correspondent bank.

In this case, Heimann said, "we do not believe that the prosecution of any individuals is warranted."

On Capitol Hill, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., rejected suggestions that Lance should resign while he is under investigation.

"The gentleman has asked for his day in court and I think he is entitled to it," O'Neill said.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said Lance's effectiveness has been "seriously impaired and I hope the matter may be fairly and expeditiously resolved."

University seeks two for high level positions

By MOIRA CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

UMass is currently seeking people to fill at least two high level positions; one as Dean of the School of Business Administration (SBA) and the other as Director of the Department of Public Safety (DPS).

The responsibilities of these offices will be handled by Professor Jack Wolfe in SBA and Saul Chafin in DPS until the problem of filling the posts is met by search committees in both departments.

SBA recently formed a search committee consisting of three faculty members nominated by UMass, three members nominated by Whitmore and two graduate students; one approved by the Student Government Association, and the other approved by the Graduate Research Center.

The search committee is currently working on advertisement for a new dean who they say will probably be chosen in the spring.

The Department of Public Safety has yet to form a Search committee, according to Vice Chancellor Robert Woodbury's office.

The SBA position was vacated on August 31 when George S. Odione resigned as dean of the SBA and as Director of the University's Center for Economic and Business Research.

Odione's reasons for resigning centered around his aversion towards working with an administration which he stated had gone into a "state of paralysis and shock." Odione said then his main complaint was that the administration was making no visible effort to shift funds from the English and Art Departments where enrollments were declining to growing departments such as business.

Director of Public Safety, David L. Johnston, resigned on July 16 for a similar position at the University of Pennsylvania. Johnston, like Odione, cited reasons of uncooperativeness which motivated him to accept the UPenn position. Johnston said he especially disdained the state's low commitment to public higher education.

Odiorne resigned last August in belief that five to six months would be enough time to find a person as Dean. It now looks as though the SBA as well as the DPS will be waiting at least a few months longer than expected for the positions to be filled.

Students win in faculty talks

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Student government leaders who lobbied successfully for students to participate in faculty contract talks have scored a major victory in representing student's views to both the administration and faculty.

When the Graduate Student Senate president and the Student Government Association (SGA) co-presidents made public yesterday that students would be allowed to sit in on the talks with the ability to bring up student concerns, many faculty for the first time were forced to think about student involvement in collective bargaining.

Zena Telona, a member of the chancellor's staff who is also a member of the administration's collective bargaining team, said "There is no way their presence will not affect the dynamics of the process."

But the four students who will sit at the table, as yet unchosen by the SGA and grad senate presidents, will serve to make the negotiations go smoothly for all parties; if students were excluded, they would be forced to lobby with both faculty and administrators to get their viewpoints heard.

Although students will not be able to vote on the contract, either during the talks or on the entire package, by being at the sessions they can watchdog student concerns and report back to the advisory committees.

SGA co-President Jon A. Hite said, "I don't think the faculty have anything to worry about, the administration either."

"They know where we're coming from," he said.

Officials in the faculty union don't fear the student presence either, which they easily could since students will be discussing many issues the faculty consider touchy, such as salaries and faculty evaluation.

The question of whether to include students at the bargaining table "depends on the conditions", said Larry S. Roberts, who heads the faculty union on campus.

"What we've come up with is a viable plan, a good plan," he said.

Roberts said the union is "looking forward to a productive relationship with student representatives."

"It will not impede the progress of the talks to have students present," he said.

Graduate Student Senate President Sally Rees said she hopes to have her representative and advisory committee picked by Sept. 20.

The SGA co-presidents say they wish to appoint a representative as soon as they can find an undergraduate with the time and background in collective bargaining or related subjects such as political science or law.

Meanwhile, the administration and faculty will continue meeting in "housekeeping" sessions to finalize ground rules for the talks.

Roberts said it's "hard to say" what faculty opinion on the inclusion of students may be.

"Probably a lot of people haven't thought about it," he said.

While the faculty group, the Massachusetts Society of Professors affiliated with the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, first proposed students sit in on the talks, administrators also sought out student participation.

The administration, at the beginning of the summer, asked the students to form an advisory committee reporting to the administration side to provide students with the channels to make their views known.

The students responded by asking for student presence at the table, and it appears their requests to administrators and faculty have paid off.

Engineer says noise at grad center OK

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The project engineer of the engineering firm that built the Graduate Research Center (GRC) disagrees with pollution officials that the center produces more noise than permissable.

George Kopriva, GRC project engineer from Francais Associates, the mechanical engineering firm for the building, yesterday said he is not convinced of a violation.

"We're not in agreement with the citation from the pollution officials that the center produces more noise than permissible.

George Kopriva, GRC project engineer from Francais Associates, the mechanical engineering firm for the building, yesterday said he is not convinced of a violation.

"We're not in agreement with the citation from the pollution control center," Kopriva said. "In my estimation, no violation is taking place."

Meanwhile, UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield said officials from the Mass. Bureau of Building Construction (BBC) and GRC design engineers will meet at a later date to discuss possible solutions. "We fully expect to solve the problem," Littlefield said.

Kopriva said he believes the University may take corrective action as a "goodwill gesture." Furthermore, he said, he has not been approached by University officials regarding a meeting to discuss solutions to the noise problem.

Stephen Joyce, of the Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Center, said the center has a "total noise problem". He said in an interview yesterday that he has formally notified University officials and the BBC of the violations, and has requested them to find a plan to solve the problem.

The inquiry into noise levels at the center began last June when residents of Fairview Avenue, located 100 yards from the structure, complained that noise exceeded pollution limits.

The noise from the GRC, said Joyce, is coming from the lower portion of the high rise section of the building and portions of the low rise section. He said the noise is caused by "air moving equipment", such as ventilation and air conditioning machinery.

Alan Graichen, also of the pollution control center, said "there is just too much noise there." Specifically, Graichen said, the noise is coming from Tower C of the complex and the cooling tower serving the low rise portion of the structure.

The August noise test came after two earlier conflicting tests of the noise emissions of the GRC. In the test, Graichen said, machinery was shut down and then turned on "sequentially" until the building was operating normally. Noise measuring equipment monitored the operation.

According to Graichen, the noise was 11 decibels above accepted levels.

Lawyer appeals sentence of Seabrook protesters

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Contempt of court convictions of 10 anti-nuclear demonstrators should be overturned because state officials let them enter the construction site of the Seabrook nucleer power plant, lawyers told the New Hampshire Supreme Court yesterday.

The 10 are members of the Clamshell Alliance, which sponsored demonstrations at the Seabrook construction site in August 1976 and May of this year. They were found in contempt for violating a court order barring the entry of unauthorized persons onto the site Aug. 22, 1976.

They were sentenced to three-month jail terms and denied bail by Maurice Bois, then a Rockingham County Superior Court judge. The state Supreme Court later overturned Bois' denial of bail. Bois, now a member of the high court, did not sit in on Wednesday's arguments dealing with the contempt convictions.

Lawyer David Rosenberg charged the group was arrested only after members were allowed onto the site by the attorney general's office and the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which is building the plant. He also said the 10 did not have proper advance notice of the injunction, issued two days before the demonstration, and thought they would be charged only with criminal trespass.

"They never would have entered the property if they knew of the order. An act of symbolic protest is not a contemptuous disregard of the order," he said.

Assistant Attorney General Edward Haffer said copies of the injunction were posted at four locations and demonstrators were told three times they were violating a court order, once before they entered the site.

Angry Speaker O'Neill lashes out at colleague

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Speaker Thomas O'Neill, claiming "I was the victim of a terrific smear," yesterday accused a freshman Republican member of the House Ethics Committee of partisanship in the panel's investigation of South Korean influence peddling.

In an angry and unusual exchange on the House floor between O'Neill and Rep. Bruce Caputo, R-N.Y., the speaker referred to alleged testimony to the panel that South Korean businessman Tongsun Park operated out of O'Neill's office during the alleged bribery operation.

Park has been charged in an indictment with offering bribes to members of Congress to influence their votes in favor of South Korea. Suzi Thomson, an aide to former Speaker Carl Albert, reportedly told the ethics panel she saw Park on several occasions in O'Neill's office when he was House Democratic leader.

O'Neill had read a statement criticizing South Korea for lack of cooperation in the bribery investigation and Caputo, a freshman lawmaker, asked the speaker if there were "legislative remedies" to force cooperation. Caputo on Tuesday urged withholding of foreign aid to South Korea as a lever to get cooperation.

O'Neill said "we ought to await a response from South Korea," and when Caputo pressed the issue O'Neill recalled published reports of Miss Thomson's allegations which the Speaker called "an unfair story about me."

"You were the questioner," O'Neill told Caputo.

Caputo and Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., were the only committee members present when Miss Thomson was also questioned by staff investigators.

"I doubt if you questioned whether House GOP leader John Rhodes gave office space to Tongsun Park or if House GOP Whip Bob Michel gave office space to him. No, all you asked about were Carl Albert and Tip O'Neill. I could ask why you were so partisan about it. I was the victim of a terrific smear," said O'Neill.

Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.

Caputo tried to reply but was drowned out by applause from the Democratic side of the House and Democratic Leader Jim Wright, presiding at the time, gaveled an end to the unusual exchange.

O'Neill has said in the past he attended two birthday parties in his honor that were hosted by Park but he said he never discussed Korea with Park.

When the Thomson allegations were made O'Neill's aides said Park was in the leader's office on "only two or three occasions in connection with planning of the birthday parties."

Vets' children receive benefits

BOSTON [AP] — Children of Massachusetts veterans killed in wartime service would be eligible for state aid for higher education under a bill given final approval by the Senate.

The bill applies to students aged 16 to 24, who are enrolled in institutions of higher education and who lost a parent through wartime service in World War I, World War II or the Korean or Vietnam conflicts.

It would provide reimbursement from the state for up to $750 each year for as many as four years for tuition, board and room and expenses for books, transportation and school supplies.

Claims for reimbursement would have to be filled within two years of enrollment in the school, the chancellor of the Board of Higher Education would determine eligibility.

Drug use on the rise in Vermont

ST. ALBANS, Vt. [UPI] — International drug smugglers have reversed their shipping lane through Vermont and now are using the state as a pipeline to send their merchandise from the United States into Canada, a local newspaper reported Wednesday.

The St. Albans Messenger quoted Attorney General M. Jerome Diamond as saying the trend was uncovered in recent investigations by the federal Drug Enforcement Agency.

Until recently, Diamond said, drugs flowed through the so-called "Vermont Corridor" from Canada south to New York and the Eastern Seaboard.

But the DEA has learned that trend has been reversed, possibly because of a shortage of drugs in Canada, he said.

Children boycott classes in Soweto

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Most of Soweto's 27,000 black school children boycotted classes Wednesday in an apparent show of solidarity with 700 teachers who quit their jobs to protest school segregation.

Attendance on the second day of classes since the government took over the administration of schools in the black township 15 miles from Johannesburg was "virtually nil," newspaper reports said.

Police at Soweto's New Canada train station prevented about 200 youths from going into Johannesburg, where they apparently planned to stage a demonstration in support of the teachers who resigned Tuesday to protest South Africa's racially-segregated "Bantu African Education" program.

The surprise move was announced after a Soweto meeting called to discuss the government's take-over of black schools three weeks ago.

Canada and U.S. talk of pipeline

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter will announce Thursday his decision to build a trans-Canada pipeline to transport Alaskan North Slope natural gas to the lower 48 states, it was learned Wednesday.

White House spokesman Jody Powell said a decision on the pipeline will be announced "within the next few days, possibly sooner than later."

But sources indicated Carter will announce his decision to back the $7.7 billion trans-Canada pipeline early Thursday, possibly in conjunction with a White House meeting scheduled with Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

Trudeau was in Washington to attend the Panama Canal treaties signing ceremony.

Carter last week sent Energy Secretary James Schlesinger to Canada to discuss negotiations for the proposed 2,700 mile Alcan Pipeline Co. project.

Alcan, which has both American and Canadian backers, wants to bring natural gas from Prudhoe Bay along a route which runs through the Yukon roughly parallel to the Alcan Highway. The line would split in Montana with one leg going to the American midwest and another leg going to the West.

Reports indicate Canada wants a $200 million fund to offset the social and economic effects of the gasline on its communities, additional pumping stations on the route, and the addition of a 120-mile, $400 million loop called the Dempster addition.

An Alcan spokesman said construction could begin in November 1978 and gas can be delivered "at the earliest in October, 1981."

Panama Canal Treaty is signed by Carter

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter yesterday signed the treaties that would return Teddy Roosevelt's Panama Canal to Panama and hailed them as a new U.S. commitment to "fairness, not force" in foreign policy.

Attended by a glittering assemblage of presidents, prime ministers and diplomats from 30 Western Hemisphere nations, Carter and Gen. Omar Torrijos signed the new pacts under brilliant crystal chandeliers in Washington's Organization of American States headquarters.

Television cameras carried the scene live, by satellite, throughout Latin America as Carter and the Panamanian strongman affixed their signatures to the two, blue-bound treaties that make up the historic agreement.

"We are here to participate in the signing of treaties which will assure a peaceful and prosperous and secure future for an international waterway of great importance to us all," Carter said.

"But the treaties do more than that. They mark the commitment of the United States to the belief that fairness, not force, should lie at the heart of our dealings with the nations of the world."

Torrijos led a Panamanian delegation of more than 100 for the Wednesday evening ceremony at which the Panama Canal treaties were signed at the headquarters of the Organization of American States.

Nineteen other heads of government from Latin America also attended, and Carter planned to meet with all of them between Tuesday and Thursday. All told, delegations from about 27 countries attended.

ESTADOS UNIDOS

First Lady Rosalynn Carter personally was welcoming leaders of the seven countries she visited in May and June.

Lady Bird Johnson, whose husband opened the canal negotiations with Panama 13 years ago, was invited to the signing ceremony and stayed in the Queen's bedroom of the White House.

Gordon Liddy returns to normal civilian life

DANBURY, Conn. [UPI] — G. Gordon Liddy says crime doesn't pay — unless you're good at it and for those who aren't, time in prison could make crime pay better.

"Prisons do not rehabilitate. They educate in the techniques and mechanics of criminal activity," Liddy, a 46-year-old former assistant district attorney for Dutchess County, N.Y., has said.

Liddy, who masterminded the 1972 burglary at the Democratic National Headquarters in Washington, was released Wednesday from the Danbury Federal Correctional Institution after taking a pauper's oath.

In an opinion page article in Connecticut Magazine last February, Liddy wrote, "Prisons serve as a proving ground for the young convict and as a talent pool for recruiting by the mature."

"Occasionally, a prisoner determines on his own initiative to discontinue his life of crime; but not often. Most are planning the next big 'score'.

"Those few who give up crime do so for a variety of reasons, but most often because they have been so unsuccessful at it that they are completely discouraged," he said.

When Liddy left the Danbury facility, he took half a dozen boxes containing his belongings with him in a compact sedan as he and his wife, Frances, left for their Oxon Hill, Md., home.

What he left behind were the results of his legal battle in the Connecticut federal courts where he waged a campaign for expanded mail privileges for inmates at Danbury.

U.S. District Judge Jon O. Newman in April 1976 granted several motions Liddy argued himself, including one that broadened the categories of "privileged mail" and another that required "privileged letters" to be opened in the presence of the inmate.

Letters to prisoners at Danbury that are not "privileged" are opened before being distributed by officials.

Newman also handed down an order outlining the conditions under which prisoners may be held in solitary confinement before hearings on disciplinary charges.

The order stemmed from a complaint by Liddy that his lawsuit seeking increased mail rights for prisoners had resulted in his being placed in a locked detention cell at Danbury.

Newman said the hearing he granted Liddy in 1976 was only the third he had agreed to hold on prisoners' confinement despite hundreds of requests during the previous four years.

Many survive cancer and live productive lives

CHICAGO [AP] — A new group of children is growing up in the United States. They are "the long-term survivors" of childhood cancer, a medical team said Wednesday.

They are "children who now are off drugs, getting married, having offspring of their own, and becoming productive members of society," said Dr. John R. Hartman of the Children's Orthopedic Hospital in Seattle, Washington.

But, like children who still are battling cancers, they have specialized needs, he told the American Cancer Society's second national conference on human values and cancer.

"Obtaining adequate medical coverage for themselves, genetic counseling regarding the effects of their own drug and radiation treatment on their offspring, vocational rehabilitation, job security, and living daily with the fear that their disease may recur, are just a few of the concerns and stresses facing this group of young adults."

"We have an obligation to these children, not only to try and give them a life free from cancer, the disease, but free from the emotional scars of cancer, which if ignored can be just as crippling and devastating as the disease itself," Hartman said.

"No longer can the child with cancer be assumed to have a fatal disease," he said, "but rather, working with the philosophy that cancer in childhood is curable, children with such cancers as acute leukemia, Hodgkin's disease, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, Wilms' tumor and rhabdomyosarcoma are being given the opportunity of a normal life span."

In acute lymphoblastic leukemia, for example, the five-year survival rate has increased from less than 10 per cent in studies begun in 1964 to a projected five-year survival rate now of over 80 per cent.

But treatment can have its penalties of sickness from strong drugs, radiation sickness, loss of hair, even loss of limbs, heavy expenses, and stresses within family life, Hartman said.

"We need to seek the cancer patient not as a statistic or as an isolated organ, but as a person ... a person who must continue living day to day, even while fighting a battle that far too many people lose," said Mrs. E. Morgan Montgomery, of Atlanta, Ga., a volunteer and vice president of the society.

Religious organizations down on "Soap"

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The outcry against the sex farce "Soap" means the public has again found television's Achilles' heel — the pocketbook — says Dr. Harvey Jassem.

"Profitability" is a big factor in program decisions, says Jassem, the 28-year-old former research director of the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting.

The committee campaigned successfully last year for reduced television violence by identifying advertisers whose commercials appeared most frequently in prime-time shows with a high violence index.

"It seems to me now that some citizens are getting angry at what they see and are learning how to hold those accountable. The sponsors and advertisers are scared because there's a new game plan.

Jassem, now an assistant professor of communication arts at the University of Hartford, questions the origin of the massive publicity involving "Soap," a program previewed last May for 191 of ABC's local affiliates. It debuts Sept. 13 in prime time.

"I'm starting to feel that some of this may be the network's doing. Who wants it out? Who says 'Soap' has got a lot of sex in it? They have an incentive to raise people's curiosity.

"It's understandable then that people react. It's part of the price producers and broadcasters pay for the kind of publicity they want. While a large segment of the population may be shocked and want to see it — another part is shocked and doesn't want to see it, or their kids to see it," he said.

Bizarre husband and wife shootout in Illinois

HOMEWOOD, Ill. [AP] — A depressed and jealous wife shot her husband while he slept, but he revived nearly 20 hours later and the couple then took turns shooting each other with her gun, police said. It began in bed and went on as they crawled bleeding from room to room.

The .32-caliber revolver changed hands several times.

It ended after police arrived. They said the woman, who had turned the gun on herself by that point, fired a final shot at her husband, collapsed, and died.

Her husband was hospitalized in critical condition.

Police said the bizarre episode began at 7 a.m. Tuesday in a second-floor condominium in a comfortable new building in the suburb of Homewood, southwest of Chicago. It ended at 3 a.m. Wednesday.

Police said Margaret Radovich, 50, shot her husband, Theodore, 56, twice in the chest while he slept Tuesday morning and later, for some unexplained reason, returned to the bed.

"When he regained consciousness early today Wednesday, he found his wife next to him in bed and pulled the gun out of her hand, shooting her once in each leg," said Police Chief William Nolan.

Nolan said Radovich also fired a shot out the window to attract attention and tried to throw the gun through a closed window.

The window broke, but the gun fell back inside the room, and Mrs. Radovich found it and reloaded it.

Radovich managed to crawl to another room, followed by his wife, who then shot him in the mouth, Nolan said.

But he still was able to make his way to another bedroom. There he broke a window in another attempt to attract attention.

Meanwhile, Nolan said, Mrs. Radovich shot herself.

When police arrived, after summoned by neighbors, they found Mrs. Radovich in a hallway. She was on the floor, and her husband was in the other room.

Police said that before they could reach Mrs. Radovich, she took one more shot at her husband through the doorway. The bullet missed, and she fell unconscious.

She was dead on arrival at a hospital.

When it was over, Nolan said, authorities found notes apparently written by Mrs. Radovich that "said such things as life being tough and difficult, and one note made reference to another woman."

Police said Mrs. Radovich recently bought the handgun without telling her husband, and she had arranged the couple's insurance papers in a shoe box with explanatory notes for anyone who found them. Police would not say whether they had children or where Radovich worked.

Behind the bargaining scene

To the Editor:

In Wednesday's Collegian all students received some good news in that the faculty union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, and the administration agreed to have student observers in the bargaining process. Unfortunately the article did not clearly explain the background of the proposal.

Last spring the Student Senate created the Collective Bargaining Task Force. This group consisted of student senators, members of union councils, and professional staff from the Student Organizing Project, The Student Center for Educational Research, and the Legal Services Office. Its purpose was to research options open to students in the face of the unionization of the faculty and to make recommendations to the Student Senate. In the spring, with the approval of the Senate, this group initiated the proposal for student observer status to the MSP Executive Council.

After school ended in May, June, and early July this group lobbied the Executive Council to win their support for the proposal. In July the MSP agreed to the proposal. They also agreed to present it to the administration as a pre-condition for negotiations. This all took place in the current prenegotiations. As announced yesterday the joint efforts of students and faculty were successful in obtaining student participation in the bargaining process.

This is important because of the nature of the issues that will be discussed at the bargaining table. Issues such as tenure, course requirements, the academic calendar, and grading policies are specifically negotiated in any faculty contract. The outcome of these negotiations affect things like the quality of professors the university attracts and the length of time they stay here.

The most important issue that is never negotiated but implied throughout contract talks is money. Who will pick up the cost of faculty salary and cost of living increases? Will tuition increase as salaries do? Just as faculty deserve salary increases, students deserve low cost tuition. After all, that's what public higher education is supposed to be all about. The importance of yesterday's announcement is that now student participation in the bargaining process can make both parties aware of student concerns.

'Great! We've forced another delay in the clean air laws, Carter's gas guzzler tax is in doubt, and our anti-air bag propaganda is working. Let's up the price six percent.'

Not by park bench alone

By STEVE DUBIN

Streets and station wagons just do not make comfortable beds. It was time to look for housing again. To look for a place to live we had to immediately change our identities to meet the rigorous standards of landlords. We transformed ourselves into non-smoking, petless, friendless waifs not expecting guests, never - read - a - dirty - book, graduate students in Physics. Perfect tenants.

Our first consideration was a ramshackle farm house. Ramshackled, handcuffed, and gagged is what we were showed. Answering a classified reading NEEDS SOME REPAIR we look at the place. The building looks like what was left of the Alama. Walking up the remains of the front steps we enter the fortress. Urine stench and must are the welcoming committee. Maybe they will let us have a dog? Caved in walls, broken windows, and rotted out floors create a casual atmosphere. Cracked and flaking ceilings are carefully designed for visual variety. Think of the possibilities. We could rent the place out for the remake of "Gone With The Wind" for the burning of Atlanta sequence.

If not house, then apartment. I call a local apartments for rent." "Well yes we do. We are renovating our two bedroom apartments into three bedrooms." Interested, but more importantly desperate I ask, "Can you assure me the bedroom addition will be completed by September 1." She chuckles confidently, "Sure, it takes us an hour to slap up that extra wall." Clearing my throat I terminate the conversation with, "Oh ... We'll let you know."

OK so maybe someone would like to share their house with us. To the housing office let's see who is looking for roommates. Gee, look at all those tacked up index cards. Here's one:

> Roommates wanted. Must be independent, self-sufficient, and willing to share in all house activities. Only vegetarians, meditators, barefoot backpackers, into the occult and bondage should bother to apply.

Yes, through persistence, craftiness, and a load of luck we did find a house. It is big. It is comfortable. And it is being foreclosed. Just in case please save a laundry closet for me in Southwest!

The confidence game

By LISA MELILLI

I have this fear — fear of heights. I mean, it took my parents at least 20 visits to the amusement park to get me to ride on the ferris wheel. And riding my bike? Well, I live on a real hilly road and was so scared to ride up and down those hills, my mother often wondered the sense at all of my having a bike if it was going to just sit in the garage the way it did!

Well anyways, my friends have always been the fearless, confident types — doing daring deeds. And I always more or less stayed in the background, sort of out of it.

And knowing all this, do you know what a few of my friends did to me over this weekend? They took me to Puffer's Pond.

"Now Lisa," they said. "All you have to do is to just push yourself off. Don't look down."

Don't look! Well, for all of you who have never been to Puffer's Pond, that cliff is at least 50 feet high and there is a bed of rock extending along the edge that if you don't push yourself off far away enough, you're sure you're going to land smack onto that rock bed.

I told them they were crazy watching each of them dive fearlessly and gracefully. And then I found myself alone. It was my turn and they were all calling to me.

And it dawned on me that maybe I was making all this stuff up in my head. I mean, I have always been one of those introverts with so many fears. And lately, I've gotten over many of them realizing that those fears were stupid and I had missed out on so much because of them.

I mean, I just constantly anguished over what people were thinking of me. A funny look meant hate. Anything meant something bad. I remember when I started wearing nylon stockings in sixth grade, I felt so self conscious around older girls thinking they'd laugh at me. I still can't figure out why I thought that.

I felt uncomfortable with my clothes, my nose, whatever I said. I always feared I didn't act my age. That I was immature.

Another fear concerned my interests. While all the girls at school were interested in dances, discos, bars, and weekend dates I was more or less content to be by myself or curled up reading a book. I tried to change, really did, but I simply couldn't. It wasn't me.

I was sure no man could ever possibly want me. I mean, I was so boring! And I wondered about that whole thing of sharing yourself with someone else. Who would want to share my life? Talk about confidence, even when I tried to muster any kind of confidence, I was sure everyone thought I was a snob.

And I thought all this was unique to myself and only later did I realize that everyone goes through these "growing pains". I just analyzed myself, situations, other people. As one of my friends remarks, I never smiled in pictures.

Then something happened I'd say in the past few years since I've been up here at UMass. I'm not sure, but I began to feel this peace of mind, a contentment. I finally realized that someone, anyone who couldn't be satisfied with who or what I was wasn't worth my time.

"Lisa, come on. Just jump in. You keep on thinking about it and analyzing the whole thing, you'll never do it!" my friends down in the water yelled up to me still waiting for me to jump after all this time I was thinking about things.

Analyzing everything — that was the key. I used to analyze everything so intently and took everything so seriously. For some reason, I just simply had stopped worrying my head over things and had just started to accept things as they were, letting fate take its course. I started accepting myself and not the fears I had about myself.

So, I closed my eyes and took a deep breath. Then while spreading my arms out and bending my knees for my jump I opened my eyes, looked just across to the other side of the pond and thought to myself "if you don't take risks, you'll never have any excitement and hadn't I outpsyched myself so many times before?"

And the cold water rushed around me as I hit the water hard, the cold burning my face and causing a ringing in my ear. But I got used to those funny sensations well before my fifth jump in.

In defense of the RSB

bill sundstrom

As you wended your way up the steps in front of the Student Union this morning, perhaps to pick up your copy of the Collegian, Globe, or Guardian (the Guardian?), you might have been descended upon by some folks handing out leaflets or selling leftist newspapers. "Damn pinko commies", you might have murmured as you brushed by.

Well, granted, sometimes they are a little pesky, but the fact is that the campus' revolutionary organizations are among its most colorful fixtures. And at the top of anyone's list of local revolutionaries is none other than the Revolutionary Student Brigade (apologies to the folks at the Progressive Labor Party, who must rank a close second).

Before continuing, the reader should beware that this column is not going to be some sort of satirical dissection of the RSB and it's ongoing efforts to radicalize the community. In fact, I would consider myself a Brigade sympathizer, if not a supporter. One doesn't have to be a Marxist-Leninist to see that the RSB breed of activism is vastly superior to the more typical UMie passivity, and that the Brigade is sincere in its defense of student and minority rights.

Contrary to popular belief, RSB members are not Puritanical Bolshevik-types who have developed an armory somewhere in Southwest. In fact, they're generally an affable lot who enjoy some of the mildly bourgeois pleasures, including Steely Dan and even softball, as long as it remains reasonably non-competitive.

Anyone who has read any Marx knows that one of the basic tenets of his thought is the integration of theory and practice, so it's surprising that people around campus are so shocked when the Brigade goes beyond passing it's leaflets around and decides to hold a peaceful demonstration or, as they did when the governor visited last semester, create a minor "disruption". Never to my knowledge has the Brigade damaged people or property in any of its local efforts.

But there wouldn't be much sense in defending an organization if it had no positive attributes aside from its vociferousness. A look at the RSB's stands and efforts regarding a number of issues shows it to be a concerned, if somewhat unsuccessful, group.

One of the Brigade's major crusades has been in the area of racial discrimination. The RSB spent much time and effort supporting Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers in their struggle for justice and were among the many to demand the sale of the university's stock holdings in South African corporations. And their emphasis has always been on linking such struggles to more general and prevalent conditions of oppression.

Of course, the Brigade did once stoop to a little vulgar realpolitiking when it ran two candidates for SGA co-presidents. And when you come right down to it, Marxism-Leninism, without tremendous modification, is doomed to failure in changing society.

But at least the good intentions are there. Students who demand some input and control over their own lives are more the exception than the rule on this campus, and the RSB's presence should be welcome, even if it is at times a little annoying.

'The problem of the ghettos? The ghettos, my dear, are a solution, not a problem.'

From the bottom up

By L. ZIMANY

It is Monday morning and time to take a scenic casual rustic harmonic jaunt through our Southwest complex on campus. I haven't any idea of what it is or what it should be — A domain for maggots and giant lice — A swamp for dehydrated ducks and fish or a place to dorm some pretty sexy angles in numbers only a computer would understand. — Best, it be described as an intrusion of raw untrammelled nature!

Overall, it has been a very expansive first week at the big U and this jaunt is telling me that I should make an attempt to determine the capacity of abuse the concrete jungle is subjected to in a mere 48 hours.

From 27 down my cousin crawls out of a gusty beer can on the lounge ledge wondering and computerizing his trajectory if he were to take an unexpected dive. From ground up everyone is still a giant and a thrown beer can is like an ash can off a destroyer. — Yes, for an ant I might as well tell him to stay on top of the world. Hopefully he will find a Louis Quatorze boudoir dresser with a mirror that might frame Marie Antoinette to crash in. Hell, an ant's life in Southwest is elegant!

Passing through the tunnel I met another giant of a man wearing size 16 out-of-business Earth Shoes. He said he liked to play his bag pipes at 6:23 in the morning in the Southwest tunnel for the students and especially for the birds that live in the nearby trees that are still drunk from last Wednesday. After he finished his scrambled egg masterpiece he had a super element of determination to tell me his name was Lucky Pitatto from Newton and his primary purpose at the big U was to play lacrosse. He then ran to Boyden almost stepping on my micro head.

Now it's just a matter of time — The thunderous stampede for the eight o'clock class will rain upon the pavement. Yes, it's just a matter of time before a good part of the creative vitality of the UMie will disappear into an absorption with a security, a craving, and self-elating style. It is great to see the faces.

If you compute the formula for this place and divide all the good by the bad you come up with the following. — It is a place an ant does not have to fall in love with a calendar photo. Yes, those sexy angles are something special — the reality almost always matches the dream, but the nightmare of being stepped on still exists.

If it happens please remember, "I'd like to be excommunicated. I want the candle dashed to the ground or whatever and I want the letter from Rome.

It's time to pull up an empty beer can and believe me the thought of a Southwest party gives me new energy to survive another week.

Returning to the battleground

By SANDRA CARABINERIS

I returned a few days ago from Kent State University. Blanket Hill, the center of today's controversy, is no longer spattered with blood, and the Vietnam War is over. But the spirit of Kent State is still strong and the May 4th Coalition aims to maintain it.

Attempts by KSU administration to build a gym on the site of the murders drew hundreds of students into battle with the administration, cops, state government and courts. Throughout the summer demonstrations, tent cities, occupations of the site and mass busts of up to 200 burst into the headlines.

Kent State 1977 has become a battleground for students over how to sum up the lessons of the past and proceed into the future.

By May 4, 1970 millions of Americans were opposed to the continuing of the war in Vietnam. Every avenue of change had been traveled in attempts to end U.S. involvement. In the course of the demonstrations and teach-ins many came to understand the imperialist nature of U.S. involvement in Indochina and stood up against the powers-that-be to say, "no more."

Nixon's May 1970 announcement of the Cambodian invasion brought renewed protest to the streets and campuses of the U.S. The murders at Kent State (and the others at Jackson State) were the ruling class' reply to mass opposition by the American people to the war.

Though the hill is empty now, as I walked vivid memories of guardsmen and defenseless students came to mind. Four students died on this very spot. It could have been me. I was only in junior high at the time, but I knew that the war was wrong and I joined in the Moratorium support. When Al Canfora told me his story of being wounded, we both shivered at the memory of his close call. But how could this have happened? How — in this country?

That was seven years ago, but have things really changed? Today the rulers of this country would like us to forget the murders, forget how exposed the U.S. government was in their drive for profit, power and vain attempt to dominate the Indochinese people. Forget how millions of Americans stood together and opposed that war of aggression. How they stood up to them and their system. By building the gym on that site, they want to stamp out the example of resistance that Kent State has become.

It has sharp significance today when it is coupled with Watergate, the South Korean scandal, high unemployment, rising inflation and every politician's call for "national unity." They want all "divisions" healed up or plowed under. The rulers don't need any kind of issues that further show the nature of their rule.

At Kent State 1977 I could see all that the students there have gone up against and stood strong. It is an inspiring example of standing up against injustice and oppression. Something many people all over the country are watching closely.

The situation today is that the construction could begin at any time. Courtroom juggling is only putting off the hour.

As far as the coalition sees it, they have lost in the courts and must now rely on the strength of the students. With the students at Kent coming back to the campus, and schools opening across the country, we are in a better position. That is why the May 4 Coalition has called for an Emergency Demonstration and Tent City on Sept. 10 at Kent. We will be able to make a strong stand, get the word out to more students, and make a promise to be back on Sept. 24 for a National Demonstration with all our strength to win the battle.

For information about transportation for Sept. 10 come by the RSB table in the CC, room 413A, Student Union or call 256-0501, 546-8425. A van will be leaving late Friday night.

'Bubbling Brown Sugar' to begin concert series

The UMass Fine Arts Center begins its 1977-78 concert series on Sept. 18 with the Broadway hit musical, "Bubbling Brown Sugar." Two performances of "Bubbling Brown Sugar" will be presented — a 3 p.m. matinee and the usual 8 p.m. performance.

The fine arts series will consist of five different series and some selected special attractions. The different series are: Broadway theatre, celebrity performers, dance, concert hall and orchestra. Purchasers of a series package receive their choice of best seats and avoid the hassles of waiting in line to purchase tickets.

Tickets can be purchased for an individual performance or one or all of the five series. UMass students pay half price for all individual events and all tickets are discounted when bought in a series.

According to David Letters, an organizer of the Fine Arts Concert Series, ticket sales are going very well. Letters advises people interested in buying series tickets to come by the Fine Arts Center box office early for the best seating.

Some of the talent which will appear in the 1977-78 concert season include the Joffrey Ballet, singer Sarah Vaughn, the Boston Symphony, pianist Oscar Peterson and the Canadian Opera.

Some of the special attraction performers include jazz trumpeter Chuck Mangione, the National Ballet of Spain, and a return performance of the mime Marcel Marceau.

The Fine Arts Concert series is funded primarily through a $3 student activities fee which every UMass student pays. Students receive discounts.

Additional information and tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center box office Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Public safety department to hold bike registration

Bicycle owners in the Amherst area will have a chance to help stamp out bicycle thieves by registering their machines with the UMass Public Safety Department next week.

Owners who register their bikes also can have their security devices (such as chains and locks) checked for effectiveness by the department staff. Engraving kits will be given to owners so they can engrave some identifying mark, such as their social security numbers, on their machines.

These services are available to area residents as well as UMass students without charge.

The advantage to registering bicycles with the department is that campus police will have on record the true owner of a bicycle, said Sgt. Mary Dumas of public safety. So, if a bike is stolen and then found in the hands of someone other than the owner, the police will be able to consult their records to establish who the owner really is.

The engraving equipment is easy to use, she said.

Each bicycle that is registered will receive a decal alerting potential thieves that the bicycle is engraved and its ownership a matter of record. "We've run the program for several years," Dumas said, "and it's proven to be highly successful. Larceny of bicycles has dropped and stayed down."

For more information, call the education and training office of the UMass Public Safety Department at 545-2134.

Carter's target: black jobless

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, admitting to black leaders that many public service jobs do not reach the ghetto, Wednesday said he would put top priority on reversing the "horrible" jobless rate among minorities.

Carter met with members of the black congressional caucus, who along with others have become increasingly more vocal in complaints about their treatment by the administration.

"Obviously something has to change. There has to be a re-emphasis," Carter said of the August figures which placed joblessness among black youths at more than 40 per cent.

Rep. Parran Mitchell, D-Md., chairman of the caucus, quoted Carter as saying: "I expect criticism, I think it's been valid in the past. I accept criticism from you."

Mitchell said after the meeting that "for the first time we've got a statement on priorities" and that he wanted "a working relationship so that we can move together."

Carter, with reporters present for the opening of the session, said he had been "studying the statistics this past week, particularly since the horrible information came out about the rate of unemployment among young minority teen-agers."

The problem, he said, is caused by a "lack of a comprehensive urban policy. There is no thrust to the urban program.

Barnes paroled; will make opener

CRANSTON, R.I. [UPI] — Pro basketball player Marvin Barnes yesterday was granted parole from the Rhode Island Adult Correctional Institutions — effective Oct. 14 — after serving five months of a one-year sentence for probation violation.

The 6'10" Detroit Pistons' forward was jailed May 16 for breaking state probation with a handgun arrest in Michigan.

Barnes will miss NBA preseason practice, which opens Sept. 20, but will be out in time for their first regular season game against the New York Nets on Oct. 18.

"We are terribly disappointed that Marvin's desire to get out on parole Sept. 16 was denied," said Pistons' General Manager Bob Kauffman. "We do however appreciate the consideration the Parole Board has given in granting him the Oct. 14 release date.

"We believe that this action will to a degree slow down his progress as a basketball player. However, we believe being the fine person and player he is, he will be able to overcome this adversity as he has overcome others," Kauffman added.

Galkin, however, said the board carefully weighed the timing of Barnes' release.

"We can't give him a different release date than anybody else who comes up in September," Galkin said. "Moral at the prison is at a low enough ebb right now so that an early release would really complicate things."

The board chairman added that Barnes had been "playing a lot of basketball and was staying in shape." He added: "He Barnes will just have to catch up when he gets there training camp."

"No reason for the parole was given," said corrections spokeswoman Lillian G. McDaniel. "They give reasons only for denial. One reason for granting parole is that the board feels the man will make a success for his parole program."

To win parole, a prisoner must show plans for employment and residence after release. Barnes' program was resumption of his basketball career with Detroit.

Barnes' prison sentence was originally imposed last December but Superior Court Judge Anthony A. Giannini delayed its start until after the National Basketball Association season.

Giannini ruled that an Oct. 9, 1976, handgun arrest at Detroit Metropolitan Airport violated Barnes' probation from a three-year-old assault case.

The talented but troubled forward got three years' probation and the suspended sentence in 1974 after pleading guilty to assaulting former teammate Larry Ketvirtis with a tire iron during his All-America days at Providence College.

Barnes' lawyers had argued he should spend time working with deprived youth instead of serving time. But Giannini said Barnes "is not a model to be emulated by the young and impressionable."

Barnes spent his 25th birthday behind bars on July 27.

Midway through his term, he was transferred from maximum to minimum security.

Hannah, Gray to settle?

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — New England Patriots Coach Chuck Fairbanks displayed the first note of optimism yesterday in the on-going contract disputes with All-Pro linemen John Hannah and Leon Gray.

Hannah, an offensive guard, and Gray, an offensive tackle, have demanded, through agent Howard Slusher, that their contracts be extended. The Patriots had refused to reopen negotiations since both players have several years remaining on their contracts.

Fairbanks said yesterday at a post-practice news conference that "there is a chance it will be resolved to everyone's satisfaction, as both sides want it to happen.

Slusher, obtained by the left side linemates early this summer, was expected to visit the Patriots management this weekend. During the midweek news conference, Fairbanks said Slusher was "unreasonable at times; but he works hard for his clients."

Slusher has a reputation of one of the hardest bargainers among players' agents.

Hannah has threatened to go back to his family's Alabama farm if he cannot obtain an extension by Monday. Gray has not indicated he would walk out.

Hannah, out two weeks with a thigh injury, played well last Sunday against the Washington Redskins. Gray, sidelined by a hamstring pull the past few weeks, returned to practice yesterday. He is expected to play Sunday when the 4-1 Patriots close the exhibition season at home against the Atlanta Falcons.

Fairbanks also announced that linebacker Jerry Vogele, injured in Sunday's 45-7 win over Washington, would undergo surgery today but has not yet been placed on the injured reserve list.

Rookie tight end Don Hasselbeck missed most of Wednesday's practice because of his bruised knee, but Richard Bishop, Horace Ivory and Pete Brock, all plagued by minor injuries, joined at least part of the drill.

The New England coach also confirmed the Patriots had traded defensive back John Sanders to Philadelphia for a future, undisclosed draft choice.

The Patriots still are two players over the present limit of 48 on the active roster. All teams must trim their rosters to 43 players by Tuesday.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8 — Born today, you are a highly imaginative person who is perhaps overly inclined to take for gospel the products of his own fancy. You possess outstanding powers of observation but are disinclined to use them even when to do so would be in your interest. Rather, you prefer to make your conclusions on the basis of either emotional responses or outright imaginings. It is essential that you begin to take into account things as they are in the real world before you are well into maturity; otherwise, you may find that you have done yourself out of advancement and ultimately out of the kind of success your talents have suited you for.

An excellent conversationalist, mimic, and storyteller, you are a joy to have in the midst of any gathering. You bring intelligence, humor, and high spirits to whatever society you move in. You admire the accomplishments of others readily and have an easy manner that often stands you in good stead. You enjoy the company of people and are not at all fussy when it comes to choosing associates. Indeed, perhaps you are not fussy enough!

Although you have been gifted with a strong will, you rarely employ it. Rather, you prefer to let situations, good and bad, run their natural course without any interference. Such an attitude may keep you from ulcers and heart attacks – but it may also keep you from reaching the high degree of success you otherwise might.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Lessons taught in the home will stand you in good stead now and in the days to come. Think back to your childhood for answers.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Seek some time alone to figure out, the consequences of a move under consideration. You may be confused by too many cooks in the kitchen.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — A retiring nature cannot be pushed into becomming the life of the party. Accept another's character as is – or not at all. Don't tamper.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — An intellectual approach is best when the problem is academic. Otherwise you would do well to listen carefully to what feelings have to say.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Take care that an outburst as a result of long frustration is not taken for mental instability. Explain yourself to observers.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Your expansiveness may strike another as either exaggerated or improper. Try to "read" another's basic nature before playing to it.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Take into consideration a loved one's view of reality. You may be dealing with two separate ways of looking at things.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Learn concentration, otherwise you will find that you are distracted to the point of failing in your goals. Ask for an extension.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — So long as discipline is tempered with humor and justice, you should be able to exercise it without losing a friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Combat a tendency to put off until tomorrow not only what can be done today but what must be done today!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Melancholy begets melancholy. Take the long view of your progress and you will not be so discouraged.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Fickleness and its changeable reception serve to confuse you and the issues you are considering. Seek stability at evening.

Sports in Brief

Ernie D a Laker

LOS ANGELES [AP] — The Los Angeles Lakers signed veteran guard Ernie DiGregorio to a multi-year contract, the National Basketball Association club announced yesterday.

Compensation to the Buffalo Braves for DiGregorio and terms of his new contract with the Lakers were not announced.

DiGregorio, the third player selected in the 1973 college draft, averaged 10.7 points and 5.6 assists in four years with the Braves.

"We figure he's one of the best playmakers in the league," said Los Angeles General Manager Bill Sharman. "He's the same type of player that Bob Cousy was."

Sharman and Cousy were teammates for 10 years with the Boston Celtics.

DiGregorio, 26, averaged 24.6 points and 8.6 assists in his senior year at Providence College. He received the Joe Lapshick Memorial Trophy as the outstanding collegiate player in the nation in 1972-73.

DiGregorio's contract with the Braves was estimated at $2 million for five years and had one year to go.

The Lakers refused to comment on reports that the Braves would pay part of DiGregorio's contract.

The 6' DiGregorio won the NBA Rookie of the Year Award in 1973-74 when he averaged 15.2 points and 8.2 assists.

He was hampered by knee injuries last season at Buffalo.

Pistons ink draftee

DETROIT [UPI] — Ben Poquette, the Central Michigan center who was the surprise top draft pick of the Pistons, yesterday signed with the NBA club.

Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

The 6'9" Poquette, selected by Detroit in the second round, was the 36th player picked overall but the Pistons' first selection. He is the first of Detroit's seven picks to sign and the club now has 16 players on its roster.

Poquette averaged 16.5 points and 11 rebounds a game for the Chippewas and was runnerup in voting for Player of the Year in the Mid-American Conference. His 96 blocked shots sent a Central Michigan record.

"Ben is the type of player who will come into training camp and give it his best," Coach Herb Brown said. "He is a bona fide pro prospect who will help us in rebounding, where we were weak last season."

Ali chided in note

NEW YORK [UPI] — Chiding Muhammad Ali for failing to train diligently for his Sept. 29 heavyweight boxing title defense against Earnie Shavers, Madison Square Garden has warned Ali to train seriously.

In a letter sent today by John Condon, the vice president of Madison Square Garden Boxing, Inc., Ali was reminded that the bout's promoters have agreed to pay him $3 million and they expect a performance commensurate with that figure.

Citing reports from his Deer Lake, Pa., training camp that Ali is overweight, has missed 10 of the last 16 days of training and plans to miss still more, Condon wrote: "I strongly suggest you discontinue all activities unrelated to your fight with Shavers and spend your entire time preparing to defend your title in a proper manner."

Ali was invited to a banquet last night at the White House as part of the Panama Canal treaty-signing ceremony. He was also expected to meet the President's mother today.

Jackson dropped

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Rookie Glen Walker has won the job as Los Angeles Rams' punter from Rusty Jackson, a second-year man from Louisiana State, it was disclosed yesterday.

Jackson was released on irrevocable waivers with three other players to cut the squad to the required 48 for the sixth Ram pre-season game against the Oakland Raiders at Memorial Coliseum tomorrow night.

Walker, 25, who booted them high and far for the Southern California Trojans last season, won the punting job because of his consistency in five pre-season games. On 10 punts, he averaged 41.1 yards while Jackson on the same number averaged only 34.9 yards.

The three other players released with Jackson were Ed Flanagan, a 13-year veteran from Purdue who has played with Detroit and San Diego; rookie running back Art Best from Kent State; and Ron McCartney, a linebacker from Tennessee who was a second round draft choice in 1976 but spent the year on the injured reserve.

Best was later claimed by Chicago.

Flanagan became expendable when Rich Saul, a holdout, joined the club two weeks ago.

Coach Chuck Knox said he planned to start Joe Namath at quarterback against the Raiders with Pat Haden playing the second half.

Walden waived

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The Pittsburgh Steelers yesterday announced that veteran punter Bobby Walden was placed on waivers earlier in the week and was not claimed by any other club.

The Steelers said they now intended to re-sign Walden and add him to their two-man inactive list after the final player cut next week.

Four pros lead advance at Open

FOREST HILLS, NY [COMPILED FROM WIRES] — At the US Open tennis championships yesterday, all of the higher-seeded players won, with one exception.

For the men, it meant Guillermo Vilas and a Harold Solomon triumph. And for the women, it meant a Chris Evert and a Betty Stove victory.

Vilas, the 25-year-old lefthander, seeded fourth, reached the semifinals with a lopsided 6-1, 6-1, 6-0 victory over unseeded Ray Moore.

Also advancing to the final four was 12th-seeded Solomon, a clay court specialist, who beat 10th-seeded Dick Stockton 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Vilas will meet Solomon in one of the men's semifinals on Saturday.

The other men's quarter-finals are to be played today. Second-seeded Jimmy Connonrs, the defending champion, takes on fifth-seeded Manual Orantes, while third-ranked Brian Gottfried opposes unseeded Corrado Barrazzutti.

Meanwhile, Evert shot down Billie Jean King 6-2, 6-0 for her 110th straight clay court triumph last night after 32-year-old Stove gave 14-year-old Tracy Austin a 6-2, 6-2 loss, but they left the U.S. Open Tennis Championships to rousing standing ovations.

Evert, gunning for her third straight victory here, kept the three-time former U.S. Champion running from corner to corner on the baseline nearly the entire 65 minutes of the match.

It was if Evert, who said earlier she'd be "shocked" if she ever last on clay, was merely practicing her hard, deep drives and King was trying to find something she'd lost a few years ago.

King, trying to come back from knee surgery last year and hoping to prepare herself for Wimbledon next year, could do little more than give Evert a workout.

Evert now meets Stove in the semifinals tomorrow.

This was 18th meeting between the 22-year-old Evert and the 33-year-old King, two of the greatest women players in history. Evert has won 11 of the duels, including all three this year, the last in the quarter-finals at Wimbledon, 6-1, 6-2.

King admitted she was no test for Evert and hinted she may be forced to consider retirement.

"She could play these (matches on clay) in her dreams," King said. "I don't feel I was moving well or changing directions on this clay. I was ticked, if you want to know the truth. We played a lot of close points. On the 30-40 points, she played tougher.

"I better get it together by October or November or that's it. I'll have to make some big decisions about next year. I'm not 20 years old and I can't change my game. Physically I'm fit; mentally I have to get tough again."

Evert, hungry for a victory here after losing in the semifinals at Wimbledon, said she wasn't overly impressed by her sterling performance.

"I don't think that I'm playing the best I've ever played," Evert said. "But I'm certainly keyed up for this tournament."

It was a letdown for the packed stadium crowd of 12,376, the largest so far at night this year. The day session crowd of just under 12,000 was equally deflated by Austin's one-sided loss.

The kid said goodbye to the open, but not before winning the hearts of the spectators and the respect of the pros.

Austin, who starts ninth grade next week in Rolling Hills, Calif. High School, saw her wonderful summer of fun end in the quarter-finals against the fifth-seeded Stove, 6-2, 6-2.

The 5'1" Austin, who had earlier upset fourth-seeded Sue Barker of England enroute to becoming the youngest quarter-finalist in the history of the U.S. Championship, simply could not handle the many winners coming off the racket of 6'1" Stove.

Stove, an often erratic player, had 31 unforced errors to Austin's 12, but the tallest and strongest woman pro also put away an incredible 37 winners to Austin's five. Stove, who won nine of 10 games in one stretch, took 70 of the 116 points in the match.

Vilas - 6-1, 6-1, 6-0
Solomon - 6-4, 6-4, 6-2
Evert - 6-2, 6-0
Stove - 6-2, 6-2

Toronto edges Boston

Yanks widen gap on Sox

Rivers, error aid NY

CLEVELAND [UPI] — The New York Yankees, one out away from defeat, tied the score on a two-run single by Mickey Rivers in the ninth inning and then won it on a throwing error by left fielder Bruce Bochte in the 10th last night to defeat the Cleveland Indians 4-3 and increase their lead to 3½ games over Boston in the American League East pennant race.

In addition to being aided by Bochte's error, which allowed Thurman Munson to score the winning run, the Yankees also benefited from Toronto's 3-2 triumph over the second place Red Sox.

Wayne Garland had blanked the Yankees through eight innings when Chris Chambliss started the ninth by beating out a bunt and reached second when Garland threw the ball into right field. Chambliss moved to third on Roy White's infield hit and scored on a single by Willie Randolph. After the runners moved up on an infield out, Mickey Rivers tied the score by delivering a two-run single.

Munson opened the 10th with a single that chased Garland and reliever Jim Kern was greeted by Reggie Jackson's single to left. Munson raced for third and scored the winning run when Bochte's throw hit the New York catcher in the back and bounced into the Yankee dugout.

Ron Guidry went all the way for his fifth straight victory and raised his record to 13-6.

The Indians took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. Paul Dade led off with a single and Guidry filled the bases with one out by walking Larvell Blanks and Andre Thornton. After Ron Pruitt struck out, Rico Carty blooped a 1-2 pitch into center for a two-run single.

Sox streak snapped

TORONTO [UPI] — Roy Howell's solo homer and rookie Gary Wood's run-scoring single in the sixth inning backed the four-hit pitching of Dave Lemanczyk last night and enabled the Toronto Blue Jays to snap an 11-game losing streak with a 3-2 triumph over the Boston Red Sox.

The loss snapped Boston's five-game winning streak.

Lemanczyk, who held the Red Sox hitless over the first four innings, notched his 11th triumph in 24 decisions and posted his 10th complete game. Ferguson Jenkins, 10-10, went the distance and took the loss.

Trailing 2-1 in the sixth, Howell hit his fourth home run of the season into the left field seats to give the Blue Jays a 2-2 tie. Ron Fairly followed with a walk, reached second on an infield out and scored when Wood's stroked a single into center field.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead in the third when Alan Ashby hit a ground rule double, took third on Tim Nordbrook's single and came home on a single by Steve Staggs.

Boston got two runs in the fifth on a walk to Jim Rice, a double by Carlton Fisk, an infield out and a single by Butch Hobson.

Scott back in lineup

TORONTO [UPI] — George Scott of the Boston Red Sox returned to the lineup against the Toronto Blue Jays last night after refusing to play in the team's previous two games.

Scott, who did not play in the last two contests because he "was not ready to play," was at first base in Boston's game against the Blue Jays.

Boston manager Don Zimmer offered no explanation of Scott's return.

"Yeah, he's playing, that's all I've got to say on it," said Zimmer.

Zimmer told reporters if Scott did not want to play "that's all right. I've got other good ballplayers."

Speculation is that Scott was angered at batting in the seventh position in the first game of Boston's Monday doubleheader with the Blue Jays. But the lineup for last night's game again listed Scott hitting in the seventh position.

Orioles split twinbill

DETROIT [UPI] — Rookie Lance Parrish, playing only his second major league game, drove in four runs with a bases-loaded double and his first home run last night to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 12-5 victory over Baltimore in the second game after rookie Dave Skaggs drove in five runs to lead the Orioles to an 11-inning, 6-2 triumph in the opener.

Skaggs, who had singled in Baltimore's first two runs in the seventh of the first game, keyed a four-run 11th with a game-sealing three-run double in the opener, but by losing the second game, the Orioles dropped 4¼ games behind New York and one game behind second-place Boston in the AL East.

Parrish's double scored three runs in the fourth and he scored on Stanley's single as the Tigers scored four times in the fourth.

The Grimm Reaper is back

I had been standing outside Fenway Park for three days, first in line at Gate C for bleacher seats for the series opener against the Detroit Tigers, when first I saw him. A chill ran up my spine.

"You!" I addressed the pale little man, "what are you doing here."

Hoisting his 25-man coffin into a more comfortable position, he spoke.

"I've come for the Red Sox."

His beady, hollow eyes twinkled, and his heavy Brooklyn accent sounded even thicker than usual.

"Haven't you been keeping up with the standings?" I asked him. "The Sox are hot. Five out of seven on the road, five games left with the Yankees, and Bill Lee back in top form. All that and they're only three -and-a-half back."

The little man just smiled, revealing empty gums which once housed teeth before he leaned into one too many a fastball.

"Harvey Grimm has never been wrong before," he boasted. I only reap the teams which have no chance of winning. That's why they call me The Grimm Reaper."

Ignoring the bad pun and the fact that Harvey smelled of day-old beer, I countered.

"What about '75?"

"Unfair. I had to use the box for Earl Weaver's witch doctor," said Harvey patting his coffin. "Listen," Harvey continued. "I wouldn't try to dupe you. You think I'd lug this thing around for nothing?"

I attempted a rebutal, but Harvey broke in.

"Tell me, kid, he said reasonably, who do you think was in the visiting locker room at Tiger Stadium for that final series in '72?"

I eyed Harvey incredulously.

"How could you have known that Aparicio would trip rounding third?" I challenged.

The little guy just smiled again and shifted his load. "That was a great season. The casket was knotty pine. Even fit the batboy.

"My best year, though was '74. Yep, that was a classic. Seven games up at the start of the September stretch run, and I brought on the box. Without Fisk, they finished seven out."

"Not this year's team," I shouted, close to tears. "This year's team has character. This year's team has will-power...

"This year's team has Bob Montgomery," finished the runt. "Look, kid, who have the Red Sox beaten during most of their road trip?"

"Well...." I quipped.

"The Blue Jays, kid, The Toronto Blue Jays. The Jays have a tough time hitting the ball in batting practice. The only balls they hit to the outfield are wind-blown pop-ups."

Now I had him. I finally had the little twerp exactly where I wanted him.

"You're right," I admitted. "You'd better go right up to Toronto with that thing. All that wind in Exposition Stadium will cool the bodies before they get to Fenway."

"Glad to see you've finally come to your senses," said Harvey, warily.

"Yep, that wind is really tough up there, the way it blows the ball all over the park."

Harvey nodded agreement.

"A club with a shoddy outfield would have a real tough time in Toronto."

"Sure would," said Harvey.

"Y'know," I said, playing my age, "White and Rivers and Jackson better have an undertaker ready for 'em when they all run into each other chasing one of those pop flies."

Harvey just stood there dumfounded for a minute, then he turned and started running, slowed somewhat by the dragging coffin.

"Hey, Harvey," I yelled, "where are you going?"

"Oh," Harvey screamed, never turning back, "Canada".

Sand sang like corduroy, breathy biting needled us to our feet, and sent us back inside a bowl between the dunes.
Alone we carved the barren amphitheatre walls
again, peeled to our ancestors, relearning

Science Fiction in the Seventies

By Rich Pioli

> "Our spacemen roving on the moon (on the TV screen) are like old pictures of spacemen roving on the moon, and this fact is more startling than spacemen roving on the moon, our imagination is successful yet coping with reality we cannot do it differently."
> —Paul Goodman

Science-Fiction
History - Science - Vision
By Robert Scholes
and Eric S. Rabkin
Oxford University Press

Is really that much of what we consider our best contemporary fiction the new wave of Science-Fiction? Certainly it's easy enough to pick Saul Bellow out of this ambifuous crowd and safely deposit him where he belongs, with the likes of Heller and Mailer, but how many others only belong there? Much less easy to define are the new and sparkling accomplishments of solid and well known writers such as John Barth (Giles Boat Boy), Thomas Pynchon (Gravity's Rainbow), Anthony Burgess (Clockwork Orange), Vonnegut, Burroughs, Golding, etc. All have valiantly straddled from mainstream literature to employ themselves with the many amusing challenges and problems lurking on imaginary worlds peopled with the fantastic, while concurrently declaring what great substance the entire genre carries within; much that would be considered very important in any literature.

In great leaps, Sci-Fi is becoming our modern literature, scanning and absorbing contemporary culture and dealing with problems reality cannot begin to solve. The importance is the imagination itself, that something may seem to think can only muddle clear and precise thinking. Along with this new prominence comes the demand for all the glamorous detail; time to unleash what has always been here — the speculative and historical analyses of this phenomenon.

Oxford University Press has published the very thing, designed for the purposes of setting records straight and outlining the exciting vistas of Sci-Fi. Science Fiction, researched and written by Brown University prof-spaceman Robert Scholes and U. of Michigan prof-explorer Eric S. Rabkin, takes the necessary academic whack at shaping the subject via historical, scientific, mythical, sexual and visionary interpretations.

More than enlightening, the historical part throws you directly into the nucleus of this strange evolution in literature. During the latter half of the nineteenth century realistic fiction had fallen to the laborious task of presenting the realistic world. Meanwhile scientists slowly perfected their instruments of measuring and vision, slowly rolling back layers of the unknown until the world began looking different to us. The doorways yielded glimpses of the fantastic making ordinary life harder to swallow; the problems of cosmic and atomic space begged for answers only fantastic speculation was prepared to answer. Then, answers began to appear in a new fictional form.

Scholes and Rabkin begin their beginning by dividing the achievement between four unique and very engaging writers, all of whom possessed the fertile seed of Sci-Fi; the metaphysical speculation of Edgar Allen Poe (Conversation of Eros and Charmion) Jules Verne and his eternal romance with man's hardware (Twenty-Thousand Leagues), the social criticism and futurism of Edward Bellamy (Looking Backward), and that wonderful exotic adventure of Edgar Rice Burroughs (The Mars Books) all come together in later Sci-Fi works.

In great leaps, Sci-Fi is becoming our modern literature, scanning and absorbing contemporary culture and dealing with problems reality cannot begin to solve.

H. G. Wells so superbly drew upon that montage of imagination that his achievement has been one of the very best pieces of all times, The Time Machine. Its singular greatness is lengthily discussed in a special section on "Ten Representative Novels", the treatment of it along with nine others is elegantly thorough. •

The twenties and thirties fathered more important and progressive contributions; We (Zamyatin), Insect Play, RUR (Capek, father of the term Robot) and Stapledon's work all achieved great new advances for the new form. Pulpy America, The Golden Age (with vanVogt, Heinlein, Asimov, Sturgeon), the Sixties and the New Wave are all solid branches throughout this history. With gains beyond simply far-reaching, this intensive evolution took Sci-Fi far from its cradle (shared with its brother Fantasy) into a more responsible realm. After all, Fantasy writers were also aware of differences between natural and supernatural and deliberately chose to keep the two separate. Supernatural only, thank-you. Well then, for Science Fiction's best writers there are no clearly distinguished choices — all are possible.

However, each passing year bears more fantastic possibilities, as is the very thing with New Wave writer Norman Spinrad's alternate universe premise in Lords of the Swastika; Hitler emigrates to N.Y.C. in 1919 never getting to be Chancellor of Germany. With an idea like this, Spinrad expands the horizon with a critical-parody of much militaristic Sci-Fi popular work that rots, forcing us to face the rascist power elements frequently found within the genre. The literary existence is safe with much self-examination within. Delaney (Dhalgren, Triton), Zelazny (Lord of Light), Joanna Russ (The Female Man) all continue to purify Sci-Fi into some fine writing, imaginative forms extensively sought out and enchantingly experienced.

The vision of any great explorer has always been comparatively unique, Sci-Fi writers being no exception. Their future is the largest in fiction today and there are no easy answers without an observed experiment; since the earliest writing man has wanted to use his knowledge to prolong life longer if not forever to use an example. The struggle against death remains unchanged but prolongation remains possible in Sci-Fi. And in very literate ways the artificial life created in Sci-Fi causes the same human guilt creator sin that goes back to ancient mythology. Obviously Sci-Fi is not full of cardboard characters,but it has had writers good and bad. Learn to know the difference.

Other themes discussed, like Utopias, distopias, other populated worlds, past events, future events are given the full treatment in the Vision section. Vision here being "the desire to transcend normal experience" is about as old as Lord Byron but still its good to see this optimism in the ability to build better worlds or at least try to figure out what went wrong with ours. More various visions include teleportation, speed of light travel, the alternate time stream, parallel and alternate universes, computers, androids, cyborgs, and even sex between men and all kinds of other things that move and the ensuing problems ad infintim...

Representative novels and much bibliography materials close this instructive, compact manual for leaving planet Earth, a guide book for beginners and old crows alike. Much of the prose in Science Fiction tends to sound like that same old literary critism, yet that could be the first sign of gigantic acceptance. It has become necessary to talk about the past of Sci-Fi in order to understand its future and our places in it. This book has done the job rather neatly, making Sci-Fi at times more real and reticent than other literature.

The above simply remains an outline to those seeking the careful route to a larger understanding of the Sci Fi genre. There are many, many more; where writers have written many books I have chosen those which would serve to illustrate that writer's most important ideas. As the list shows Sci Fi is on the rise, and from remarkably great sources.

KING

By James Odato

D. Schafer photo

At the open window, he drew up the shade and watched, for a moment, the early morning traffic on Main Street.

Mechanically, King rolled from his stomach to his back, hitting off the clattering alarm clock. It was dim in the small attic room a few minutes after five.

King moved slowly from his bed. His aged, leathery skin was moist with perspiration, and it clung to the shirt and trousers into which he dressed.

Stopped to avoid hitting his head on the slanted ceiling, King walked to the bathroom. He ran water over his hands and face and wiped his thin, silvery mane back with wet palms.

At the open window, he drew up the shade and watched, for a moment, the early morning traffic on Main Street. Then he closed the shade. He turned his large frame and started for the table.

At his feet was the cat. It looked into his eyes and licked its whiskers.

King's eyes, waxen-green, blood red, met the soft, grey stare of the creature at his feet.

"You can go to hell!" King grumbled. "You're always wantin' something' from me." The old voice was harsh, throaty, congested.

King found an unopened bottle of beer among the several empties on the small table. He gulped the warm ale; it flowed freely through his toothless gums down his throat.

He turned on the radio: ". . . the two Santaniello's were also charged with pandering and illegal possession of fire arms . . ."

King lifted his brows and looked at the radio. "And today will be another scorcher. The temperature. . ." King ended the broadcast with a turn of the button.

He put down the empty bottle, belched, and went to the door. He looked over his wide shoulder before he exited. Cracks of light filtered through slits in the green shade and the dust-wooden room seemed suspended; it hung still, like a shot from a silent movie.

The cat scampered for the door.

"I'll be back shortly lass," King said and shut the door.

He crept down the stairway, passing the second floor tenement where Little Will and his wife lived. Still quieter was he going out the front door by the bedroom window of Vinnie and Lottie. They owned the building.

King stepped down the wooden porch stairs noiselessly. The blue-red sky indicated another fly-swatting, thirsty day.

With hunched shoulders and drooping head, King walked across the street to work. He took the key from his pocket, opened the kitchen door, and flicked off the blinking, neon sign. "Vinnie's Grinders" it read. King looked at the sign and shook his head.

He opened a seven-pound can of tuna and forked the contents into a bus tray. He placed a portion of tuna in a paper cup, filled another cup with milk, sealed both cups, and put them in a paper bag. He shut the kitchen door and walked slowly across the street, shuffling silently up three flights to his room.

"I know I shouldn't yell at you in the morning, my little woman . . . You know how I am in the morning, now don't you?"

He filled two tins with the food. The cat drew closer.

It was almost a month ago King had brought the cat home. He had discovered her in the passage behind the dumpster in back of "Vinnie's."

He, himself, had been drinking behind the dumpster. He had given her milk and they drank together. They met there a few more times; the cat always taking the milk he brought. He had taken her home.

"I don't mean to yell. Tuna and milk. You know me." A grin spread over King's unshaven face as the cat ambled to the milk.

The little cat lapped up the milk; her little pink tongue delicately and rhythmically plucking up the nourishment.

King swallowed down whiskey and burped. "Won't be long now, huh? We'll be havin' a big family won't we little woman?"

He bent down and pawed the fine hair of the cat, looking at her bloated belly. The cat continued with her meal.

"I'll be nice for you. I'll bring you meals, and the young one's too. Won't have nothin' but to bring 'em up right. Away from that there swill out there."

The cat strolled from the food and lay near the open window. Light whispersof air came through the shade. King picked up the cat and placed her on the bed.

"You mind the castle. I'll be back for you. Now keep still, lass," King said and left, shutting the door.

King searched behind the hard boiled eggs in the kitchen refrigerator for a cold beer. He found it just where he had hidden it. He opened it and gulped a quarter of the bottle's contents in a short swig. The next hour he spent shredding lettuce, slicing tomatoes and cheese, and stocking the salad unit and refrigerator up front. He was mashing the tuna and mayonnaise together with his large hands when Little Will, the manager, entered with his wife, Gloria.

"What's up Doc?" Gloria said. Together, the couple weighed about 700 pounds, and Little Will was close to two feet taller than his wife.

Gloria went directly to the refrigerator in the kitchen and took out eight eggs. She spilled them and two cuts of ham onto the grill, and filled the toaster with bread.

Little Will checked the refrigerators, kitchen, and salad unit.

"It's all stocked," King said in a tired voice.

Little Will strutted up to King, rubbing his short, bristly hair with his hand.

"Lottie's fumin'. Last night the boys were laughin' at her, and she happened to find a few beers in the ice chest. She hit the roof! She was bitchin' to Vinnie, and you know her . . . So don't be smellin' of licker today."

Little Will pulled his trousers up over his belly. "And you know some of the boys got picked up by the cops last night for gamblin' and pimpin' downtown — I'd stay clear of them," he said with a wink.

He limped to the dining room and joined Gloria for the early meal.

"Oh this heat is killing me! I think we outta move the fan and the T.V. to the front room. We'll get a better breeze there, Willy," Gloria said, chewing egg and toast.

"We'll see. You're the one that likes to lie down and watch T.V. in the bedroom!" Little Will said, not looking at his wife.

"Oh, you do too," she replied.

King went next door to the supply room and went into the walk-in box. He took a beer from behind the spaghetti sauce pan. For the next hour he cut grinder rolls.

Little Will and Gloria went back home at 8 a.m. Little Will would return to work the late shift until 2 a.m.

Nancy and Tony were the first shift. Nancy wore a black waitress's uniform and walked bow-legged. She had been working at "Vinnie's" two decades. About as long as King.

"So how much you saved for college?" she asked the boy. He was tying the apron strings around his waist.

"I got a ways to go. Workin' here don't get you rich," Tony said.

"Whacha takin' up there when you go?" Nancy asked.

"In college? Psychology. Ya. I think I want to help people deal with their problems." He began eating a ham and cheese grinder.

"Problems? Ain't gotta go to college to learn about problems. You mean you want to be one of them shrinks? My brother-in-law went to one of them for years. Ended up jumpin' from the South End Bridge. You can't help people like that," she said, twirling her index finger at the boy. She nibbled some potato chips with her coffee.

King strolled by the take-out window with a shopping-cart full of rolls and containers of diced onions and tomato sauce.

His eyes were redder and he wiped his wide, blemished face with a soiled dish rag.

Already, many members of the gang were on the terrace. In the shade of the awnings, over looking Main St., they sat, making an occasional remark, as they read the morning paper. Most were dressed colorfully.

King felt Howard, the leader, staring at him. A dark-haired man, Howard had two brothers and many friends who were in court this morning, King knew. He continued wheeling the cart, looking at the ground.

"Eh," Howard called. Everyone looked up. "King."

King stopped and stared mutely at the man.

Howard manipulated his index finger. "Come 'er."

Showing a bill to King, he said, "Wanna get me a pack of smokes across the street."

"Why there's a machine in the dining room," King suggested.

"They ain't got my brand. Here's a buck, go get a pack of Thins. Keep the change and buy a couple beers for lunch."

King rolled the cart into the kitchen, then crossed the street slowly, stepping deliberately through the traffic.

Tony, scrubbing the counter at the carry-out window, had overheard. He watched King running the errand.

"Why does King always drink?" he asked Nancy.

A smile rippled over her powdered face, revealing nicotine-stained incisors. "We all drink," she said.

"No, I mean. How come he's always gettin' drunk? You've known him a long time."

"Well, I tell ya. King used to be a big man. He was a wrestler. Used to win all his matches. Used to call him 'King Pin'." Nancy lit a cigarette and sipped from her coffee.

"He weighed a good 200 pounds. Never made it through high school. His parents died — well — his mother died, his father was already dead. King, being the oldest kid, went to work."

"How many kids?"

Nancy exhaled some smoke. "Let's see, I think there was six. Six or seven. King put the food on the table a good ten years for them. When they was grown, he got married. Some floozie. Had some kids, and the floozie one day took the kids and left. Poor King, he was a welder — went from place to place — kept gettin' fired for drinkin'."

Tony looked out the window and saw the gang on the terrace laughing at something Howard was saying. King was walking through the street with a paper bag.

"How do you know all that?" Tony questioned.

"It's the truth," Nancy said coldly. "King told me once. He was drunk and . . ."

King came in and put the rolls from the cart into the bin near Tony. He put the sauce and onions in the refrigerator beneath the salad unit.

"Nancy," he said, "could you let me haf a coupla bucks." He looked from Nancy to the cash register.

"Not this time. Lottie'll be here soon. She's probably lookin' at us right now with her binoculars. Ask her. She catches me given you money, you won't be in trouble!."

Howard and some of the gang entered the air-conditioned dining room. Howard rested his foot on a stool and looked out the window to the street.

Tony looked out the window and saw the gang laughing at something Howard was saying.

Nancy walked from the grill area and served the men free coffees.

"Hi boys. How ya doin' today," she said.

"The battle-ax," King said. Tony laughed, watching.

King sliced two piles of pastrami. He put one pile in a slice of rye bread, whistling. He went to the back room, returning with tobasco sacue, which he sprinkled heavily with mustard on the bread. He wrapped the half-sandwich, then put a cup of milk and the other pile of meat in his brown paper bag.

"Sure eatin' a lot today," Tony said.

King looked at the boy. He lifted his shirt, displaying a rounded stomach and slapped it twice, hard. "I'm a growin' boy. Fifty-nine and goin' strong, boy, goin' strong!" His green-in-pink eyes glared with delight. A hot mist of alcohol clung to the think kitchen air; a familiar odor to Tony.

"Jeez, with all the booze you put away, its a wonder you ain't in worse physical condition."

"Booze never hurt no one." King said. He took his small package and started away.

"Hey King," Tony said, "I'll lend you a buck."

King returned. "I don't want your money, boy, but I need some things for the home...haf one of my beers." He reached into the bag.

"No, I don't want one. So you don't want the money for booze? In that case I feel better." He handed King a dollar.

"No. I'll pay ya back when I can, boy." He started away.

"Hey King. You ever been married?"

King turned, looking startled, then a wide smile spread across his face. "I'm a bachelor for life," he said. "Women — they're all no-good to me." He looked down the way at Nancy who was smoking a cigarette near the gang. She turned and walked into the grill area.

"Now Kingie. If you do my dishes before I leave this afternoon, I'll give you a dollar. No two bucks."

"You're a darlin', Nancy, a darlin'." Clutching his bag, he left.

Knowing the Absurd

COLLECTED POEMS
Paul Goodman
Edited by Taylor Stoehr
465 pages
Random House

With hardly a well-developed personal style, more like the vernacular you and I employ to discuss any matter at hand, Paul Goodman is smooth and capable of moving us with his poetry. His interests cover a wide area of things, none of them very far removed from the issues that affect all men, be they love, war or death. Paul was anti-establishment, not very popular and not too well off and now posthumously is on the verge of reaching many through his heartfelt truths.

As a social critic he wrote dozens of books including Compulsory Miseducation and Growing Up Absurd. His novel, The Empire City takes place in his home, New York City which also becomes the subject for much poetry in this collection.

Estranged from the heart of America due to this country's unlawful involvement in Vietnam, Paul was an expatriot who had no where to go. Much in love with the natural beauty of America, he often saw fit to run many parallels between the land and the men. Lamenting his own inability to reach the people much of Paul's poetry sounds like the voice of a failure:

> Of the millions, I know, who have gone to the grave displeased, ungratified, and malcontent, as one count me, for now it is too late ever to unmake it and chance has become fate. Yet in this crowd of every kind of sorrow still am I signal for a fool and coward, for few, I think, have seen so fine as I the remediable faults, and been unable.

'I am obsessed by the plain facts: writing them literally down is all poetry I can.'

It is this tone of unyielding that one reads again and again here; the tragedy of a son's death is coupled with the unjustness running rampant in Washington, at Kent State and in Indochina.

Never really giving up, many of Paul's poems are prayers. Still the wrath of humanity swelled about the mind of this philosopher guaranteeing him that his fears were truly real:

> "Everywhere I look about are there outlines of truth and art breeding in the dark of this moment at the edge of the abyss."

Though this tone is prevalent and understandably the most vital thing about his work, Paul Goodman enjoyed sex, his summers in the country and the wonderful confidence that accompanies conviction. You can begin on the first page of poetry, what Paul was writing in his older age, and discern from there the quality of thought that assembled the remarkable beauty of his simple language:

> "My bounding beagle somewhere in the hay is invisible, except her flapping ears and the white curl of her happy tail moving through the swaying sea. The yellow flowers are closing in the evening. I am not lonely for my only world is softly singing to me as I come."

A lot of the outdoor descriptions ring of Robert Frost's influence but Frost, quite older is conservative in philosophizing and more artistic than plain-speaking. Frost is colloquial in a much more regionalized way; Goodman speaks to all like anyone of us. There are moments full of creative play beyond the importance of the idea:

> "The engingines of the ailing plane are st-tuttering I hope they won't beginnnnn to stammer: 30,000 feet is too high for speech defects.

George Dennison, in a memoir included in this edition tells of one party Goodman attended with many "young women, and they were conventionally scrubbed, scented and dressed" and unapproachable to the like of Paul. "Paul by now was sitting on the floor, leaning against the wall, dismayed and contemptuous. The dog went to him and wagged its tail. Paul took its head caressingly in both hands and spoke to it. There was self-pity in his voice, but also admiration and outright gratitude. "Yes my darling," he said, "You're the prettiest one here." Both melancholy and cleverness survive in his poetry as they combined in his personality.

Poems of age are fascinating for their acute awareness of the man's accomplishments in life and the dismal failure of finding no receptive audience. Somehow Goodman survives his own thick lamentations to provide the best of brighter insights:

> "Often have I dreaming frightened into puzzlements awakened, and most days have proved to be milder than my anxiety."

As much of a social critic as well as a poet has made Goodman sound like the definitive poet for capturing the upheavals of the 1960s. Blasts at very real things like the Pentagon, the bombing squads, the people slowly killing the magnificence of his beloved New York, all ring with prophetic despair of worse times to come.

Somehow, Goodman the man is very much his poetry and you finish his collection feeling like you've just become acquainted with an idol, someone with something that bears on you so much that you're changed by it. Well, Paul Goodman has much to say to you, and in a very honest poetic way.

In his room, he shared the bag's contents with the cat. She lay by the window; her belly bloated. She had not eaten the tuna King had set out.

"My woman! What happed to that appetite of yours?" King took a slug of whiskey, and picked up the cat.

"You're near aren't you," he said stroking the fur on her taut neck. "My wife was the same way, Queenie, when my second boy came. Wouldn't eat a thing, no. She made me go out and get her salted popcorn. That's all she ate! Don't ask me why!" The cat stared into the sad, smiling eyes of the man.

"Well, here now. Maybe this salty meat will tickle your fancy." King poured the milk and put out the pastrami.

The cat tongued the meat but did not take any. She drank in the milk, somewhat, then left it be.

King bit into his sandwich and mustard oozed from it and smeared on his lips. He washed down the food with a long drink of beer.

He picked up the cat and placed her on his bed. He watched her with concern. "Now don't you be frettin', I'll be back directly. . .and with a surprise."

He departed watching the cat. A beam of light, stemming from the drawn shade, was bright upon her.

"Bye now."

At noon, Vinnie and Lottie came into the diner. The gang called Vinnie "Champ" because he was a winning weekend golfer. And because of his past reputation with women.

Vinnie, dressed in white khakis and sandals, was already drunk. His sunburned face contrasted sharply with his full head of white hair.

Lottie wore her hair in a long, braided, pony-tail. She had on her usual loose-fitting, flowered dress. "Good morning," she issued, taking two fresh danishes and a coffee. With a bang of the screen door behind her, she sat at a table on the terrace.

Vinnie joined her after he grabbed some money from the cash register.

"I'm telling you I heard one. I know a cat when I hear one. I know what a cat sounds like. He's got a cat up there and I want it out Vinnie. Tell him." Lottie's eyes flashed at her husband's, and Vinnie looked away.

"Come on. King ain't got no cat up there. What's King want with a cat — he ain't got no use in no cats. Come on Lottie."

"Well I'm just going to have to get rid of him if there's any animals in my father's house. He can go on Welfare for all I care — like the rest of the drunken bums. If there's any animals in that house you'll be sorry — you'll be the one to chop lettuce and wash dishes every day."

"That's the house your father raised you in," Vinnie said looking at Lottie's forehead. "We gotta keep it up. What the hell, we can't have no animals stinkin' up the place!" Vinnie pounded his fist on the table getting catsup on his wrist.

He charged into the kitchen, slamming the screen door.

Lottie, forking grime from one set of initials carved in the table, could see Vinnie, but not hear his conversation.

King looked soberly at Vinnie; his head stooped to the short, lively man.

Vinnie shoved a five dollar bill at King. He squinted his blue eyes and grit a row of large white teeth.

"You been working good this week . . . It's been real hot. Get a bottle of the good stuff for yourself, O.K.?

"I have," King replied, and pocketed the bill.

"Lottie's got a bad allergy's been actin' up," Vinnie continued. "She's allergic to cat hair. You ain't got no cat up there do you? Now you're gonna have to get rid of it King."

"I got no animal up there Champ, never have."

"No cat? Lottie says you got a cat. Said she head a cat up there. You ain't got no cat? The bitch."

"She's been drinkin' Champ."

"She drives me to drink!"

Vinnie returned to the terrace. Lottie stared at Main St., smoking.

"All set Lot. He was listenin' to the radio — one of them pet talks, you know what I mean. He's always listenin' to the radio; only thing he does up there."

"Look at how filthy this terrace is. Why can't you get Tony to clean up after those loafers?" Lottie looked scornfully at the gang in the dining room as Vinnie started picking up empty cigarette boxes, cups, and newspapers.

King walked through the diner toward the Men's Room, carrying a pail, rubber gloves, and cleanser.

"Eh, King City," Howard called. "Come 'er." He stood about six foot. His chewing gum crackled as he leaned against the juke box, rolling his eyes from his peers to King.

"How'd you like to make a hundred bucks for a half hour's work? A one-shot deal — absolutely legit." King did not respond.

"All you got to do is wrestle Little Will this Saturday night at the auditorium." The dining room echoed with laughter.

"No! Gloria, that's a better match!" Howard laughed at his jest along with the rest of the gang. King turned, his mouth closed tight.

"Well King you was a big wrestler, why not? You know the sport."

King faced the man, saw through the diner window, the three-story building where he lived, and thought of the cat. "I never wrestled in my life."

"Now you know that ain't the truth. Tell you what, King, I'll be your agent. We'll hit the pro-wrestlin' circuit. Won't even have to change your name —"

King threw his stare to Howard's face. "That ain't even wrestlin' — that fixed, no true sport, ain't real, ain't wrestlin', fixed," he stuttered.

The gang stared. King went into the Men's Room.

"Yes, Maam?" Tony asked a customer at the carry-out.

"Best tuna-fish in town, yes sir —" Nancy told the woman's partner.

A policeman sat in the diner with the gang. Nancy came in and asked him what he would like and did not use a slip.

The gang's laughter filled the dining area; King could hear. He sprinkled cleanser over the sink and toilet with one hand, and pulled a beer from his pocket with the other. His blood painted a scarlet crown at his forehead.

At 3 o'clock, King was caught up with his work: all the refrigerators were stocked; two roast beefs were cooked; the terrace was swept; the bathrooms cleaned; and all dishes washed. King thirsted for beer.

Nancy gave him the promised dollar. On a sandwich sale she had run up "No Sale" and handed King the money. Lottie had not gotten up from her table, and Vinnie drank sodas with the gang in the air-conditioning.

King reached into his pocket and pulled the $5 Vinnie had given him and added up all his cash — almost $8. He left through the back way, passing Lottie on the terrace. She had not spoken to him at all when he had swept the terrace earlier, but had kept looking at the street.

Without looking at her he heard her say, "now don't go playing your radio so loud anymore." He kept walking, feeling her eyes on his spine as he weeded his way slowly across the street, anxious to see the cat. Yet, he walked downtown, knowing Lottie figured he was heading for the package store.

A block uptown, King went into the Army-Navy store. He was able to purchase a thick, red blanket.

"It's hot now, but she'll be needin' it. And the young ones too," he thought. He walked into the liquor store, grinning, and the cashier, gave him a big brown bag for which he asked. He put the blanket in the bag, smiling.

Feeling satisfied and anxious, King walked patiently past "Vinnie's." He looked ahead at the three-story building, thinking of the Cat. Like an athlete in competition, he sweated as he passed before the grinder shop. He felt like a performer in front of a crowd.

He climbed the porch steps, clutching his surprise package. He was alive with violent anticipation; each step bringing him closer to his goal. He

The South is Goin' at it Again

The impact of the British invasion is extremely overrated when you consider that rock 'n' roll began in the South with blues, country & western, and rockabilly.

Music

By Whitey McCool

The various elements comprising the mystique that record companies are now calling "Southern rock" are surely espied in anything that we of a less temperature clime have christened "Southern." For one there is the element of pride; pride of place, pride of identity; "Be Proud You're a Rebel," commands Charlie Daniels (The South's Gonna Do It Again).

"New York's fine, but it ain't Doraville!" proclaims the Atlanta Rhythm Section in Doraville. Meanwhile Lynyrd Skynyrd's Sweet Home Alabama is a flag waving tribute to the Confederacy that appeals to the ear as the scenery does the eye.

The loner born to ramble is a character of the Southern school. His roots are deep in the novels of Faulkner, the dramas of Tennessee Williams, and the lyrics of the Allman Brothers' Ramblin' Man (penned by Dicky Betts). The hero of the Marshall Tucker Band's Fire on the Mountain as well as the sore loser in Dr. John's Right Place, Wrong Time are essential to Southern folklore as the force out of place; a rebel sans comrades, course, or cause.

And then there's love; troo luv and love that went wrong, the idylic love of Tristan and Isolde or Frankie and Johnny, the "somebody-done-somebody-wrong-song", or poor Elvin Bishop who Fooled Around and Fell In Love.

From Capricorn comes a saucy sampling of the finest of the South. The South's Greatest Hits is an honest effort by the company from Macon that first gave birth to the phenomenon and eventually acquired the title of the largest independent record company on earth. The loyalty of the South is more than evident as the people from Capricorn have reached deep into the scores of other company labels to press a crisp and encompassing review of the greatest commercial accomplishments that the region has offered.

The barroom and the barnyard are aptly represented by all of the titles and artists mentioned above as well as Gregg Allman's Midnight Rider, The Amazing Rhythm Aces' Third Rate Romance, the Outlaws' There Goes Another Love Song and Wet Willie's Keep On Smilin!

The impact of the British invasion is extremely overrated when you consider that rock 'n' roll began in the South with blues, country & western, and the rockabilly ascribed to the late Elvis Presley. But like the tale of Johnnie B. Good, much of this culture is acquired by many young Southern musicians as they strut and fret their way without any formal education in music and like the development of jazz we find that there is a great deal of improvising and playing-by-ear in live Southern rock.

In the late 60's Eric Clapton with Cream would grab ahold of a single-chord progression and allow it to progress for a half-hour or more. The Allman Brothers took it a step further and could carry on for hours if the feeling was right. Their education came from listening sessions of lengthly solos of one and two chord melodies in the late 50's and early 60's recorded by Miles Davis and John Coltrane.

Live Southern rock at its peak is a jam session minus the cliches and the redundant hacking of any second rate musicians that have flooded the market. The South's Greatest Hits is as best a collector's album as available now but passes over the most moving aspect of the Southern sound; the live wire that's a live performance.

One album that does successfully catch hold of this side of Southern rock is Elvin Bishop's Raisin' Hell, and an appropriate title it is. Bishop's music can best be termed "fun-loving-good-time" soul. It is at once a combination platter of gospel, greasy blues, and a hot sizzle of blaring horns reminiscent of those golden James Bond type soundtracks.

"The sound quality ain't as good as a real carefully recorded studio album," said Bishop in a recent interview, "but that has never bothered me before. Some of my favorite records have turned out to be recorded in somebody's basement."

Elvin Bishop raisin' music to higher degrees.

Bishop is a crowd-pleaser and this latest two-disked live album captures all the hell raisin' that he generates at various recitals in various locales. Raisin' Hell includes some of the best that he's recorded in his four LP history with Capricorn. There's an 8-minute Travelin' Shoes, Sure Feels Good, Juke Joint Jump, Stealin' Watermelons, Calling All Cows, the greasy blues of Little Brown Bird, a 12-minute Sam Cooke medley and Struttin' My Stuff.

From a relatively new label, Flying Fish, comes a unique fusion of mainstream jazz and country that might well be designated as Southern swing. S'Wonderful brings together Eldon Shamblin, the ex-Bob Wills guitarist, pedal steel guitarist Curley Chalker, mandolin player Jethro Bruns and jazz violinist Joe Venuti for a recording that hits home a fresh note in country but a seemingly lost chord in jazz. Dixie's whistling a new tune to the swing of the 30's and the strains blend fine. And it really isn't anything new because it's been going on all along outside of the recording studios and in the backrooms where country musicians have been finding recreation in playing jazz among themselves.

In a similar strain the Dixie Dregs have debuted on Capricorn with Freefall which just about encompasses everything discussed thus far. Their music, entirely instrumental, is most certainly country, most suredly rock, very much jazz, and most of all Southern. But the parts make up a near perfect whole that comprise a cleancut score.

Freefall brings to mind the Western swing of the 30's much like S'Wonderful but with much more power. It is hopefully the first of an emerging new strain of Southern music and Dixie Dregs is setting the style.

The cuts sound very much like their titles. Freefall, the first band, begins with fiddler Alan Sloan introducing a somewhat eerie melody to conjure up that zero-gravity known to skydivers as freefall. Later in songs like Refried Funky Chicken and Sleep a synthesizer is the predominant instrument and sets the scene from a jazzy beat to complete chaos. But the transitions are comfortable and the melodies run close together like a symphony with some difficulty differentiating from one movement to the next.

A new group called Stillwater has come on the scene with an album from Capricorn by the same name.

A sizzling slide guitar exchange is the high point of Sam's Jam and a somber acoustic-track underlines April Love while Mindbender has bassist Rob Walker on a voicebox sounding like Peter Frampton.

Stillwater needs a little time to sink in with loyal Southern rockers but it does have a mystique all its own and is somewhat exotic to the ear. Its got several of the elements that make the up best of Southern rock.

Short Cuts

Eric Carmen, Harry Chapin, Cat Stevens, Heart, Status Quo, and more...

CHRISTOPHER MORRIS BAND
(MCA)

The integration of many kinds of music ranging from soulful rhythm n' blues to funk-rock with faint jazz textures, is what distinguishes this debut album from those of most groups I've heard lately.

Al Kooper, the architect of Blood, Sweat and Tears and producer for Lynryd Skynryd's first album, turns in another superb producing job as well as filling in on keyboards for the Christopher Morris Band, which includes Christopher Morris and Leslie Kuipers on guitars, Janet Morris on bass and Vince Colaiuta playing drums.

On Otis Redding's "Nobody's Fault But Mine", one of the two songs here not penned by CMB's co-authors Christopher and Janet Morris, Tower of Power's horn section (which graces side two) strongly complements the convincing vocals of Christopher Morris, who does all of the album's lead singing.

Despite one or two places where the music gets uncomfortably close to disco, as on "Go Down Believin' " which has a determined, gospel-like chorus, there are enough spacy guitar licks and enough heart put in those places so that the album doesn't drag.

"Do You Want To Be Loved" has a few swirling echoes, and "I Feel Like I Never Felt Before", the LP's best tune, combines funky, staccato bass with Chris Morris' squealing guitar. Both songs typify a first effort which has enough space appeal for even most progressive rock buffs to accept.

— John Bergman

FOGHAT
Live
(Bearsville)

With the widespread success of their past two discs, Fool For The City and Night Shift, Foghat have found themselves thrust into the top echelons of the rock world. For this reason, it comes as no surprise that the band has chosen this as the time to release their first live album. Comprised of six previously recorded studio selections, Live gives ample evidence of the vast improvement which is so readily heard now that the group has a steady bassist (Connecticut's Craig MacGregor) to anchor the rhythm section along with drummer Roger Earl. Guitarist-vocalist Dave Peverett teams with lead guitarist Rod Price to create the instrumental interplay which helps make songs such as "I Just Want To Make Love To You" and "Fool For The City" enjoyable to the ears of any rock & roller from six to sixty. This record isn't perfect, but it is better than most of the uninspired trash many rock groups have been throwing our way lately. It burns and earns itself a "not bad for an album whose mixing was done up in Sharon, Vermont" B plus.

—Ross Nerenburg

CAT STEVENS
Izitso
(A&M)

Cat Stevens has gone off on tangents before (his Foreigner and Numbers LPs) and Izitso finds him off on a few new ones. With two instrumental selections, "Kypros" and "Was Dog A Doughnut," Cat steps into a jazz realm, a move further substantiated by Chick Corea's helping hand on a couple of Izitso's cuts. Also, Cat has continued with something he really got into on Numbers, making maximum use of some rather sophisticated and expensive electronic keyboard equipment. Happily, the results are most satisfactory, something which may be attested to by the number of times I played this disc over the summer. More mellow than I might have expected, the best of Izitso's ten offerings are "(Remember The Days Of The) Old Schoolyard," "Life," "Killin' Time" and "(I Never Wanted) To Be A Star." Some people have summarily dismissed Mr. Stevens as being all washed up, but I feel that Izitso warrants a "The Cat ain't no dog" A.

—Ross Nerenberg

HEART
Little Queen
(Portrait)

Freed from the strings of Mushroom Records, Heart's follow-up to their smash debut, Dreamboat Annie, finds Ann and Nancy Wilson on target with their group once again. Mixing hard rockers ("Barracuda," "Kick It Out" and the title track) with acoustic pieces ("Treat Me Well," "Cry To Me" and the mandolin-driven "Dream Of The Archer"), Little Queen is, if not quite as dynamic, certainly more cohesive a record than was the Wilsons' debut. Throughout both side of Little Queen, guitarists Roger Fisher and Howard Lesse shine with some splendid playing, particularly on the aforementioned rockers. Heart is obviously a group with an enormous future ahead of it. Just a step or two behind Fleetwood Mac, this disc scores with a "Heart's got soul" A-.

—Ross Nerenberg

THE OUTLAWS
Hurry Sundown
(Arista)

Hurry Sundown is The Outlaws' fourth album and the quintet's delivery of hard-driving country rock is typical of what we've come to expect of these Floridians. Fluidly flowing, Hurry Sundown's nine tunes are dominated by the electric presence of three guitarists (Hughie Thomasson, Henry Paul and Billy Jones) who work well together. Composing credits are distributed among all five band members, but Jones has written the album's two best songs, "Holiday" and "Night Wines." The latter is a particular thing of melodic beauty as it nostalgically laments the inevitable and unavoidable passage of time. Hurry Sundown is at times too crisp and concise, probably due to the production and engineering of Bill Szymczyk, who handles the same chores for The Eagles, among others. I'd like to hear something along the lines of another "Green Grass And High Tides," but Szymczyk has kept perhaps a bit too much control over the recording. Still, this is a disc which is mostly enjoyable and deserving of a "these Outlaws have nothing to fear." B.

—Ross Nerenberg

HARRY CHAPIN
Dance Band On The Titanic
(Elektra)

Harry Chapin is still weaving stories telling of life's losers and down-and-outers. His latest two record set brings us more of the same with some instant classics here and some throwaway fillers there. At times the resulting songs are brilliantly and perfectly precise, while at other times they fall far short into moments of redundant romantic ramblings. However, it is this very facet of unevenness which makes listening to the man so rewarding, for, although his failures are disturbingly obvious, they always contain the heartfelt lyrics which have become the central focus of Harry's storytelling style. Harry Chapin is a man who has entirely devoted his life to his music and prolifically works his amps off for his audiences. Highlights of Dance Band include, in addition to the title track, efforts such as "Bluesman," a humorous ditty about a college kid trying to learn the blues from an old master, the wistful "Country Dreams," and the extraordinary grand finale, "There Only Was One Choice," a fourteen minute masterpiece. All in all, Dance Band On The Titanic merits a "no sinking ship here" A-.

—Ross Nerenberg

STATUS QUO
"Live"
(Capitol)

Status Quo are about as subtle as a porcupine in a balloon factory. They play heavy metal rock and are generally accepted as the rock & roll kings of Europe. However, America knows them only as an obscure band which scored a big hit in the psychedelic sixties with the classic "Pictures Of Matchstick Men." As is the case with so many hard rock outfits, their music is highly derivative (a synonym for unoriginal) and therefore tends to be overly repetitious at times. "Live" brings us four sides of the unabashingly bashing quartet as recorded during a three night stint at the enthusiastically pro-Quo Apollo Theatre in Glasgow. If you like loud noise, then this is the album for you. If not, avoid it at all costs; Status Quo are virtually as ear-shattering as Ted Nugent. This release rates a "these guys should realize that they're too old to be punk rocking." C.

—Ross Nerenberg

ERIC CARMEN
Boats Against the Current
(Arista)

This, Eric Carmen's long-awaited second solo album, is a big disappointment to fans of his earlier work as leader of the Raspberries and on his own. There are only two real rock'n'roll songs here, and both are missing something in the hook department.

The rest of the album consists of long semiclassical pieces like Carmen's big hit, "All By Myself". While that song was fine as a change-of-pace from the more standard pop of Eric Carmen, too much is too much, despite the generally good quality of the individual tunes. And the words are as pretentious as any this side of Jackson Browne, quite a letdown coming from someone who used to write lyrics that one could identify with as strongly as anybody's.

If you can't get enough of., say, Elton John's weepier numbers, then Boats Against the Current is for you. But we Beatle and Beach Boy fanatics who found sustenance in Carmen's extensions of their traditions must now turn to his disciples, such as Pezband, the Pop, and the Rubinoos, and hope that Eric will get off his Barry Manilow-with-delusions-of-grandeur rip and start being fun again.

Weekend in the Woods

There will be some exciting music making this weekend as the Pines Theatre Festival wraps up their first season. On Friday, Sept. 9 the P.T.F. will present Pam Bricker in a solo performance at 7:30 p.m. followed by Ellen McIlwaine at 9:00 p.m. On Saturday, Sept. 10 the Archie Shepp Quartet will take the stage featuring highly regarded tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp, Charley Persip on drums, Cameron Brown on bass and Ron Burton on piano. The Saturday concert will be at 9:00 p.m.

Both concerts are outside at Look Park's Pines Theater on Rt. 9 in Northampton which can accommodate up to 3000 people. Tickets are $3.00 and available only at the door. Management advises the public to bring chairs and blankets. For additional information call 584-2223.

Ellen McIlwaine

On September 9, the Pines Theater Festival, in cooperation with Theatrix, will present two extraordinary women in concert under the stars. Headlining the concert will be Ellen McIlwaine, a solo performer whose reputation acquired national attention when she was on tour last year with Laura Nyro.

Ms. McIlwaine, born in Nashville, (growing up in Japan) has developed a growing audience with her loosely defined country blues—rock style which has been compared by the San Francisco Examiner to that of Odetta, John Fahey, Bonnie Raitt and Woody Guthrie.

A sensational guitarist, she performs using pedals, buttons, tape delays, bottleneck and a brilliant sense of pacing and involvement with the audience.

Opening the show will be Pam Bricker in a rare solo performance. Her following, too, has grown rapidly in the past year's work with The Bricker Band.

Archie Shepp

E. Cohen photo

In case the hand of the media has not been able to reach you in this busy week, here is one more hand, grabbing you, shaking you and pointing you towards Northampton, where tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp and his quartet will perform this Saturday at 9 p.m. "under the stars" at Look Park's Pines Theater.

Backed by Charli Persip on drums, Cameron Brown on bass, and Ron Burton on piano, Shepp will provide his local fans with a rare treat.

Although he lives in Amherst and teaches in the UMass Afro-American department, his public appearances in the area have not been nearly as frequent as I — for one — would like.

Shepp has, instead, performed in Europe, where people seem to be more appreciative of his sometime shrieking, often disharmonic, but always melodic sound.

If you are familiar with Shepp's music, you need no description of it — we will see you there Saturday. If you have not yet experienced Shepp, you will have to believe that no further description, comparison or labeling of his music is adequate.

He has played with many of the greats of Black Classical music, including Cecil Taylor and John Coltrane in the 60's. In fact, despite his lack of a broad popular audience — and perhaps because of it — he too is one of the greats.

Julius Lester

James Tate

Lester, Tate To Kickoff Jones Fall Poetry Series

Julius Lester and James Tate will open The Jones Library's Fall Poetry Series with a reading on Saturday afternoon, September 10th, at 3 p.m. Their appearance will see the juxtaposition of two distinct cultural and literary traditions in a reading that is the first of eight to be presented on alternate Saturdays this Fall.

Julius Lester, born in St. Louis, MO., the son of a methodist minister, emerged from folksinging workshops with the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee as a major spokesman for radical black politics. As a professional musician and singer, he recorded with Vanguard records, directed the Newport Folk Festival (1966-68), and collaborated with Pete Seeger on The 12-String Guitar as Played by Leadbelly (1965). He has recorded original and Afro-American songs, taught black history at the New School for Social Research in New York City, and is currently a professor in Afro-American literature at the University of Massachusetts.

His first book, Look Out Whitey, Black Power's Gon' Get Your Mama (Dial, 1968), has been followed by a series of writings ranging from black culture and history to folklore and poetry. His latest work is All is Well (Morrow, 1976), an autobiography.

James Tate is also a Professor at the University of Massachusetts. He recently returned to Amherst from a Guggenheim fellowship in Spain. Tate was a winner of the Yale Series of Younger Poets Award, a visiting lecturer at the University of California at Berkeley and at Columbia, a poet in residence at Emerson College, and a recipient of the National Institute of Arts and Letters Award for Poetry. His first book of poems, The Lost Pilot, was published by Yale University Press in 1967 and his poetry has appeared in The Paris Review, Transatlantic Review, The New Yorker, The New York Times, and The Massachusetts Review. His sixth and most recent book, Viper Jazz, (1976), was published by Wesleyan University Press.

Other poets scheduled to read in coming weeks include Hal Stowell, Barry Goldensohn, Leo Conellan, Margaret Robison, Wang Hui-Ming, Frederic Will, Constance Carrier, Chase Twichell, Rosellan Brown and Leon Barron. Richard Wilbur will bring the Fall Series to a close with a reading on December 3rd.

All the readings are free and will be held in the Library's Burnett Gallery. They are funded in part by a grant from the Massachusetts Council for the Arts and Humanities, and by contributions from the public and the Friends of The Jones Library.

King

felt as if the past few weeks had been a life-time; the cat was never a stranger from the outside. And as he ascended past the second floor, King's heart pounded, and he sensed it was very soon his cat would be in labor. He wanted to be with her.

He threw open the door to his room. A light breeze lifted the shade at the window, but it was deathly hot. The room was unoccupied.

"Hey, there, lass!" King searched the room and bathroom, throwing down his bag. "Hey there. Where are ya!" He raced around the room, blindly, tossing over the table, the mattress, the waste basket. The cat was not there.

"No, no, no, no, oh . . .No! Can't be!" He darted to the open window. "Not again!"

He searched the roof, the sun flaring in his hot face, the cars below noisely passing. He looked across the street and his eyes found Lottie who stared back at him. Her stare penetrated the sun's glare and there was no city street noise any longer; to King, it had been filtered out. He did not see the table where she sat, the terrace, the building — nothing — only two eyes, two piercing eyes.

"You . . .!" King crashed away from the window, threw open his door, scrambling down the stairs, savagely. He descended, pounding on each step, snorting with fury. Little Will and Gloria opened their door a crack as he passed.

He sent the front door into the bedroom window of the first floor and it crashed. Lottie, across the street, came to her feet, seeing, but not hearing.

The world seemed gone as King stomped down the porch steps. He spat with anger, flushing scarlet. His eyes aimed at Lottie.

A moment from the curb, he was met by the traffic, and forced to the street; the tires grinding at his body; the pavement ripping at his flesh. King died, bleeding.

Within a minute, all the people from "Vinnie's" were grouped at the curb. Traffic was stopped all along Main Street; sirens were heard.

Everyone — Lottie, Vinnie, Nancy, Tony, Howard, the gang — stood pale and silent. Standing open-mouthed at the opposite curb, were Little Will and Gloria. People stood in the doorways of cars, watching and wiping their foreheads of sweat.

A police ambulance came through the clogged traffic. As newsmen snapped pictures, the attendants grabbed King and put him on a stretcher. Two policemen took notes and reporters asked questions in the crowd. The ambulance screamed away.

"Did you know him?" the reporter asked Tony.

"He was King. Worked here. Drank too much, and that's why he's dead," Tony said.

"O.K. who was he?" the policeman asked Little Will.

"Hurly. Edward Hurly. He lived here on the third floor," he answered, looking dismayed, and pulling up his pants.

"Anybody see what happened?" the officer asked. The sun beat down and long tears of blood trickled to the curb on both sides of the street.

"He was drunk. Ran out into the traffic. Just got hit — I'm afraid," Little Will said. He looked at Lottie talking to the policeman across the street; she shook her head, wide-eyed.

"I'm gonna question the truck driver. Thank you," the officer told Little Will. He and Gloria walked across the street and the traffic began moving again.

At the other curb, Nancy dried her eyes on her apron and Tony had his arm on her shoulder. Lottie and Vinnie talked to an officer and pointed to the third floor open window across the street. Howard, the gang, kids on bicycles, and everyone else looked through the sun to the spot.

Then everyone who was in the diner before, Gloria, and Little Will, and a few customers returned to "Vinnie's," and looked out the windows to the street. Traffic moved along normally.

In the spotted shade, detached and unharmed, the mother observed the whirling world before her with cloudy, disinterested eyes. She lay protected; her untouched litter sleeping at her moist stomach, behind the wooden beams of the front porch.

The mother licked her mouth, and softly gazed upon the life by her side. The earth-brown bed where she lay was cool, natural, comfortable. The cat closed her eyes upon the world and fell rhythmically asleep with her young.

105 without rooms

'Sardine City' continues

By LAWRENCE UCHMANOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The housing problem at the University, which at its height had 400 freshman and transfer students without rooms, is still unresolved going into the second weekend of the semester.

There were 105 students still living in the Campus Center Hotel yesterday, and administrators last night still did not know when they would be given permanent room assignments.

In an effort to clear the hotel of displaced students before the weekend, low-rise Southwest dorm lounges are being turned into makeshift student bedrooms. "We are using the small floor lounges so the bigger lounges will still be available for student use," said John Findley, management coordinator for Southwest.

Seventy-five students are scheduled to stay in Southwest while the Orchard Hill — Central Area should absorb the remaining 30, according to Robert Campbell, director of Residential Resource Management. "After that, (dormitory) housing at the University will be closed until more people leave the residence hall system for one reason or another," he said.

Last weekend, the Housing Office reaccepted junior exemption applications for consideration. Only seniors are currently automatically exempted from on-campus living.

"We have been making assignments all afternoon," William F. Field, dean of students, said yesterday. He said he hoped there would be only 25 to 30 students without rooms by noon today.

Field denied that the primary reason for hastening students out of the Campus Center Hotel was to make room for a tax assessor's conference this weekend. "Students would have priority over any conference," he said, "although many students may not have an opportunity to remove their things from the hotel until after the conference."

Most of the students without permanent rooms are males. "We have 130 female vacancies, but no females waiting for rooms," Field said.

A solution to this, said Southwest's John Findley, is to break down existing all-female floors. "But," he added, "this could cause problems, as many students are already settled in."

Dormitory residents will not be asked to triple up, Field said, although they could form triples if they wanted to. He said each person in a triple would be eligible to receive a rebate of one-third of their board fees.

"Our goal is not just to empty the Campus Center Hotel," he said. "We'd like to get students identified with a dorm as soon as possible. They feel a little isolated over there."

"If we don't get all of the people out of the hotel by this weekend, I suspect that we may lose some of our new freshman altogether," he said.

Cycling 'fits' UMass senior

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Turn, Turn, turn. To everything there is a purpose.

So entitled is a 25,000 mile cycling program begun 37 months ago by UMass senior Leo Zimany.

A physical education major, Zimany has for the past three years been cycling various 60 to 65 mile-long circuits throughout the Massachusetts-Connecticut area. He says the project is an attempt to convince people to have a respect for the internal mechanisms of their bodies.

"There is not an awareness of what goes on internally," said Zimany in an interview Wednesday. "People are literally destroying their bodies."

A diabetic, Zimany cites his personal experience with this disease as partially motivating him to undertake such a program. In coping with diabetes, he has been exposed to many people -"fighting for every breath of air."

"If a diabetic is capable of riding 25,000 miles, I hope other people will realize their potential," said Zimany.

He said that it was a 365-days-a-year program. The months of April through August were strictly cycling months 40 to 45 hours a week. Before that, he underwent a vigorous training program of racquetball, weightlifting and stretching.

"It was not a question of just jumping on a bike and starting to ride," said Zimany. "The physical preparation was phenomenal."

Zimany's financial costs, including hospitalization fees, medication costs, and various other traveling expenses, came to $20,000, he said. The cost includes a $10,000 financial loss for not working. Zimany had a variety of national sponsors.

"It all pays off though," said Zimany. "I come out feeling like a ball game on a sunny day."

Monday, Sept. 12, marks Zimany's last day of cycling. He will be completing a 37-month, 25,000-mile program.

Zimany's reward?

"If I can get one person to revamp his lifestyle, and one person to respect his internal body mechanisms, it will be worth the effort, time and the $20,000."

Amin in coma after surgery

NAIROBI, Kenya [AP] — Idi Amin, self-proclaimed president-for-life of Uganda, was reported "in a coma" in a Kampala hospital Thursday after undergoing surgery for an undisclosed ailment.

"We believe he'll pull out of it," said Robert Astles, British-born confidant to the 51-year-old military strong man. But another aide said later: "The president is in sort of a coma. It is serious."

Astles rushed to the former boxing champion's bedside after learning that something was amiss following the operation by a Soviet physician in Mugala Hospital where Amin, in power since 1971, has received medical treatment before.

"We don't exactly know what's wrong. But he's in a coma," Astless said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from Kampala. "We believe he'll pull out of it. I'm going over to the hospital right now to see what's happening."

Astles, a white Ugandan citizen who is married to the country's black minister of culture, said he did not know why Amin needed surgery. Nor could he say whether the comatose state was a normal after-effect of anesthesia, or whether it was induced by postoperative complications.

Earlier in the day, Ugandan radio announced that Amin had undergone surgery Wednesday by Dr. Feodor Senkof. Reports received in Washington listed the name as Petrov Senko.

The broadcast said Amin expressed full confidence in the Soviet doctor before entering the hospital, praising him for stopping an epidemic recently at a girl's school in Namagunga.

The announcement said Amin was accompanied to the hospital Wednesday by Soviet Ambassador Yevegniy Musiyko. Reports from Washington said the two men discussed expanding medical cooperation between Uganda and the U.S.S.R. before Amin went into surgery.

In October 1972, the 240-pound, 6-foot-4 field marshal was admitted to Mulago Hospital for the Uganda radio described as a "complete rest." He reportedly was sick with throat trouble.

Mulago Hospital is the same institution where Dora Bloch was taken on July 2, 1976, after she fell ill at Entebbe Airport when an Air France jetliner was hijacked en route from Tel Aviv and diverted to Uganda by Palestinian extremists. Israeli commandos staged a celebrated raid to free the passengers but Mrs. Bloch was never seen again.

Pierpont stages sit-in

By RUTH McGORTY
Collegian Staff

Pierpont residents gathered yesterday to protest a University mistake.

Hearing of the decision to place 75 students now living in the Campus Center Hotel into the low rise Southwest dorms, infuriated residents of Pierpont assembled in their lounges to protest the incoming students.

"It's not the students we have grievances against, it's the University policy of over-enrolling students in the dorms and not being able to compensate. They've had this problem over the past few years," said Sherri Schneider, a Pierpont resident.

Floor counselor, Dana Leavitt added, "We pay for the use of our lounge. They can't take it away. The University made a mistake and now they're taking it out on us."

Many students spent the afternoon sitting in the Pierpont lounges threatening to remain even if the new residents came. They said, they were planning to spend the night in case any students tried to move in Friday morning.

A release from the Students For A Democratic Society called the situation an "infringement on our personal freedom." It continued, " ... Students living in Southwest pay exorbitant rates for minimal living space ... Now we must be crowded together like cattle due to the blunderings of the Administration. But, who pays for this blunder? You guessed it! The students do. It is your Administration that is doing this to you. They are making you pay for their mistakes."

John Sullivan, a spokesperson for Pierpont dormitory said last night the elevator was broken by students in an effort to prevent Physical Plant personel from placing furniture in Pierpont lounges.

"We feel that this has gone on for long enough. We should not have to pay for the administration's mistakes," Sullivan said.

Pierpont residents last night said they would make up at 7 a.m. this morning and occupy the lounge, locking arms to halt any attempt by other students to move in.

Supreme Court order - build gym

KENT, Ohio [UPI] — U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Brennan Thursday overturned a ban on construction of a gymnasium at Kent State University near the site where four students were killed. Kent State President Brage Golding said it was time for opponents of the gym to "yield gracefully" to its construction.

Brennan lifted the temporary ban he had imposed Tuesday after listening to arguments by attorneys for the university who said the state could lose from $2 million to $2.4 million if the construction is halted.

University officials, the Ohio Board of Regents and the Bucky Arnes Corp., the prime contractor for the gymnasium, accused the May 4th Coalition, the main opponents of the facility, of improperly using the courts to frustrate a lawful state project.

The coalition wants the site where National Guard troops shot and killed the students during an anti-war demonstration on May 4, 1970, preserved as a national shrine.

"I never did think this case was a constitutional issue," Golding told UPI. Golding also said he hoped no violence would result from the decision.

Project Self plans research, change

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Discussion among staff members at Everywoman's Center is now going on to determine the future of the Project Self program.

The Educational Alternatives Program at Everywoman's Center, located in 506 Goodell, offers the series of workshops by, for, and about women.

"We'd like to get a research developer to take a look at the whole program, evaluate it, and make suggestions," said Linda Spataro, one of the coordinators of Project Self.

"There probably won't be a PROJECT SELF series in its present form next spring. There may be a smaller modified version," said Spataro. "But everything is still being discussed."

Problems she cited included an overload of paperwork, work overload for the coordinators, and financial problems.

PROJECT SELF stands for Support, Education, Learning, and Friendship.

"During the past several hundred years, hundreds of women in the western Massachusetts area have been working together in various ways to open up new possibilities for all women," reads a PROJECT SELF pamphlet.

"We have been seeking to understand how and why being born female has limited our lives, and to find ways to break through those limits...

"PROJECT SELF rests firmly on the assumption that the more we learn and share with one another, the more we know about ourselves, about our past and present, and the more we encourage one another to stretch into the future, the stronger human beings we will be," the pamphlet continues.

Most of the workshops run for eight weeks and cost $25. This semester, for the first time, there will also be three workshops offered for four weeks at $12.50.

"This is in the hope that women will continue to meet on their own after the official workshop ends," said Spataro. "It's a way of bringing women together around a common concern."

There are 14 new workshop facilitators this semester, in addition to several new workshops. "Health, Education and Issues for Third World Women", and "Ethnic Roots: Our Grandmothers and Ourselves" are two new workshops.

"That's something every woman can relate to because everyone has ethnic roots. This will deal with things like the emphasis on food in the Italian culture....," said Spataro.

Also offered will be old favorites like "Basic Carpentry," "Women's Practical Self-Defense," and "The Lesbian Experience".

One Women's Studies credit is available for some workshops. Registration will be on a first come, first serve basis. The registration deadline is Sept. 16, and late registers must paY a $2 fee.

For more information call Everywoman's Center at 545-0883, or drop by at 506 Goodell.

Drive-in theatre driven out

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

HADLEY — The sign painters finished their work last Saturday afternoon. They painted their message in dark, chunky block letters: "THIS SCREEN FOR SALE"

In the wet lowlands overlooking the Mountain Farms Mall on Rte. 9 stands the remains of the old Hadley Drive-In. Last year, after 25 years of business, its gates clanged shut for the last time. Augie, former owner of the Drive-In, runs a newspaper and tobacco shop in Amherst Center these days.

In 1952 Augie opened his drive-in with the double feature "Scaramouche" and "Love is better than ever". Recalls Augie: "The place was mobbed. Why we even had to turn people away from the gate, it was that crowded. Those were the best years, the Fifties were. After that ... " his voice trails off.

Things started to slack off a bit after a few years, "It got so that the whole drive-in business got to be one bidding war: why we were spending 75, 80, 90 per cent on the pictures alone. All the real money was in concessions, you know," explains Augie.

He says the opening of two cinemas in the new mall didn't help business much either.

About "10, 12, 15 years ago" he scrapped the old screen. In its place was erected a $30,000 screen that now stands. Augie says he has no idea how much it is worth today. "She must have 15, maybe 20 tons of good scrap steel left in her," says Augie, "probably closer to 20. That'd be worth something to somebody, I'd say."

What do you do with a 60'x40' drive-in movie screen in a town like Hadley?

Augie figures the five towers which comprise the screen could be taken down with an acetylyne torch and some scaffolding.

Should anyone get the notion to leave the screen intact on its present site and use it for advertising, there may be hitches.

Hadley town officials won't allow it.

So far, Augie hasn't had any offers for the screen. "I'll wait 'til December and see what kind of offers I get. If I don't sell it by then, I guess she'll just come down, I don't know. We'll see." He does not seem too disturbed. "The last picture? Let's see ... the last picture ... You know what? I don't even remember."

Kent State van funded

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate has appropriated $500 to pay for a van to carry students to Kent State University in Ohio to demonstrate proposed construction of a gymnasium on the site of the May 4, 1970 murder of four students during an anti-war demonstration.

The van will be leaving midnight Friday, reaching Kent State in time for a special program Saturday night and rally on Sunday. Transportation is being handled by the Revolutionary Student Brigade. They can be reached either at their office on the balcony of the Student Union (4th floor) or at their table in the Campus Center or Student Union.

This weekend's rally does not include any plans to "go under the fence to occupy the proposed site, but one of the purposes of Sunday's rally is to build support for a Seabrook-style occupation on September 24th, according to a group known as the May 4th Coalition.

Approximately 20 students have signed up to go in the van and in private vehicles if necessary. With the presence of Kent State Students, and students from campuses across the country and non-student sympathizers, there will be at least 1000 people at the rally.

Violence is unlikely to occur, as the goal of the May 4th Coalition is to enlist the support and sympathy of as many people possible. It is the opinion of the coalition that unprovoked violence makes more enemies than friends.

Grad employes union votes to rebuild stewards council

By LIZ VERGOZ
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Employees Union last hight decided to rebuild the stewards council this year.

Members of the GSEU at last night's meeting in the Campus Center also discussed their history and how it has effected their present situation.

By December the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board in Boston may be deciding if the GSEU will become a recognized union.

GSEU co-chairperson Brad Klein told the 40 other graduate students present at the meeting that the GSEU plans to reach out to every academic department on campus and work for all the graduate students.

Klein said the stewards council will eliminate the possibility of competition within particular departments this year.

GSEU organizing chairperson Monte Pearson said the GSEU will provide democracy through the stewards council.

Pearson said the GSEU wants to create friendships with graduate students from different departments on campus.

Pearson recalled the Graduate Student Employees Union Committee was formed in 1975 during the budget crunch at UMass.

In 1975 UMass began to suffer limited budget allocations from the state. In the last three academic years student enrollment in many of the schools on campus was high while the University was unable to hire enough faculty to meet the demand.

Graduate student employment was also affected during this budgetary crisis.

Pearson said the graduate students were considered "unessential" and their jobs were cut back by 34 per cent in 1975.

UMass graduate students are hired as teaching associates (to's) teaching assistants (ta's) and research assistants (ra's).

Another GSEU member said she is afraid that graduate students hired for the unusually large freshmen class this fall will be cut out of next year's program.

This semester 500 additional freshmen were enrolled at UMass, creating the need for more instructors. Very few departments were able to hire new faculty because the annual budget was not finalized in time for the faculty recruiting reason, which is in the spring.

Some departments that received additional funds from the budget passed in July, used the money to hire graduate students.

Another problem the GSEU discussed last night was the inequality in the pay structure for graduate student employees.

One member said for the same amount of work graduate students can receive anywhere from $400 to $2,000.

He continued, saying that graduate students, never know what employment they will receive or even if it will be in their department.

The GSEU said that it hopes to create recognition, legal assistance and a place to go with grievances.

Program Council sets Woody Shaw band and George Benson

By GAYLE SOPER
Collegian Staff

George Benson and the Woody Shaw jazz sextet highlight this year's Union Program Council calendar.

The council's first concert will feature four bands at the University Food Services barbeque Sept. 22. Appearing will be one name brand and three local bands, as yet unnamed, according to council chairperson Bonnie Levitan.

Tickets for the Benson concert are priced at $5 for students and $6.50 for non-students. The concert will be Oct. 13 in Curry Hicks Cage.

The Woody Shaw jazz sextet will appear Nov. 4 in the Student Union Ballroom, and on Nov. 19, the Bobby Hutchinson quartet will entertain.

At a recruitment meeting last night, Arlene Greto, publicity director, said tickets for all council programs will be sold in advance at the Student Senate Lecture Service on the main floor of the Student Union. Other locations are: Record Town in Hadley's Mountain Farms Mall, Faces of Earth in Amherst, and Ticketron.

Council meetings are open to all students, and anyone is eligible to become a member after attending three meetings. Members are entitled to vote for artists who may appear at concerts during the semester.

A meeting will be held Thursday, Sept. 16, at 7 p.m. in 415A Student Union for all students interested in working on security, stage crew or publicity.

5 College an alternative

By MARTHA KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Most college students are aware of the Five College Interchange program around Amherst, but few ever take advantage of it. Enrollment in the program last year totaled 6,135 students — only one fifth the number of college students in the area. Not a big turnout when one considers the benefits of this program.

Benefits like the great accessability of courses and distinguished instructors at no extra charge, free busing, the variety of cultural events and the open library policy extended to students from each college. These opportunities presented by the Five College program enhance every students learning experience.

Full time undergraduate students at any of the five colleges, UMass, Amherst, Smith, Hampshire, and Mt. Holyoke may take courses after their first semester at any of the other four colleges.

College instructors as well as students take part in this interchange. E. Jefferson Murphy, five-college coordinator, explained that if there is a big turnout for a particular course an instructor might teach on two or more different campuses during a semester, in an effort to thin out crowded buses.

Informal cooperative ties among Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Smith and UMass. have existed for over a century. The original idea for establishing Hampshire College in 1965 came from the other four Valley institutions.

Astronomy, Dance, and Black Studies are the most developed departments in the program, according to Murphy. Last year, nearly 300 courses and workshops were offered by the colleges, including 15 three-credit courses through UMass' Continuing Education Program.

On most weekends students can choose among several movies, a play or two, a variety of sports contests, and art exhibits and concerts. Lectures, films and concerts are popular on weeknights. The monthly five college calendar, distributed at each institution, lists the events on each campus.

The depth and variety of special academic programs available to five college students are hard to match. A complete list of course and any other information is offered in CASIAC in Machmer Hall.

Anti-abortion bill steps up

BOSTON [AP] — A bill to ban the use of public money for abortions in Massachusetts has moved another step closer to a showdown in the state Senate.

Without any debate, the state House of Representatives gave final approval to the measure Thursday on a 145-63 roll call vote. The measure now goes to the Senate for a similar enactment before landing on the desk of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who has promised to veto it.

On Wednesday the Senate gave the bill an anitial round of approval on a 23-15 roll call.

The latest vote in the House indicated that anti-abortion forces continue to command enough strength in that chamber to override a veto by Dukakis. However, in the Senate tally, the anti-abortionists were three votes shy of the two-thirds margin they would need to get their bill by the governor.

UN Secretary - General Kurt Waldheim

Waldheim pessimistic in annual UN report

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [AP] — Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, in his annual report on the state of the world, predicted yesterday that conditions in 1978 will be "serious and unsettled."

Waldheim said there had been virtually no progress in the quest for peace in the Middle East, southern Africa and Cyprus and on such issues as disarmament, human rights, East-West relations and a new world economic order.

"The stakes are very high and the dangers of failure are increasingly ominous," he said. "I earnestly hope that the great efforts being made through the United Nations and elsewhere to solve these basic problems will begin to bear fruit before the end of the year."

Waldheim also warned against complacency and rigidity in the world organization and appealed to all governments to help strengthen the "position and authority" of the Security Council by respecting its decisions.

The secretary-general made these points in the 25-page report which will be submitted to the 32nd session of the General Assembly opening Sept. 20:

Southern African — The last stages of decolonization in Africa are proving to be the most difficult and are fraught with "great and increasing dangers." In the absence of major steps forward, the situation can give rise to violent reactions which may in turn rapidly and unexpectedly threaten world peace and stability.

News in Brief

Beame running 3rd in New York primary

NEW YORK [UPI] — Secretary of State Mario Cuomo and Rep. Edward Koch took slight leads over incumbent Abraham Beame and former congresswoman Bella Abzug in yesterday's tight Democratic mayoral primary election.

In the Republican mayoral primary, state Sen. Roy Goodman easily defeated radio personality Barry Farber. However, Farber will be on the November general election ballot as the Conservative party nominee.

The primary was the first election test for Beame, seeking his second four-year term, since the city was rescued from near bankruptcy.

It appeared none of the seven Democratic candidates would win the necessary 40 per cent of the vote to avert a special runoff election between the top two finishers to pick the party entry in November's general election.

With 1,999 of 4,763 election districts reporting, Cuomo had 80,241 or 22 per cent; Koch had 73,170 or 20 per cent; Beame had 69, 463 or 19 per cent and Abzug had 57,256 or 16 per cent.

Solar action office to open in Boston

BOSTON [Christian Science Monitor] — A Solar Action Office, the first state office on the East Coast designed exclusively to encourage development of the solar energy industry, was announced by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

A $78,750 federal grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development will pay for the office, which will be part of the Consumer Affairs Secretariat and will be headed by William Osborn, former general counsel for the Energy Facilities Siting Council.

Proclaiming September "Solar Energy Month," the Governor also announced Massachusetts will be the first state in the nation to receive federal funds for a series of conferences across the state to acquaint the public with all aspects of solar energy. The first will be held later this month in Boston.

Lance resignation reported by Herald

BOSTON [UPI] — The U.S. Senate Governmental Affairs Committee opened hearings Thursday on Bert Lance's banking career amid unconfirmed reports the federal budget director would resign next week following his testimony.

The Boston Herald American yesterday attributed the information to unidentified sources close to Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., chairman of the committee.

Lance is scheduled to appear before the panel in a nationally televised session next week.

The newspaper quoted the sources as saying the embattled Georgian wanted to answer allegations against him and might wait until the second or third day of his testimony to announce his resignation.

Ribicoff, one of Lance's earliest supporters, met Monday with President Carter to discuss what he called new allegations against the Office of Management and Budget director.

Also in attendance at the Oval Office session was Illinois Sen. Charles Percy, the ranking Republican on the Governmental Affairs Committee.

Committee backs minimum wage hike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Labor subcommittee unanimously approved legislation yesterday which would raise the minimum wage to $2.65 an hour next year and provide automatic increases in the future geared to prevailing pay in manufacturing.

A similiar bill is waiting House action and passage of an increase from the present $2.35 an hour appears certain before the end of the year.

The $2.65 is a compromise between President Carter, who originally asked Congress to increase the minimum wage to $2.50, and organized labor, which demanded $3 an hour.

Senate approves conversion to coal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday passed its first piece of President Carter's energy package, a bill to require large power plants to convert to coal fuel.

Before approving the bill on a 74-8 vote, the chamber voted to table a move to prohibit large oil and natural gas firms from buying up new coal and uranium deposits.

The coal utilization bill would prohibit all new electric power plants and some major fuelburning installations — with some exceptions — to burn natural gas or petroleum as their primary fuel.

It also would require existing utility and industrial power plants to switch from natural gas to coal by 1990, and those that were using oil before April 20 of this year would be prohibited from switching to natural gas.

More problems ahead for Panama treaties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rumblings in Congress indicated yesterday that there may be more problems in store for President Carter's Panama Canal treaties than the expected Senate ratification fight.

The sleeper issue is that the House may demand a piece of the action, too.

Although approval of treaties as such is the sole province of the Senate, the House does have a constitutional right to vote on issues that involve the disposal of valuable U.S. properties.

Some House members noted Thursday that millions, or perhaps even billions, of dollars worth of U.S.-owned facilities and equipment would be transferred to Panama under the new treaty. They made plain they resent Carter's attempt to settle that matter by treaty, with no House vote.

"The proposed treaties are among the most expensive in U.S. history," said Rep. John Murphy, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. "The United States is divesting itself through these agreements of a considerable amount of tangible assets in property....

"I think the common sense nature of the people of the United States will lead them to object strenuously to the disposal of billions of dollars of assets in Panama unless they are assured that every constitutional process will be adhered to in the effectuation of a new agreement."

Murphy said previous administrators have sought House approval for disposing of relatively minor U.S. properties in Panama, yet the present administration believes "the mammoth investment of the United States in the Canal Zone.... can be disposed of without any say whatsoever from the House of Representatives."

That view, he said, "is one that is dangerous for the Constitutional balance of powers." He urged the House to "assert its vital interest in the process by which the new canal treaties will be effectuated."

The same issue provided the only criticism levelled at Ambassadors Sol Linowitz and Ellsworth Bunker, the chief U.S. treaty negotiators, when they briefed the House International Relations Committee on the pact yesterday.

Rep. Larry Winn Jr., R-Kan., asked why the administration was deliberately "ignoring" the House's constitutional jurisdiction over disposal of American property.

State Department legal counsel Herbert Hansell said he did not feel "ignore" was the proper word but conceded the administration hopes to confine the treaty issues to Senate ratification alone.

"Disposition of U.S. property by treaty has been going on for some time," he said.

The attorney generals of four states — Iowa, Indiana, Idaho and Louisiana — tried to raise the same issue earlier this week when they asked the Supreme Court to temporarily forbid Carter to sign the pacts.

Four arrested for bogus bills

BOSTON [UPI] — The Suffolk County District Attorney's office said yesterday four men and one woman were arrested in connection in an alleged conspiracy to distribute more than $3 million in counterfeit $100 bills.

District Attorney Garrett H. Byrne and Gerald E. McDowell, head of the New England Organized Crime Strike Force said the arrests were based on indictments returned by the Suffolk County Grand Jury.

The indictments relate to the seizure last July 8 of $3.3 million in bogus $100 bills at the home of James B. Shaprio, 33, of 20 Willis St., Dedham.

Arrested were Shapiro; Joseph M. "Little Joe" Napolitano, 34, formerly of Melrose who was arrested in Portland, Maine; Orlando M. "Mikey" Napolitano, 61, arrested in Popano Beach, Fla.; Joseph V. Puzzangara, 49, of Revere and Ethel Rotondo, 39, of Dedham.

They are charged with violations of federal counterfeiting statutes which carry a maximum penalty of life imprisonment if convicted.

Byrne's office said the investigation is continuing and more arrests are expected.

Zero Mostel dies at age 62

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Actor Zero Mostel, famous for his starring Broadway role in Fiddler on the Roof, died last night at Thomas Jefferson Hospital at the age of 62.

A spokesman for the hospital said Mostel died of a cardiac disorder. He had been admitted to the hospital Saturday apparently suffering from a virus but was released the next day. He was readmitted Sunday complaining of feeling ill.

Mostel was in Philadelphia to star in the production, The Merchant, which was cancelled last week when he became ill.

Mostell had been a standup comedian and acted in films. He was to play the role of Shylock in The Merchant, Arnold Wesker's reworking of Shakespeare's source material for "The Merchant of Venice." The show as to open at the Forrest Theater in Philadelphia before going to Broadway.

He made audiences howl with his satirical political sketches, inventing hilarious characters such as Sen. Polltax T. Pellagra.

His satire was so devastating that he once was summoned before the House Unamerican Activities Committee. For a short time, he was even on entertainment blacklists.

His career suffered many mishaps. He was miscast in a number of his early films — films like "DuBarry Was a Lady" and "Mr. Belvedere Rings the Bell."

But he also soared to the heights with wonderful roles that electrified audiences. Most memorable was his portrayal in 1965 of Tevye in "Fiddler on the Roof", and his enactment in 1962 of the Nero-like hero of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum."

Perhaps his most remarkable achievement was his title role in 1960 in Eugene Ionesco's drama "Rhinoceros." He created the illusion of changing himself from a man into a rhinoceros with such realism that audiences gasped.

Critics praised him to the skies for his portrayal in 1958 of the befuddled Everyman in "Ulysses in Nighttown," derived from James Joyce's novel "Ulysses."

Zero was one of the inspired pantomime geniuses on American theater history. He shared with Groucho Marx the mysterious talent of being able to say more with a cocked eyebrow than other actors could say with a thousand words.

House agrees to bomber halt

WASHINGTON [UPI] — On a narrow three-vote margin, the House agreed yesterday wiih President Carter and the Senate to halt production of the B1 bomber.

The 202-199 vote to delete $1.4 billion for the B1 from a defense money bill was the final official decision to halt production of the highly sophisticated plane that was to replace the 25-year-old B52 bomber.

The action came on a $110 billion compromise appropriations bill worked out by House and Senate conferees. The overall measure passed on a 361-36 vote and was sent to the Senate for final congressional action.

The B1 vote, approving an amendment by Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., to delete the funds, was a major reversal of House sentiment that was expressed in a 243-178 vote on June 28 which killed a similar Addabbo amendment.

Then Carter, on June 30, officially ordered a halt in production of the B1 which had been under planning and development stages for seven years at a cost of some $3 billion and was ready to go into production. The $1.4 billion would have provided for five of the new bombers.

The Senate subsequently voted 59 to 36 to support Carter's order but House and Senate conferees could not reach agreement on the bomber and left the final decision to the House.

Government plans crackdown on unpaid education loans

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The government is turning to the "specific talents" of a private collection agency to track down ex-college students who have defaulted on $413.6 million in federally guaranteed loans, the Office of Education said yesterday.

"We cannot permit students simply to walk away from their debts," said Leo Kornfeld, deputy commissioner for student financial assistance.

To do so, he said, would "do a grave injustice to the American public who provided them with an opportunity for education" and would create "an exceedingly poor example for the rest of American youth."

The collector who eventually wins the government contract to seek out former students will have an incentive to go after the longer outstanding debts first.

The Office of Education will pay the firm a percentage of payments collected, the largest amounts to be paid on defaults at least five years old and the smallest on debts less than two years old.

An estimated $413.6 million is in default under the Federal Insured Student Loan Program, or about a 12.3 per cent default rate since the program began a decade ago.

Since then, the government has guaranteed $4.6 billion in student loans averaging about $1,000. However, tracking the loans is complicated because a single student may have had more than one loan.

The Office of Education contracted in 1975 with a computer company to put in a multimillion dollar tracking system to help solve some of the problems.

In 1976, Congress for the first time authorized the federal government to use private collection agencies.

A spokeswoman for the education office said a private agency will be used, besides 106 Office of Education employes working nationwide to collect debts, because "the collection business requires a very specific talent, a kind of experience and talent you don't find outside the collection business."

"Of course, the private collectors will not harass students," she said.

Only the collector's salaried workers will be permitted to make the collections, a restriction apparently aimed at avoiding strong arm tactics sometimes associated with collection firms working on commissions.

Heavy drinking doubles risk of abnormal babies

BOSTON [UPI] — Persistent consumption of alcohol by women during pregnancy doubles their chances of bearing abnormal or defective babies, the New England Journal of Medicine reported yesterday.

However, heavy drinkers who lower their alcoholic intake during pregnancy probably reduce their odds of bearing an abnormal infant, a team of Boston area medical researchers discovered.

The survey of 600 pregnant women at Boston City Hospital defined a heavy drinker as consuming the equivalent of at least two or three drinks daily.

Dr. Eileen M. Ouellette, a Harvard Medical School professor who directed the study, said 71 per cent of babies born to heavy drinkers were abnormal at birth.

She said that figure compared to 36 per cent of babies born to moderate drinkers and 35 per cent of those born to teetotalers.

"It does appear clear that there is a definitively increased risk to offspring of women who drink heavily during pregnancy," the researchers concluded.

The researchers found infants of heavy drinkers did not suckle well. They were also more jittery and had smaller brains and heads and poorer muscle tone than normal.

Liddy says he'd do it all over again

WASHINGTON [AP] — G. Gordon Liddy, in his first interview since leaving prison, said yesterday that if a president asked him to repeat the work he performed in the Watergate break-in, he would answer: "Yes, thy will be done."

Liddy said it dramatically, in Latin: "Fiat voluntas tua."

Thinner by 30 pounds than when he first went into prison for burglary, wiretapping and conspiracy in January 1973, Liddy asked a small group of reporters to meet with him on his first full day of freedom.

Liddy was released Wednesday from the federal prison in Danbury, Conn., after serving more than 52 months for his role in the Watergate scandal.

His meeting yesterday turned into a full-size news conference with an unusual touch. A man threw an applie pie into Liddy's face as he entered the room.

A reporter asked Liddy: "If the president of the United States asked you to do that kind of work again, what would you say?"

"Yes." There was no hesitation. "When the prince approaches his lieutenant, the proper response of the lieutenant to the prince is 'Fiat voluntas tua."

Was there any indication that Richard Nixon wanted Watergate done.

"I have no comment," said Liddy.

Q. Any remorse for Watergate?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Just no.

Q. Can you tell us why you went into Watergate?

A. I can, but I won't.

Q. Can you tell us what you were looking for?

A. I could, but I will not.

Q. Why won't you?

A. I choose not to.

At one point, Liddy said "I do not reproach myself" for his actions.

During the 45-minute conference, Liddy's five teenaged children stood behind him. His wife, a schoolteacher, sat in a chair nearby.

Liddy said he had no plans at present to write a Watergate book, although he said he had tried working on nonfiction without much success.

"I don't want to appear to be quixotic in these refusals to discuss Watergate and so I will say this," Liddy said, almost apologetically, after a rapid-fire series of questions.

"There were a substantial number of different reasons why five years ago I opted for silence. One of them is that if I don't want you to know something, I simply will not speak about it to you, I will tell you the truth."

As Liddy said it, his deep-sunken brown eyes burned with fervor as they did when he stood trial for the burglary with James W. McCord Jr. in January 1973.

Bill allows elderly free college tuition

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts residents over the age of 65 could attend classes at state colleges, universities or community colleges tuition free under a bill which won final approval in the Massachusetts House.

The legislation passed on a voice vote yesterday without debate.

The only limitation in the bill is that the college seats be available without requiring extra classes in a given subject.

For those over 65 who would like to do something less intellectually taxing, the House also gave final approval to a bill cutting in half the fees charged them for hunting and fishing licenses.

Delinquent taxpayers unveiled in Boston

BOSTON [AP] — With ceremonial fanfare, Mayor Kevin White released the names of delinquent excise and property taxpayers yesterday, including public officials, a large theatre chain and the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad.

Like a showman who kept his audience in suspense, White removed a cloth covering photographs of faces or properties of prominent but delinquent taxpayers.

The list included two Boston legislators, Sen. Bill Owens and Rep. Royal L. Bolling Jr., Executive Council member Herbert Connolly, and the E.M. Loew's theater chain, City Hall spokesman Benjamin Kilgore said.

The largest single delinquent corporate tax was some $17 million owed by Penn Central, Kilgore said. He said the Lowe tab is about $720,000.

White said the public demonstration "was conceived to further set the mood for a concentrated effort to collect back tax revenues owed the City of Boston"

The mayor's sentiments were echoed by State Secretary Paul Guzzi who told members of the Golden Age Club in Springfield that delinquent taxpayer lists should be published annually by cities and towns throughout Massachusetts.

"Delinquent taxpayers inevitably increase the taxes all citizens must pay," Guzzi said.

Newspaper publication of delinquent taxpayers in Boston, North Adams and other communities this year has helped officials speed collection of overdue real estate and excise taxes, Guzzi said.

The Boston list revealed the Boston Stock Exchange building as the single largest tax delinquent parcel, with $2 million in unpaid taxes, according to Kilgore.

Yesterday's ceremony followed an abortive but highly publicized attempt last week to seize a helicopter owned by Boston trial lawyer F. Lee Bailey for nonpayment of taxes.

Springfield judge OK's 'Calcutta'

SPRINGFIELD [UPI] — The play "Oh, Calcutta" is not obscene and can be performed in the city-owned Symphony Hall Oct. 8, a Hampden County Superior Court judge ruled yesterday.

Judge John M. Greaney ruled after a two-day trial that the play, which he viewed on videotape Wednesday, did not meet any of the criteria for obscenity.

The play deals with human sexuality and includes some nudity. City officials had asked that it be declared obscene and banned from appearing in Symphony Hall.

City solicitor William J. Fitzgerald had said: "it's not a question of whether or not it should be left to the citizen to decide by his or her attendance. The question is whether citizens of Springfield want this type of performance. I'd say the vast majority do not."

Almanac predicts another cold one

LEWISTON, Maine [AP] — Keep your long johns handy — the Farmers' Almanac says the coming winter is going to be a bitter one.

"For 1977-78, we show another rough winter, with cold and snow aplenty although not as bad as the winter just past," says the almanac's 161st annual edition, just off the presses.

The venerable publication was right on target last year when it forecast "a big, bad winter," followed by a "scorchingly hot" summer.

"We predicted it first," crows Almanac editor Ray Geiger, 67, who obtains his forecasts from Harry K. Buie, a retired astronomer and school administrator in Inverness, Fla.

"He uses a secret formula, passed down since the Almanac was founded in 1818," says Geiger. "It's based on sunspots, the position of the planets and the tidal action of the moon."

The Almanac has been issuing forecasts 52 years longer than the National Weather Service, says Geiger, who rarely passes up an opportunity for a good-natured jab at the government-run bureau.

"We call them a 'nonprophet' agency," he says.

Sweet Chariot

I'm an Air Force officer and my sweet chariot is a supersonic aircraft. When I visit home people are happy to see me. And proud. They say I'm doing my part in the community by showing the young people and the adults that you really can make it. You really can get your share of A Great Way of Life.
I also feel good about my position in the Air Force community. I'm a leader there, too. I'm someone the other brothers and sisters I meet in the service can look to. And it reassures them to know they have a voice in Air Force matters that concern them.
The Air Force needs more leaders... pilots...aircrew members...math majors...science and engineering majors. You might be one of them, and the best way to find that out is in an Air Force ROTC program. There are two and four-year programs. Scholarship and non-scholarship. Why not look into all of them and see if one fits your plans? It's worth it, brother.

A moment not easily forgotten

To the Editor:

Richard Nixon has made his million telling us more lies over network television and the rightists in Congress are resisting the return of the Panama Canal Zone to its rightful owners - the people of Panama.

It certainly has changed in the past five years and it makes one wonder what ever happened to the people who fought for social and international justice in the past decade - where have they gone?

This weekend they are planning to plow under Blanket Hill at Kent State where four students were killed by the Ohio National Guard on May 4, 1970 to make way for a gym. The reasoning is rather simple. Why should we commemorate an event that occured in the 'darkest' era in our nation's history since the Civil War? America was defeated wasn't she? Isn't that enough?

When are we going to stand up and answer back with a voice that will remind them that our memories are not so easily embalmed?

The deaths of the four Kent State students are much more than a reminder of the social upheaval caused by the war and the corrupt Johnson-Nixon administrations and they certainly are not symbolic of any so-called defeat. They are rather a reminder of a victory for the American people.

The protests, marches, and ultimately the murders at Kent and Jackson State changed the American national conscience if only briefly. For the first time in our history massive public opinion against the foreign and domestic policies of vested interests in the government were forced to concede to the people who are supposedly the true and final controllers of the nation's destiny — that's US, all 220 million of us and now they want to bury it under a gym!

It is sadly ironic that seven years later there are some Americans — and very powerful ones at that — who would risk another tragedy — this time in Panama — for the sake of some vague and misplaced notion that America must bully smaller nations in order to prove its strength.

We are strong but we will be judged not by the brute force we can muster but by principles by which we govern ourselves.

It is strange, indeed, that the President who thunders out against human rights infringement in the Soviet Union can remain silent about the desecration of our history at Kent State and Jackson State — the desecration of the memories of students who died for the Constitutional right to protest against the wrong doing of their government.

Could the people who justify building a gym at Kent State justify building a shopping mall over Gettysburg?

Can those who see justice in resisting the right of Panamanians to lay claim to a part of their own homeland justify the denial of those same rights to American Indians who demand the return of lands unlawfully seized from them?

It is 1977 — have we forgotten so soon that we can watch the same reactionary collective we so indignantly put down less than half a decade ago return to take back what they had stolen in the first place? If so there are some terrible years ahead for America and perhaps our children will not have the opportunities we had to make the needed changes.

Asbestos fought

By DAN PARADIS

Mass PIRG, (Mass. Public Interest Research Group), has been involved lately in a campaign to inform the consumer and manufacturers of asbestos products. PIRG is trying to point out that people are presently unaware of the health hazards involved, by being in contact with these materials.

In talking with the PIRG administrators, I find they feel that the public is often too eager to place the blame on a central source — namely, the asbestos plant itself. PIRG would like to see the products containing asbestos taken off the market, or improved to coincide with health and safety standards. Their objective is clear cut, they want to get local industry's support in distributing asbestos-containing products, which they hope will reach home with the asbestos plants themselves. Other directions that they are taking is the addressing of the Amherst School Committee on the dangers of asbestos such as the chipping and dust from school ceilings and walls. This could prove to be as endearing as the recent lead paint panic. The opening of the new Student Auto Workshop (SAW) is sighted as a possibility to back PIRG in the recent asbestos brake-lining issue.

One PIRG administrator sympathized with the public because of what he believed to be an elusive list of asbestos products. He named a few as being car brake-linings, bulletin boards, commercial ships, ceilings, walls, decorations, pot holders, and floor tiles.

PIRG researchers claim that the dangers imposed by asbestos are incurable forms of cancer. The most common cases are lung cancer, and strange skin malignancies. Researchers agree upon the stages of asbestos poisoning. In some cases people come in contact with chip and dust residues and get the asbestos on their bodies, through clothing deposits. Breathing the dust in can be equally as dangerous.

Asbestos cancer is not necessarily singular. Ken Silver, a UMass student PIRG coordinator said that, "Once one brings the substance in contact with other people they too are liable to contamination." He continued to say that, "There are documented cases of families together contracting cancer. A family man within the state recently sent a floor tile to a citizens aware organization. It was confirmed as being a potent cancer source.

The investment of two dollars that students can pay each semester on their fee bill seems a small amount to pay for the safety and health of us all in the future. My immediate impression of PIRG still stands. Their approach and timing appears to be of a subtle philosophical vintage. They want to achieve student support without an apparent hard-selling pitch. In Silver's words, "Ignorance is in the long run an intolerable price to pay."

The final frontier

By ALAN SHEPARD

Space; the final frontier. This is the journey of a UMass education. One's four year mission, to seek out new lives and experiences, to skeptically go where no high school dropout has gone before.

The taking up of space, (which is rapidly becoming a rare commodity as the Housing Office can attest to) is all that some have accomplished after their eight semesters spent here.

When one graduates, Whitmore looks upon this transaction as follows: Delete No. 7446782 class of 77, enter No. 6231482 class of 81. If the lone impression that one has left on this university is with the computer programer making this entry, than something was missed along the way.

Even though the university automatically assigns everyone a student number, it is one's own choice to be reduced to such. If the trend towards this numerical identification continues, the day may not be too far off when upon approaching a young prospect in the Blue Wall and asking her name she instinctively replies, "8253671, but my friends call me 82."

Now delving into the archives of the overly used and worn out cliche department, I come out with two gems. Number one; "College prepares you for the outside world" (also referred to by some as the 'real' world). Number two; "What you get from college is what you put into it".

If we are now behind this wall of reality, as implied in cliche number one, it would be wise to take advantage of this situation by exploring and experimenting in this land of make believe. Although there are no student firemen, for those who always wanted to be one when they grow older, the university does provide the opportunity to play nurse, sportscaster, counselor, newspaper writer, actor, lawyer, manager, senator, volunteer, disc jockey or maybe even president.

The moral of cliche number two is to be assertive. You are heading for an inevitable disappointment if you choose to lay back waiting to be discovered. No organizations have yet reached the point of desperation where door to door recruitment is necessary.

The university can be an intimidating place, especially to those who are new to its environment. But it is certainly far less intimidating than the world that surrounds it.

Space, or a place in society, for most of us is our final frontier. In many ways the university is a microcosm of the larger system that we all must inevitably face.

Many of the challenges we see now in relating to people and deriving satisfaction from our work and activities are the same that will face us beyond our college days. The amount of success that we have in dealing with these now, will greatly affect our confidence and ability to overcome these in the future.

Most of the learning that takes place here does happen beyond the confines and ability to overcome these in the future.

Most of the learning that takes place here does happen beyond the confines of the classroom, where your're only spending approximately four per cent of your time anyway.

By taking advantage of the other experience the university has to offer you're helping yourself, as well as working to change the image of this campus as one of an active minority and apathetic majority.

Kent State: America's 'open wound'

By JIM PAULIN

"The UMass Student Senate hereby condemns all moves by the Kent State University Trustees and Administration to plow "Blanket Hill" and the memory and spirit of Kent and Jackson State into oblivion.

"Rationale: The murder of four Kent State students on May 4, 1970, while they were protesting the war in Vietnam, is of grave concern for all students in the United States."

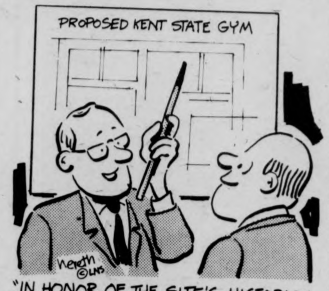
The Student Senate, and especially the Revolutionary Student Brigade, are to be commended for the telegram they sent and their support for the May 4th Coalition's effort.

As May 4 Coalition member Chick Canfora, said, the gym site is an "open wound" that the Kent State Trustees want to bandage with a gymnasium that could have been put in six other locations.

Supreme Court Justice William Brennan yesterday gave the go-ahead to construction, and Kent State President Brage Golding had the incredible hypocrisy to pontificate that "one group has to yield to the other group... The group that yields has to yield gracefully. To yield toward violence is not the American way." If Golding's statement is correct, then the Ohio National Guard is a bunch of dirty treasoness subversives who should be deported.

The problem with the National Guard ("tin soldiers", as Neil Young described them) is that it mainly serves a police function, but is given military training. When the Ohio National Guard shot the students at Kent State, in their minds they were probably firing at Viet Cong. When the National Guard goes to summer camp, they should spend less time driving around in tanks and more time learning riot control. Perhaps it would be a good idea to have the state police assist in training the Guard.

If the Kent State Trustees think that by burying the site, the issue will rest in peace, then they couldn't be more wrong. President Goldings statement that he hopes no violence will occur as a result of the action of Justice Brennan, leaves me baffled. "Because if that does happen," said Golding, "then the cause for which many of these well meaning and well intentioned students worked for will go right down the drain."



"IN HONOR OF THE SITE'S HISTORICAL IMPORTANCE WE'VE DECIDED TO HAVE THE NEW GYM WHITE-WASHED INSTEAD OF PAINTED..."

The reality is that the construction of the gym is what could make the cause "go right down the drain." However, the coalition takes heart in the fact that the gym at Columbia University in New York City was not completed, though it was half finished at the time that students took direct physical action against the gym, and consequently, the gym was never built on the site.

There is an expedition leaving from UMass to Kent State tomorrow night for an anti-gym rally. One of the purposes of this rally is to build support for another illegal but highly moral and ethical occupation of the gym site with another tent city on Sept. 24, like the one that had been established this summer until it was evicted by a court order. Anyone interested in either attending or supporting the rally should go to Revolutionary Student Brigade's table in either the Campus Center or Student Union. The Student Senate has allocated $500 for transportation.

Regardless of what happens, it is impossible to alter history by altering geography. It's like trying to forget the Civil War by paving Gettysburg.

Abortion legislation discriminatory

Our state Senate recently approved a bill banning the use of public funds for abortion. There were, however, enough "no" votes to uphold the Governor's promised veto.

Senator Alan D. Sisitsky, D-Springfield, said that everyone was sure of how they were going to vote.

The bill would prohibit spending federal or state money on abortions except in cases where the woman's life would be endangered.

Senator Robert Hall, R-Fitchburg, had proposed three amendments to the bill that the Senate ruled went beyond the scope of the original measure.

Two of these amendments were to allow spending public money for abortion in cases where the woman's life or health were in danger, and in cases of rape or incest.

The third was to give family planning information and materials to those eligible for medical assistance, thereby reducing the use of abortion as a birth control method.

This last amendment should already be in practice, regardless of the status of the bill. Aside from the moral issues involved, abortion is more expensive both financially and physically than most forms of birth control.

The legislation is discriminatory against poor women. Abortion, though a volatile moral issue, remains, by the present laws, a choice for each individual. The only thing this proposal accomplishes is banning legal and healthy abortions for one segment of the female population — the poor.

The days of back alley abortions are gone. Let's not go back there. In a society this technologically advanced, health care guaranteed for all people is the only humane route.

The choice for or against abortion should be available to all of the people, not just some.

CHICOPEE: "World's largest kielbasa" weighs 107 lbs., is 25 ft. long and 5 ins. in diameter. It will be displayed this weekend at the kielbasa festival where it will claim its title.

Chicopee claims world's largest authentic kielbasa

CHICOPEE (UPI) — Residents of Chicopee, the nation's self-proclaimed kielbasa capital, have a question about the world's largest Polish sausage. But it's not an ethnic joke, it's a matter of civic pride.

It seems residents of Rogers City, Mich., have produced a 3,000-pound, 8,775-foot sausage and claimed for it the title of world's largest kielbasa.

But Chicopee residents say the big sausage is nothing but a "mile-long hot dog" and think they deserve the world's largest title for a 25-foot long, 107-pound Polish sausage.

"Ours is in a single and natural animal casing, not in a bunch of casings tied together," says Leon S. Partyka, manager of the local firm that produced the kielbasa for the town's annual World Kielbasa Festival that is expected to attract 25,000 people this weekend.

He points out that Chicopee's entry for the world's largest Polish sausage was also produced in the traditional shape and fashion. That means the pork, beef, veal and a "secret formula" of spices was planned and made over a two-week period, finishing up with a five-hour session in a smokehouse.

"Ours is the real thing, not a big hot dog," he says.

Fewer women drop out at military academies

by Associated Press

Women are holding their own as the second year of coeducation begins at the nation's military academies this week. And at Annapolis, West Point, and the Coast Guard Academy, fewer freshman women have dropped out during this year's summer training than during last year's.

"It has gone much better than anyone anticipated," a Coast Guard Academy spokesman said in New London, Conn. Similar assessments came from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. and the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

Dropout rates for women, although higher than that for men, are declining, the academies said. Spokesmen said women know what to expect at the academies because of publicity about the coed programs.

The proportion of women in the service academies remains small — one out of every 15 plebes entering this year at the Naval Academy, for example. The institutions say they have eased physical requirements somewhat since going coed in June 1976 but made no other special accommodations for the women.

They also said the women who leave do so more because they are disenchanted with military life than because they can't take the considerable stress — academic or physical. "My problem was I wanted the education," a West Point dropout recounted, "but I didn't consider the military training."

At West Point, 9.6 per cent of the women in the class of 1981 failed to survive this summer's rigorous training, known as "beast barracks." The figure for the class of 1980 last year at this time was 14.3 per cent. In the sophomore class, 31 per cent of the women have dropped out compared to 26 per cent of the men.

"Over-all, it's going very well," said Maj. Mary Willis, the superintendent's adviser on women. "The women are really working hard to make themselves a part of the corps and it is showing in the standards they are setting."

At the Air Force Academy, the women's attrition rate at the end of last summer was 3 per cent. It is 4.5 per cent this year, an increase of two cadets. But the rate among sophomore women — 17.9 per cent — is lower than among men, 19.3 per cent.

At the Naval Academy, 7.4 per cent of the freshmen women — six of 81 — dropped out during summer training last year. Four of the 90 women, or 4.4 per cent, dropped out this year. For the sophomore class, 22 per cent of the women are dropouts as are 10.8 per cent of the men.

Tarkanian axed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. [UPI] — Jerry Tarkanian, ordered suspended as head coach of the University of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball team in compliance with NCAA disciplinary sanctions, won a temporary court order yesterday blocking the action.

District Judge James Brennan granted a restraining order and set a hearing on a preliminary injunction for Sept. 21. The order prevents the university from severing Tarkanian from any association with the intercollegiate athletic program.

Tarkanian, who is among the most successful major college basketball coaches and whose runnin' Rebels reached the NCAA National Tournament last season, was to have been severed effective at 5 p.m. today, matching the NCAA's two-year suspension of the Rebels.

But he went to court for a judgment against the university, the University of Nevada system, UNLV President Donald Baepler and members of the Board of Regents as individuals. His attorney told the court the severance would cause Tarkanian to suffer irreparable harm and that he should be given due process and an open hearing.

Attorneys for the university said it was not the intention of the school to terminate Tarkanian but to reassign him since he is a tenured coach and professor. His salary as coach is $36,000 a year. He also receives numerous fringe benefits, provided by the community and the Booster Club, which never have been clearly spelled out.

"I can't say anything, he (Attorney Samuel Lionel) is suppose to talk for me," Tarkanian said when asked for a comment after the court hearing.

"We feel our position is sounder than any other case I have ever seen against the NCAA. We think our position is unalterably clear," said Lionel.

Lionel said he and Tarkanian attended the UNLV personnel session this week where the decision was made to sever the coach. UNLV President Baepler did not attend nor was a representative of the NCAA present.

"It is my belief that the university has taken all action requested by the NCAA," said Lionel.

Gaillard quits

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — College Basketball Coach of the Year Bob Gaillard, citing personal and family reasons, announced yesterday he will quit as head coach and athletic director at the University of San Francisco at the conclusion of the 1977-78 season.

Gaillard, who recruited Blue Chip Players and then built the Dons into a national power, said he is tired of traveling and the devotion it takes to be the coach of a leading team. He added the time had come to step down and think about something else.

"I want to be in a thought situation where I can devote more time to my family," said the 37-year-old coach. "I'm tired of flying around the country at Christmastime. If you aren't devoted to coaching 24 hours a day, you just don't do the job that keeps you competitive.

"When I started out I tried to set some goals. This will be my 10th year, two years as a freshman coach and eight years as a head coach. I thought about it (quitting) other times, and it's time now to get out."

Pats cut Conn

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots announced yesterday they have reached the required National Football League roster limit of 48 players.

The Pats placed injured rookie linebacker Jerry Vogele from Michigan on the injured reserve list and waived veteran defensive back Dick Conn from Georgia.

New England squares off Sunday afternoon against the Atlanta Falcons at Schaefer Stadium in their last pre-season NFL tilt. So far, the Patriots are 3-1 in exhibition play.

On Sept. 18, the Kansas City Chiefs visit the Patriots to kick off the 1977 NFL season.

Violence report

BRUSSELS [UPI] — The International Congress on violence in sports approved a number of resolutions yesterday designed to educate public authorities and sports federations in curbing mayhem in arenas around the world.

"We now have a set of rules, and I can assure you we will start working immediately on applying them to eliminate violence in sports," said William Jones of Britain, Honorary President of the International Amateur Basketball Association.

The resolutions approved by some 150 delegates from 21 European countries and 15 international sports federations at the two-day congress also called for global coordination of scientific research into the causes of violence.

Measures to be taken by sports federations and public officials stressed the preventive and educational approach.

"Authorities should make sure that sports in schools is combined with education in sports ethics," the resolution on the role of public authorities said. "Strict safety norms should also be established for sports installations and conditions of access should be improved."

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9 — Born today, you are one of those idealists, humane, highly artistic individuals who is destined to suffer considerably in his own behalf and because of others. It is hard for you to allow those close to you their independence. You are inclined toward an overly protective attitude which will hamper, perhaps even prevent, the freedom of others. Yet you yourself are rather insistent upon being free. You want challenge, opportunity, and expanding horizons; not activities which would restrain your spirit or limit your possibilities. Given your way, you will go far.

Unlike many idealists, you also possess a talent for organization. You have difficulty, however, disciplining those whose efforts fall short of what is necessary for the success of an operation. You will ultimately learn to speak definitely, directly, and openly to others without seeming harsh or unfeeling. When this time comes, your associations will improve.

You have a slight tendency toward impulsive action. With even a modicum of care, however, you should be able to keep the tendency under control. You prefer to be thought of as steady, intelligent, happy, and loving. Ultimately, if you create the image long enough, it should become reality.

To find out what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Personal acceptance of another's different — and somewhat difficult — ways of performing everyday activities is necessary to the day's success.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Take care that in analyzing your own intentions you don't mistake fears for inabilities. It is difficult to read your own character.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Be mindful of the effect you have on loved ones when you speak ill of your own work. To be overly modest may be to be silly in judgments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Attain success and a degree of personal happiness today through an association with one who knows the way to commercialize the results of your efforts.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Idealism and the practical application of recently discovered talents don't necessarily go together today. See productive outlets for energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.) — A designing friend may be more concerned with helping himself than with furthering your interests. Protect your future.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Your own congeniality in the presence of strangers should be enough to gain you the support you need from new friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Listen carefully to those directions given by the young. You may be inclined to turn a deaf ear to any but the obviously mature.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Make this a Saturday when the whole family can progress on a project of mutual interest and concern. There is much riding on a youngster's success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Art and aspirations serve to enhance each other today as you try to fulfill an ambition through creative urges.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Make this a Saturday to be remembered by the family. Success may belong to one alone — but the results can be shared by all.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Action and reaction tell the tale where your association with friends is concerned. Dont strain a good thing to the breaking point.

Six teams will contest AFC title

NEW YORK [UPI] — For nearly a decade, three teams have dominated the American Football Conference and in effect, the National Football League. The latest to establish themselves as NFL champions are the Oakland Raiders, who swamped Minnesota 32-14 in the Super Bowl for the AFC's fifth consecutive victory.

But it is no longer a three-team race in the AFC, thanks to the young powers emerging during the past two years. Those powers include New England, Baltimore and Cincinnati and the 1977 AFC race promises to be a dogfight among at least six clubs.

The Raiders, perennial runners-up, finally ended any doubt last January that they could win. But as most coaches say, it's tougher to win the second time around. It will be especially so this year with the rise of the young powers.

EASTERN DIVISION

This race should again be a duel between New England and Baltimore. Chuck Fairbanks earned Coach of the Year honors last season after guiding the once-lowly Pats into a wild card playoff berth and then nearly upending Oakland in the Playoffs. Fairbanks has continued to build his club this year, with Steve Grogan emerging as a top NFL quarterback and Sam Cunningham establishing himself as one of the league's top fullbacks. New England also is blessed with the easiest schedule in the NFL. The Pats have a seven-week stretch in which they don't face a club that finished over .500 last season. And Baltimore is the only opponent to win more than nine games last year.

The Colts return one of the league's most feared passing combinations, Bert Jones to Roger Carr, and one of the top backs in Lydell Mitchell. But the defense is still a question mark and the refusal of end John Dutton to come to terms won't help. Also hurting is the loss of the two top draft picks to injuries. Baltimore should have enough, however, to land a wild card berth.

There is little strength among the other three teams. Once powerful Miami is in a rebuilding process and the "No Name Defense" is just that again, having been completely revamped by Coach Don Shula. Shula also has had little output from his quarterbacks, especially Bob Griese, who's been having vision problems.

The New York Jets, under new coach Walt Michaels, could be one of the youngest clubs in the league and have replaced longtime star quarterback Joe Namath with Richard Todd. The Jets and Buffalo, whose offense will be built around superstar O.J. Simpson, should duel for the Eastern cellar.

CENTRAL DIVISION

Cincinnati's young Bengals collected high draft choices over the past few years and are finally getting their reward. The Bengals should finally end Pittsburgh's domination. Cincinnati, with Ken Anderson at the controls, will start two first round picks, Wilson Whitley and Eddie Edwards, in the defensive line, their big question mark last season. Wide receiver Isaac Curtis and as talented a herd of running backs as there is in the NFL will take care of the offense.

Pittsburgh returns with Terry Bradshaw, Lynn Swann and Franco Harris leading the offense but cornerback Mel Blount is gone from the defense and injuries have taken their toll in the defensive line. Also, the Steelers have one of the toughest schedules in the league this year and will have to struggle to catch the Bengals or even qualify for the playoffs.

Cleveland came on strong last season for one of its best finishes ever but the Browns, who have installed Brian Sipe as their No. 1 quarterback, are in a difficult division.

Houston had offensive problems and all but collapsed last season after showing signs of a rebirth the year before. This could be the end for quarterback Dan Pastorini and possibly coach Bum Phillips.

WESTERN DIVISION

Oakland should cruise to the division title. The Raiders are high-powered on offense, healthy on defense for a change and are in perhaps the weakest division in the AFC. If Ken Stabler has another year like last season, there should be no problem walking off with the division.

San Diego has rebuilt under Coach Tommy Prothro and will have former Los Angeles starter James Harris at quarterback. Speedsters Joe Washington, out injured last season, and Johnny Rodgers, in Canada the past few years, should make the offense high-powered. The rugged schedule could be the club's undoing, however.

Denver is having its quarterback problems. Craig Morton, booed out of New York, will be the No. 1. Otis Armstrong is one of the top running backs in the NFL but the rest of the offense was sluggish and new coach Red Miller, considered an offensive whiz, will have to come up with some new wrinkles.

Kansas City is still young in many positions and Coach Paul Wiggin has been handed the toughest schedule in the NFL. The big question marks are still at running back, with Woody Green gone, and in the defensive line.

Seattle turned down a chance at Heisman Trophy winner Tony Dorsett for a collection of youngsters in the draft and will need time for them to develop.

Cindy Nicholas, 19, of Scarborough, Ont., relaxes with her parents in their motel room after she swam across the English Channel and back in a record shattering time of 19 hours and 55 minutes. She became the first woman to complete a two-way, non-stop swim of the English Channel.

Swimmer cuts cross-channel mark

DOVER, England [UPI] — Canadian teenager Cindy Nicholas Thursday became the first woman to swim back and forth across the English Channel non-stop and ripped ten hours off the record in the process.

Cindy, a 19-year-old science student from Toronto University, made the round trip crossing in 19 hours and 55 minutes.

Cut and bruised from the five-foot waves that dashed her on the rocks off the French coast, she said, "I am feeling a little tired because I haven't slept for 36 hours. But I expect that after a sleep I will feel good."

She also said she would be back next year for a sixth bid to swim the 21 miles between Britain and France and take the "Queen of the Channel" title from Greta Anderson, who did it five times.

Although battered and weary after leaving the water, she was jubilant about her swim.

The worst 10 minutes came when she reached Cap-Griz-Nez on the French coast, where waves tossed her among the rocks before she could strike out again for England.

"I got a lot of cuts and bruises all over. You name it and I've got them all over my body," she said. "I got slapped all over the place."

But the swim went beautifully apart from that, she said, adding, "I started at 90 strokes a minute and finished at 92. At no point was I ever under 90 and never slowed down."

Mrs. Audrey Scott, secretary of the Channel Swimming Association, said Cindy "was very disappointed she didn't set a record for the England to France leg. She missed that by two minutes."

She made the outbound trip in 8 hours and 58 minutes — two minutes more than the one-way women's record, and turned round to return to Dover in 10 hours 57 minutes.

Cindy, from Scarborough, Ontario, was accompanied by her parents, Vicky and James, who hugged her when she came ashore.

She walked out of the water at exactly the same point on Shakespeare Beach where she entered.

NY tops Tribe

CLEVELAND [AP] — A sacrifice fly by Chris Chambliss capped a three-run fifth inning that carried Ed Figueroa and the New York Yankees to a 4-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians last night.

Figueroa, 14-9, went all the way for the 11th time this season, limiting the Indians to eight hits as the Yankees picked up their third straight victory and 10th in the last 12 starts.

Three of the Yankees' runs were unearned, two of them coming in the decisive fifth.

Willie Randolph led off that inning, reaching base on the first of two errors by shortstop Larvell Blanks. Bucky Dent's hit and a bunt single by Mickey Rivers loaded the bases against Cleveland starter Jim Bibby, 12-11.

Graig Nettles' sacrifice fly scored Randolph from third, Thurman Munson singled home a run, and Reggie Jackson drew a walk to load the bases again. Chambliss then drove a ball to center, scoring Rivers with the third run.

Sox slam Jays

TORONTO [AP] — Carlton Fisk knocked in five runs with two homers, and along with George Scott, helped Boston set a major league consecutive home run scored as the Red Sox posted a 7-2 victory over the Toronto BLue Jays last night.

Fisk, who has knocked in 17 runs in his last five games, including seven against the Blue Jays Tuesday night in an 11-2 victory, hit a three-run homer in the second inning and a two-run shot in the sixth off loser Jesse Jefferson, 8-15.

In the second inning, Scott followed Fisk's homer with a solo shot, the 16th time this season that the Red Sox have hit consecutive homers in a game. The old major league mark of 15 was set by the Minnesota Twins in 1964.

Fisk's homers were his 22nd and 23rd of the season, while Scott hit his 32nd. Carl Yastrzemski hit his 23rd of the year, a solo shot in the eighth inning, accounting for the other Boston run.

The Blue Jays scored two runs off winner Mike Paxton, 9-4, in the sixth inning when Doug Ault hit a bases-loaded single, driving in Steve Staggs and Al Woods.

Connors in semi-finals; Evert challenges Stove

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Defending champion Jimmy Connors brushed off a sudden case of "upset fever" in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships last night by giving clay court master Manuel Orantes a 6-2, 6-4, 6-3 lesson before a capacity-plus crowd to gain the men's singles semifinals and avenge his loss in the 1975 finals.

Men's third seed Brian Gottfried tumbled to Italy's unseeded Corrado Barazzutti and women's third seed Virginia Wade, the Winbledon Champion, was swept aside by 12th-seeded Wendy Turnbull, both in straight sets, but Connors attacked Orantes like a man desperately protecting his home.

And that is exactly how Connors regards this championship.

"It's mine," he says, "it belongs to me."

Connors was relentless against Orantes, who beat him in straight sets here for the title two years ago and dumped him again earlier this summer en route to the U.S. Clay Court Championship.

The 28-year-old Spaniard, who also won the U.S. Pro Championships last week, never lost his famous smile, but it quickly turned from joy to frustration and by the end even he was applauding the winners blazing off Connors' racket.

After Orantes held his opening service, Connors claimed eight of the next nine games, allowing Orantes only 16 points during the stretch.

The crowd, which jammed the aisles and stairwells and far exceeded the paid total of 12,497, was kind to the highly-regarded Orantes but solidly behind Connors, one of two American survivors.

Connors next faces Barazzutti, a hungry young giant-killer who eliminated seventh-seeded Ilie Nastase before Gottfried, while Harold Solomon, Silver Spring, Md., takes on Argentina's Guillermo Vilas in the other semifinals Saturday.

Gottfried, 25, from Lauderhill, Fla., was humbled, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2, by Barazzutti, who eliminated seventh-seeded Ilie Nastase in the second round. Wade was equally ripped by Turnbull, 6-2, 6-1.

In the women's semifinals today, Turnbull takes on second-seeded Martina Navratilova, who easily defeated Mima Jausovec, 6-4, 6-1, in the first stadium match yesterday and top seed and two-time defending champion Chris Evert faces Betty Stove, both quarter-final winners on Wednesday.

Turnbull, 24, of Brisbane, Australia, has shown great improvement in the past year, so much so that her WTT Cleveland Nets coach, Marty Riessen, told her she could soon be among the top five women players in the world.

"She's not called 'The Rabbit', for nothing," Wade said. "She picks up every ball. I didn't push her enough to make her crack."

Wade, who beat Stove in the finals at Wimbledon while the Queen and all of England watched, said she never really found her groove on the clay here.

Minutemen aim at Army

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Jim Penta (64) and Gerry Greene (66) will be in the offensive line, Chris Kurtz (25) will be at wide receiver, and Mike Fallon (7) will be the quarterback tomorrow when UMass opens against Army. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

The UMass football team will open its 1977 campaign when the Minutemen take on the Cadets of Army at West Point, N.Y. tomorrow. Game time is 1:30.

If you're wondering how the two teams stand series-wise, it's all evened up at 0-0, because this is their first meeting.

Army was 5-6 last year, which is the best season the Cadets have had in the past four.

UMass ended last season at 5-5, winning four of its first five, before losing four of its last five games.

The only common opponent in the two team's schedule last season was Boston College. BC beat Army 27-10 and UMass 35-0.

Army has an amazing knack of winning season opening games. In 87 inaugural appearances, Army has a record of 76-8-3. However, all but one of those openers were at home.

With one more victory the Cadets will reach a career total of 500 wins, a milestone reached by only 15 other schools in the history of college football.

The injury bug has made its presence felt in Army's pre-season camp. It put junior defensive end Hal burton on the sidelines for the entire season. Due to chronic knee problems, which have necessitated three operations previously, Burton has been medically disqualified. He ranked third in minutes played on the Cadets.

Two other key members have been listed as questionable starters for Saturday's premiere. Placekicker Mike Castelli, ranking second in Army's point parade with 37, sprained his achilles tendon, while wide receiver George Dunaway is attempting to get back to 100 per cent recovering from an injury in his right knee.

From UMass's standpoint, 26 lettermen, headed by co-captains John Gladchuk and Peter McCarty will form the nucleus of this year's squad along with many new faces (12 starters were lost through graduation).

Offensively, five starters return and the interior line could be strengthened if guard Russ Cooke and tackle Ross Schubarth can perform as well as they did in spring drills.

Cooke had a super season as a sophomore before being sidelined for more than a year with a head injury. Schubarth sat out last season due to academics.

Mike Fallon is slated to start at quarterback for the Minutemen while sophomores Tim Fontaine and Mike McEvilly will be battling for the backup role.

TOUCHBACKS — Opposed to its opener last season, this time around Army has lettermen returning to all four starting positions in its defensive secondary, along with depth in its second unit.

The Cadets didn't lose as many starters (six) as UMass, which could mean more experienced players.

On paper, it seems UMass is playing out of it's class by going against Army.

Ivy leaguers gird for season openers

CAMBRIDGE [AP] — Capsule reports on the Ivy League football season, which begins next week:

Harvard's Joe Restic: Junior Craig Beling, one of the league's outstanding linebackers, will spearhead a strong, experienced defensive team. But the offense is less seasoned than last year's 6-3 team. Senior Tim Davenport should start at quarterback but the running back positions are still undecided.

Princeton's Bob Casciola: Despite widespread player inexperience, "we think we've got a good nucleus of kids who have been under the gun": defensive tackle Peter Funke, running back Bobby Isom and most of the offensive linemen. Senior Kirby Lockhart probably will start at quarterback. Last year's team was 2-7.

Dartmouth's Crouthamel: About half of the starters from last year's 7-2 team are back. Defense "will be our strength" because of outstanding tackle Gregg Robinson and a defensive secondary with depth. Five starters are sidelined, including halfback Sam Coffey for six weeks with a broken wrist. The quarterback is inexperienced but All-Ivy placekicker Nick Lowery is back.

Yale's Cozza: Pagliaro, who ranked 11th nationally with 114 yards per game last year, will be the workhorse, but quarterback Bob Rizzo, the captain, has been working on the pass to balance the attack. The defense is "not very big," and middle guard Keith Bassi, second-team All-New England, probably won't start against Brown because of a leg injury. Kicking is a weakness.

Cornell's Blackman: No other Ivy team has fewer returning starters and lettermen. Guard Tony Anzalone is the only starter back from the 1976 offense, which was 2-7. But there is All-America lacrosse player Bob Henrickson, who averaged 10 yards in punt returns last year to place second among Eastern College Athletic Conference Division I teams. Linebacker Terry Lee stands out on defense.

Brown's Anderson: This year's team is equal to last year's, which finished 8-1 and missed the Ivy title only on a missed kick in Penn's 7-6 upset victory. Flanker Charlie Watkins is "one of the best." Starting quarterback remains uncertain. Running backs Seth Morris and Wally Shields each had about 500 yards rushing last season.

Celts ink Rutger's Dabney

BOSTON [AP] — The Boston Celtics signed 6-foot-4 backcourt player Mike Dabney of Rutgers yesterday, the National Basketball Association team announced.

Dabney, the third highest scorer in Rutgers history with 1,902 points, averaged 19.1 points and 4.6 rebounds a game his senior year and had a season total of 117 assists and 110 steals.

The guard will be competing with free agents Biff Burrell of USC and Jerry Fort of Nebraska and with rookies Skip Brown of Wake Forest and Bill Langloh of Virginia for a spot on the team.

BC sojourns to Southwest

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. — "How good?" and "how soon?" will be the questions answered early tomorrow night when the promising Boston College Eagles play a young University of Texas team in Austin.

Boston College features experienced backs, led by running signalcalled Joe O'Brien. Texas is led by Heisman Trophy candidate Earl Campbell.

Both teams are sprinkled with veterans but each squad has untested units. Boston College has installed a new offensive line and linebacking corps while Texas has had to rebuild its offensive line and much of its defense.

"I know we'll be good but it's a matter of how quickly," said Yukica last week as he prepared the Eagles to open against the Longhorns for the third time in four years. "We won't know how well we're doing until we actually see some of these guys starting in their first varsity game.

Fred Akers, in his first year at Texas after a successful stint at Wyoming, said his squad is "young, but just is some experience away from being a good team."

Returning for Boston College be running back Neil Green, who gained 113 yards in the first half last year before being injured in Boston College's 14-13 win. Green gained only 50 yards the rest of the season.

Anthony Brown, a reserve who gained 404 yards last season, will alternate at halfback with Green while sophomore Dan Conway will start at fullback.

Paul McCarty will open at flanker, and Bucky Godbolt, who started two seasons ago, will play wide receiver.

As usual; the Boston College line averages 255 pounds. "They're big and perhaps more mobile than last year's line as a group," said Yukica this week. "Right now, though, they lack game experience.

Veterans tackles Fred Smerlas and Bob Moore lead the defensive line that includes newly promoted ends Rives Robertson and Clint Gaffney.

Kelly Elias, who picked off seven passes from his cornerback slot last season, and starting safety Mike Mayock have been moved up to aid returning starter Rich Scudellari at linebacker.

Jeff Kaufman, a defensive secondary starter last year against Texas, will miss the game because of a knee injury. Roger Reddick, Paul Murphy and Jeff Ryan will open in the secondary and Elias will return to the one corner, if needed.

Jim Walton, who averaged 42.3 yards last fall, again will handle the punting while Tim Moorman will do the placekicking for the second year.

Texas will counter with Russell Erxleben, the one-man kicking game, who just missed a 55-yard field goal at the end of last year's game.

Campbell, Texas' third all-time leading rusher, will be joined in the backfield by Johnny Ham Jones and sophomore quarterback Mark McBath, who started the four final games in 1976.

The Longhorns should pass more this season since Akers has installed a Veer offense to replace Darrell Royal's Wishbone attac' Texas will be looking for quick Alfred Johnson and Johnny Lam Jones, an Olympic Gold Medal winning sprinter.

Akers, who has 23 freshmen and sophomores listed among his top 44 players, hopes his young defense will be quick enough to make up for lack of experience.

"We expect to have a more forcing defense, rather than a containing defense as we have had in the past. We have got to apply the quickness the best way we know how."

ROOSTER COGBURN

John Wayne plays a cantankerous but effective lawman in 'Rooster Cogburn,' a western drama on 'NBC Saturday Night at the Movies' Sept. 17. Katharine Hepburn (right) also stars.

Deputy Marshal Rooster Cogburn is relieved of his badge when a district judge decides that he is effective, but a little too rambunctious for a territory settling down to peaceful ways.

When the judge hears that a military wagon train has been ambushed, he dispatches Cogburn to capture the outlaws, promising a $2,000 reward and full reinstatement if the mission is successful.

Arriving at the fort where the stolen material was to be delivered, Cogburn finds that the outlaws have preceded him and devastated the outpost. The two survivors who remain are Eula, a prim minister's daughter, and Wolf, a young Indian boy.

While in pursuit of the outlaws, Cogburn finds that Eula—whose father was slain by the outlaws—is an effective ally but an often troublesome companion.

CC hotel may be home

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

Students staying in the Campus Center Hotel have won an agreement from administrators stating they could not be forced out of the hotel into any other temporary housing.

Administrators had planned last week to move the 110 male students living in the hotel to makeshift rooms in student dormitory lounges.

"Nobody wants to be moved more than one more time," said one student living on the fifth floor of the hotel." Some students had been moved as many as four times.

Forty-eight students remain in the hotel this morning. The rest moved over the weekend into rooms and lounges around campus.

Off-campus housing applications from sophomore males will be considered until the shortage of male beds is alleviated, announced Dean of Students William F. Field. There has been no shortage of female spaces.

After student protests, an agreement was reached Friday between Fred Preston, associate vice-chancellor for Student Affairs, Field and Legal Services Office attorney James Starr. (See related story, Page 3)

The agreement read: "The parties signing below agree that without exception, the space being occupied by the student is a permanent space for the semester unless the student wants to move."

Preston, Field and Starr also agreed no students would be moved into the lounge of Pierpont Dormitory in Southwest, who had earlier in the day protested the loss of their lounges.

Students moved over the weekend were moved into both rooms and converted lounge space, according to Robert L. Campbell, Director of Residential Resource Management.

Campbell said these students are being moved into spaces "all over the system, excluding Northeast and Central" which are full and have no extra lounge space. Campbell also estimated that 60 per cent of the students moved during the weekend had been moved into reconverted lounge space.

Bill McNamara, head of residence in Cance House in Southwest, said Cance has taken six students from the hotel and put them into reconverted lounge space, and there has been no trouble. "Things are running very smoothly here," said McNamara.

Administrators place the blame on themselves for the dormitory over-crowding. Field told students Friday, "I'm ashamed of the institution." Field told the Collegian last night, "We blew some things in the administration, and to make up for our mistakes, we need student co-operation."

Director of Housing Gerald A. Quarles said the reason the Housing Office had tried to move the displaced students into dormitories so quickly was so the students could "get into a dorm situation." He said students living on the fifth floor of the hotel were going through "territorialization and arguments" as a result of being separated from the rest of the University.

Field again denied the charge that the students were moved from the hotel before the weekend to make room for a convention of tax accountants. "I don't care if the Campus Center makes an extra grand," said Field. "The students are our first priority."

According to Field, University Housing was also paying $5 a day per person for students living in the hotel. Housing and the Campus Center both are divisions of the University, but operate under separate budgets. The regular cost of a Campus Center Hotel room is $16.75 a night.

Preston also said it was "possible" that students who lived in the Campus Center Hotel would be eligible for partial board money refunds.

'We want a place'

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

"I see these kids in the dorms and I envy them. All we want is a place," said Bill Walsh, 18, a communications major from South Boston.

Bill Walsh and his roommate, Brian Burke, a 19-year-old political science major, also from South Boston, have been living out of suitcases and paper bags in a Campus Center Hotel room for the past two weeks.

Both Walsh and Burke lived in the projects in South Boston. "We had to work to get here. We're very fortunate," said Walsh.

"I'm the only kid from my eighth-grade graduating class who went to college," said Walsh, a graduate of Boston College High School. "People where we come from are looking up to us."

"I expected to waltz right in here and hit the books," said Burke. "I need to study a lot more than the average student."

Burke said he lost a chance at a dormitory room because he was in the library studying when the call came from the Housing Office. When he finally picked up his housing card, it was too late.

"We don't have a personal atmosphere," said Burke. "We'd really like a place we could personalize," said Walsh, "a place we could put our stereo and hang up posters and maybe put a few plants around."

All of the confusion surrounding their housing has hindered them from settling in at UMass. "We shouldn't have to put time in with all that," said Burke. "We should be able to spend our time studying and socializing."

Even when they have the time, studying is still difficult. "It's like the Sword of Damocles hanging over my head," said Walsh.

Unrest over Kent gym heightens

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

KENT, Ohio — About 200 demonstrators at an anti-gym rally yesterday tore down a fence surrounding the site of the 1970 Kent State shootings and illegally went onto the site of the proposed gym. Police made no attempt to arrest anyone.

Earlier in the day, an open jeep with four men, drove into a crowd of demonstrators. None were injured.

It was during the third march in two days that demonstrators ripped down the fence in opposition to the construction of a $6 million gym complex near the shooting site.

The act was completely spontaneous, said Alan Canfora, who was shot through the wrist by Ohio National Guard troops during a May 4, 1970 anti-war demonstration at Kent State. Four students were killed and nine wounded at that demonstration.

Members of the May 4 Coalition tear down the fence surrounding the site of the proposed gymnasium near the area where four students were killed May 4, 1970. The action followed a protest rally at the university last Saturday. Police stood by as the fence was destroyed. (UPI)

Demonstrators had marched to the home of Brage Golding, president of Kent State, and yelled, "Golding, Golding, you can't hide; we know you're on the murderer's side." On discovering Golding was not at home, they turned and took the fence down.

Earlier yesterday, after marching through campus, infuriated marchers retaliated against four men in a charging jeep by beating them with placard poles, pulling them from the jeep, and punching them.

Campus police quickly put themselves between the jeep and the marchers, and arrested the driver, who was later released.

On Saturday night, about 300 persons marched behind a man carrying a torch through dorms chanting, "Out of the dorms and into the streets." At each set of dorms, a speaker with a portable public address system urged students to join the anti-gym movement.

Throughout the weekend, the dorms were filling with students, mainly freshmen, preparing for the first day of classes today. Many rooms however, were still vacant last night.

Close to 500 persons in all protested the gym construction during the weekend. Small groups of students came from some midwest and eastern states. Also present were members of the National Workers Association and Youth In Action, from various chapters in the United States.

The telegram sent in support of the anti-gym movement in the UMass-Amherst Undergraduate Student Senate was "pure social dynamite," said Elliot Kass, UMass member of the Revolutionary Student Brigade. Kass and other members of the brigade's UMass chapter joined the May 4 Coalition in protesting the proposed gym construction.

Telegrams of support were sent to the coalition by other universities as well, including a student group from Soweto, South Africa.

Central Council allots four budgets tonight

By SERENA RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The Central Area Council (CAC) tonight will be allocating budgets for four area centers sponsored by CAC at their first meeting this fall.

CAC will also organize elections for two council offices vacated during the summer. The council meets every Monday night at 7:15 in the Chadbourne House seminar room.

Representatives from the four centers, Arts and Crafts Shop, New World Center, Women's Center, and the Center for Education on Racism and Sexism will give the council a general idea of how much money their centers will need for operating this year. Last year, Central Area received a budget of $17,192 from the undergraduate student senate; of this amount, $8,600 was allocated to the four centers.

Because the population of Central has increased from approximately 1,800 to 2,000 since last semester, CAC President Mark Zinan last week said he anticipates at least an additional $1,500 to supplement the budget. Last semester, $9.60 was designated to the Central budget for every resident of Central Area.

The office of CAC treasurer was vacated by Gary Anderson this summer. Anderson was elected last April.

Zinan said nominations for treasurer will be opened at tonight's meeting. A popular election, he said, will be held in approximately two weeks, with ballot boxes located in Franklin Dining Commons.

The CAC itself will be selecting a new Activities Coordinator to replace David Cantor, who was appointed to the position last spring but moved off campus this semester.

Zinan said the Activities Coordinator is responsible for planning activities at least once every two weeks for Central Area residents and also chairing committees for the fall and spring concerts.

Zinan said there are a number of openings for representatives in the CAC.

Jewish New Year starts tonight

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Rosh Hashanah, Jewish New Year, begins tonight at Sundown and lasts two days, marking the year 5738 since the beginning of creation.

Contrary to the other new year, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillal said the Jewish New Year is a serious time. "A time for Jews to look back on their lives of the past year and ask themselves what kind of people they've been and what kind of lives they've led," he said.

Rosh Hashanah begins a period known as the "10 days of repentance" which culminates next week with the observence of Yom Kippur.

"The period of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur is when people have the opportunity to repent and seek forgiveness for actions and deeds they feel to be wrong, and to try to start the new year with a clean slate, so although it is a serious time it is not a sad time because it offers people the opportunity to start new," Perlmutter said.

"According to Jewish tradition, there is a heavenly Book of Life in which God inscribes those who merit continued life for the next year. To be entered into the Book of Life, one must do teshuvah which literally means a turning away from destructive patterns and a returning toward better ways of acting. Hence the traditional new year's greeting of "L'Shanah Tovah Tekatavoo" meaning, 'may you be inscribed for a good year,' " Perlmutter said.

The shofar or ram's horn, one of mankinds oldest musical instruments, is sounded 100 times during the morning service. Its short sobbing sounds are a call for repentence, along with a symbolic casting of sins into streams of running water praying for God to wash away the people's sins called Tashlich, Perlmutter said.

On campus, Rosh Hashanah services will be held in the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 7 p.m., tomorrow at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and Wednesday at 10 a.m.

More traditional services will be held at Chabad House, 30 North Hadley Rd., across from Prince Dorm, Southwest, tonight at 7:30, tomorrow at 10:30 a.m., Tashlich at 5:30 p.m. in evening services at 7:30, and Wednesday morning services at 10:30. Free meals are served after each service.

Sylvan election date set

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Sylvan Area Government held its first meeting of the semester last night, and Vice-President Michael Fix announced the date for elections for the area government.

The elections will take place on Sept. 21 in each of the three Sylvan dorms. Five representatives from each dorm will be elected as well as president, vice-president, treasurer, and secretary. Nominations for the positions will begin tomorrow and run until Sept. 20.

It was also announced that Student Government Association (SGA) elections will be held Sept. 26-27. Nomination papers are available today and can be obtained in McNamara dorm, room 03E for those interested. Six people from the Sylvan area, (two from each dorm), will be elected to represent the Area.

President Timothy Bernard presented a proposal to be considered by the Sylvan Area Government entitled the Academic-Program Development Council. The council will consist of nine members and will be funded with $14,000. It would cost the Sylvan Area Government, as well as the Northeast Area Government, $4,000 each and it would involve two officers and one at large from each area.

Student Affairs would also be involved and its cost would be $6000. Two heads of residence and one assistant director would be necessary. The area management coordinator's contribution has not been determined yet.

The Academic-Program Development Council would support local organizations such as the Racial Awareness-Training Program, Anacoana Center, Sylvan Cultural Society and various other organizations.

Fire department responds to university incidents

The Amherst Fire Department yesterday responded to a wastebasket fire in the Fine Arts Center (FAC) at 12:30 p.m. The cause of the fire was attributed to the careless disposal of a cigarette. Damage resulted in a scorched nearby wall.

Previous to the fire alarm at the FAC, the fire department responded to an apparent false alarm on the 18th floor of John Quincy Adams dorm in Southwest. A resident of that floor thought there was a fire and pulled an alarm.

A default arrest was made by Campus Security Sept. 10 at 6 p.m. Taken into custody was Richard M. Mayo, 28, of 15 Orchard, Northampton.

No arrest was made in the Sept. 7 larceny of an air conditioner from Guinness laboratory. The air conditioner, valued at $125, was ripped from a wall and has not been recovered.

UM seeks $$ for CC debt

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

Student leaders and University officials are once again joining forces for an assault on the state house to promote passage of a bill which would require the state to pay the University's $20.5 million Campus Center (CC) debt.

"We're going to make a concerted effort to get the part of the building that students use, excluding the hotel, paid for by the state," said Student Government Association (SGA) Co-President Jon Hite yesterday.

"We're going to get our figures together next week and sit down and try to get a (square footage) figure that'll be the easiest to sell (to the Legislature)," he said.

A similar measure, one which would have included the hotel, last year met with opposition in the House Ways and Means Committee, where it has remained, essentially dead, since passage of this year's budget.

Hite blamed lack of organized lobbying efforts for that defeat, but said, "This year we're going to bust our ass for this bill."

Currently the multi-million-dollar debt is financed solely by students' Campus Center fees. Fifty-five dollars of each $69 fee payment goes toward annual interest and principal payments on bonds issues by the University of Massachusetts Building Authority in 1976. Prior to the bond issue, financing was on a temporary basis, paying only the interst, from the time construction began in the late 1960's.

"It really was poor managing to leave the debt on temporary financing for so long," said Hite.

Hite said he and those working with him on the bill, including state representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst), Dean of Students William Field, and Campus Center director William Harris, expect criticism of the bill from legislators, despite exclusion of the CC hotel, which was a major stumbling block in last year's measure of the bill.

"Some critics will say the state shouldn't pay for a hotel," he said, "and that the state shouldn't set a precedent by paying more for this building than for any other. The most expensive one they have picked up is the Student Senate Building at SMU (Southeastern Massachusetts University) for $6 million.

"They'll also say the University made the decision on financing and now they have to live with it," he said.

Hite said he and other supporters of the bill plan to lobby intensively at the State House, concentrating particularly on members of the Education Committee, when the proposal is introduced in December.

"This is a bread and butter issue for students and we'll be trying to get a concensus of student opinion on it," he said. In addition, said Hite, "we want the University to work for this bill. If they don't, I won't understand why."

The People's Market...

...offers an alternative to capitalism

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

Located in the southeast corner of the first floor of the Student Union building is a small non-profit food store that served over 500 people a day last semester, making about $6,000-7,000 per week.

Known as The People's Market, it was first established in 1973 against capitalism and profiteering in traditional grocery stores.

The idea for The People's Market first came from a nation-wide student government conference held during the summer of 1972 and attended by the UMass members. The idea was also picked up from other schools, according to the founders of the market, Ellen Gavin and Gail Sullivan, who felt students and other people were being charged too much at the grocery stores.

As a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) member, there are no overhead expenses and it is student-operated at minimal wages with the employees working ten hours a week volunteering two hours without pay.

For those who have shopped at the market in the past, and for those who will be discovering the store for the first time, a clean, colorful and pleasant atmosphere awaits you Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 8:45 to 5:30 p.m., and Saturday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The store has more than tripled its sales since its opening four years ago, according to Ann Surley, an employee of the store, "We've gotten away from the cliche of being a hippy place. It's now much more open. Being clean is important. We used to have old furniture which made it look like a warehouse. How can you sell health foods in a dirty store?"

Although The People's Market sells vegetables, fruits, grains, yogurt, and nuts, it does not want to be known as just a health food store. It carries a wide variety of products, including meat-type products, but stays away from foods with heavy preservatives, candy, and those with no nutritional value.

Coordinator Mark Levitan said the food only has to be marked up very little in proportion with traditional grocery stores for several reasons. Although they deal with local venders, many goods are directly supplied from wholesalers who deal mainly with food co-operatives.

Pierpont coalition successful

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

There are some students who believe when an order comes down from the higher administrative levels of the University, there is nothing to do but abide by it. But not many of these students live in Pierpont.

When the news came to the students of Pierpont House in Southwest last Thursday night that students from the Campus Center Hotel would be living in the Pierpont student lounges as temporary, and possibly permanent housing, the Pierpont Coalition was formed.

The Pierpont Coalition was dedicated to two things: preserving the lounges in Pierpont for use by the students in the dorm, and to finding permanent housing for the students in the hotel.

"We want an answer for these people," said a spokesman for the Coalition, "but we want an answer that we can all agree with. We're not going to lock our doors and let the people from the Campus Center wander around in the cold."

Students in Pierpont slept in their lounges Thursday night so that no room furniture could be moved in. Many of the students were up at 7 a.m., ready to block any University employes from moving any furniture.

When a truck from the Physical Plant came at 9:30 a.m., 75 students gathered at the back door within minutes, shouting and chanting. Two apprehensive Physical Plant workers reluctantly unloaded their cargo: a duplicating machine for the head of residence.

A rally staged Friday afternoon attended by 150 students helped win the Pierpont Coalition one of their demands, and the University agreed not to move any students into the Pierpont lounges.

But even after they had won this agreement, the Pierpont Caolition kept working with the students in the hotel. It was Sunday night before members of the Coalition secured the last of their objectives, and each student living in the Campus Center Hotel knew where he stood with the University.

Selectmen begin trust account effort

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen tonight will begin an effort to establish a security deposit trust account for the tenants and landlords of Amherst.

The trust account would hold the security deposits of area tenants in an interest bearing account which would remain unaffected if an apartment complex should go bankrupt. This account would also protect tenant security deposits in the case of tenant-landlord disputes.

The town of Amherst must ask the General Court of Massachusetts to enact a Home Rule Bill giving the town authority to set up such an account, according to Diana Romer, chairperson of the Board of Selectmen.

The selectmen will vote to ask Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst), to file the bill with the General Court tomorrow. If passed, this Home Rule Bill would establish a security deposit trust account system for the town of Amherst.

"Under this system, the town manager of Amherst would designate a bank to hold such an account when the landlord and tenant sign the lease," said Romer.

The tenant security deposit would be placed in a joint account in that bank.

In other business, the selectmen are expected to dissolve the Cable Committee, a committee formed a few years ago to act as a liaison between the Cable Vision Co. and community users. Appointments were never made to the committee.

"It was simply a case of disestablishing a never appointed committee," said Romer.

Other items on the agenda include the setting of next spring's election calendar, the determination of budget guidelines, committee appointments, and the announcement of the Belchertown Parade, slated for October 15.

The Board of Selectmen's Meeting tonight will be held at 7:30 in the Town Room of the Town Hall.

South Africa Committee holds teach-in

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa will hold an all day teach-in today in rooms 904 - 908 of the Campus Center to educate students to the conditions of South Africa in preparation for a rally to be held at this Wednesday's Board of Trustees meeting.

At their Wednesday meeting, board members will vote whether or not to sell UMass owned stocks in companies with interests in South Africa. The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa hopes to pressure the board into selling the approximately $550,000 worth of stock by presenting them with petitions signed by University students.

The Committee urged the board, in an open letter, to participate in today's activities.

Kidnapers freed

NEWTON, N.C. [UPI] — Two suspects in the $150,000 kidnaping of a Tennessee banker's daughter were captured Sunday when a highway patrol cruiser smashed into their station wagon soon after the hostage was released unharmed.

Police said more than $148,000 of the ransom paid for Annette Adams, 19, had been recovered following the arrests of Wayne Garrity, 29, and Shelby Ann Baker, 28, of Statesville, N.C.

They were arrested at Hickory, N.C., when the police cruiser sped into a motel parking lot and rammed their station wagon into a large trash bin.

Edgar Best, agent in charge of the Charlotte FBI office, said the two would be arraigned before a U.S. Magistrate in Charlotte on charges of kidnaping the Vanderbilt University coed.

Miss Adams was dragged screaming into a stolen car as she was leaving a fraternity party on the university's Nashville, Tenn., campus Thursday night.

The suspects were captured about six hours after Miss Adams was released by her abductors outside a motel at Morganton, about 20 miles west of Hickory.

"That's what I get for being a nice guy," Garrity growled. "I should have tied her to a tree and put a piece of tape over her mouth.

"That old Chevy wouldn't do but about 80. I looked in my rear view mirror one time and all I could see was highway patrol cars spinning around in the road."

Miss Adams, daughter of Maryville, Tenn., bank president W.C. "Billy" Adams, was seized outside the Sigma Nu fraternity house at Nashville at 8:50 p.m. Thursday.

Her parents arranged for the ransom drop in Knoxville, Tenn., Saturday night during the cover of heavy traffic that followed the Tennessee-California football game, and she was released at 3:40 a.m. yesterday.

Federal authorities asked for and received cooperation for news agencies to stifle the story because of alleged threats from the kidnapers that Miss Adams would be killed if authorities were notified of the kidnaping.

Miss Adams was tearfully reunited with her parents at Morganton, and then returned to her Maryville home with them following questioning by the FBI.

"They never threatened me," she said. "I was blindfolded most of the time, but I could generally tell where I was by leaks in the blindfold."

Best said the kidnapers switched cars at least three times and released Miss Adams near a Holiday Inn at Morganton after giving her $25. Miss Adams immediately notified police and a concentrated search for her abductors began.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Wayne Garrity and Shelby Ann Baker, embrace just prior to yesterday's hearing during which they were held under $250,000 bonds each on charges of kidnaping Annette Adams, a Vanderbilt University student.

Emmy Awards presented

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Four months late, the Emmy awards were ready for presentation on television last night, recognizing achievements on the home screen during the 1976-77 season.

If the 29th awards show had a familiar look, that was because many of the achievements, particularly "Roots" had already been acclaimed on other award telecasts by the time the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences was able to put its show on the NBC television network.

"Roots," a series that dramatized Alex Haley's history of a family that experienced slavery in America, was nominated for a record 37 awards. The nominations included all of those for a lead actor in a single performance — John Amos, LeVar Burton, Louis Gossett Jr. and Ben Vereen. Also, four of the five nominees for supporting actor in a comedy or drama series were from "Roots" — Ed Asner, Moses Gunn, Robert Reed and Ralph Waite.

Emmy presentations were late this year because of an East-West squabble between members of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

The Emmies were scheduled to be presented last May, but the Hollywood chapter of the television Academy staged a walkout, saying the organization was dominated by trustees in New York and other cities. Most series stars refused to appear on the NBC broadcast and the network found itself without a show.

After court suits and cross-country accusations, a compromise was reached. The prime-time awards would be presented by the Hollywood people; the National Academy would handle the rest. But the two units remained divided. Hollywood formed its own organization, separate from the Easterners.

Appearing as emcees were Robert Blake of "Baretta" and Angie Dickinson of "Police Woman." The event was held in suburban Pasadena at the city's Civic Auditorium.

The Hollywood contingent turned out as award presenters Carol Burnett, Harvey Korman, Mary Tyler Moore, Alan Alda, Hal Linden, Peter Falk, Lee and Farrah Fawcett-Majors, Henry Winkler, Jack Klugman, Dick Van Dyke, Don Rickles, Jack Albertson, and Gabe Kaplan.

Also shining were a distinguished group from television's past: Milton Berle, Robert Young, Jane Wyatt, Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca, Phil Silvers, Alfred Hitchcock.

Nominations covered the period from March 16, 1976, to March 13, 1977. A total of 316 nominees were competing in 40 categories.

SAT's same since 50's

STORRS, Conn. [UPI] — It's time for a national task force to review and revise the Scholastic Aptitude Test before it becomes an "anachronism," says University of Connecticut President Glenn Ferguson.

Ferguson, in an interview published Monday in the University of Connecticut Daily Campus, said the review of the test — a factor in who gets into college — is dictated by the continuing decline in SAT scores nationally.

A national panel last month said the dip in scores compared to those earned by students in previous years was caused by many factors, including a change in emphasis at schools and the influence of television.

Ferguson said he didn't think the decline in SAT scores is because students are less intelligent than in years past, but because they are taking a test that is becoming outdated.

He said the exam is, "still good, but it may become an anachronism in time if it is not reviewed and updated.'

Ferguson said about 15,000 students apply to UConn each year — about five applicants for each opening. And they took essentially the same SAT when he applied to college in the early 1950s.

Lt. Pamela Chelgren, 28, Port Orchard, Washington, will be a field operations officer aboard the NOAA's 162-foot hydrographic survey ship, Pierce. Her duties include the scheduling and reviewing of the ship's hydrographic work.

World economy

WASHINGTON [AP] — The world economy is characterized by high unemployment and serious inflation in many countries and there is little likelihood of any rapid improvement, the International Monetary Fund said yesterday.

The fund said it will require "skill, patience and courage" on the part of many governments to keep the situation from getting worse.

In it's annual report, the IMF said unemployment in the industrial nations during the first half of this year was still near the peak levels of the 1974-75 recession.

It attributed the failure to reduce unemployment "mainly to the moderate pace of output growth, which has barely offset" the normal growth in the labor force in most countries.

"Economic growth rates are generally subnormal in a setting of high unemployment, excess plant capacity and lagging investment. Inflation is also a widespread problem," the IMF said.

The report said the United States has done better than most in reducing both inflation and unemployment, although the jobless rate was still high at 7.1 per cent last month. It hit 9 per cent during the recession.

Fears of exacerbating inflation are preventing most nations from promoting more rapid growth of their economies to reduce the jobless rate, the IMF report said.

The IMF, which seeks to promote international monetary co-operation and currency stabilization in the non-Communist world, has 130 members, including the United States. It will hold its annual meeting jointly with the World Bank in Washington beginning Sept. 26.

While progress in improving the economy has been slow in most nations, the IMF report said a gradual approach is probably the only way to proceed without making the problems of inflation and unemployment worse.

'Fete de L'Humanite'

PARIS [AP] — Stalinist chants mingled in the air with Nashville sounds and Brittany bagpipes yesterday as French Communists, confident of new political power, turned out by the trainload for their giant annual fair.

The two-day "Fete de L'Humanite," sponsored by the party's daily paper, attracted hundreds of thousands. Some were nonsympathizers who came for the rides and bargains, but the air was thick with politics.

The fair, a popular French institution since 1930, took on new importance this year because public opinion polls show the Communists and Socialists may win 54 per cent of the vote in crucial national legislative elections in March.

One teacher, who waited with his wife and aging mother for party leader Georges Marchais to autograph a political tract, told a reporter: "There will be a change after March. Why else have we fought for so long?"

Marchais told cheering crowds at the huge sports field on the outskirts of Paris he would not let the Socialists water down the left-wing program.

"We want the workers, all citizens, to take an active part tomorrow in running their country," he said.

Polls say the Communists can expect 22 per cent of the March vote, 10 percentage points fewer than their Socialist partners.

The two parties have fought bitterly over their joint platform, drafted in 1972, and Marchais is to meet this month with Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand to seek new accords and concessions.

The atmosphere at the "fete" had something of a World's Fair, a party congress and Woodstock.

Miriam Makeba sang songs of her native South Africa on one stage, and Moscow's Bolshoi Choir performed on another. From a distant loudspeaker an Irish tenor crooned, "We shall overcome."

Communist newspapers and organizations from 57 countries set up stands in the fair's "International City."

In the Soviet Union's, crowds picked up free books on communism. At Vietnam's, they jostled for greasy spring rolls. The Palestine Liberation Organization sold posters, the Uruguayans made gaucho-style barbecued meat and the Cubans poured out rum with mint sprigs.

Widow held prisoner

NEW YORK [UPI] — A woman and her boyfriend have been charged with holding a widow prisoner for nine months, assaulting her with baseball bats and lighted cigarettes and shaving her head, authorities said Sunday.

The 37-year-old widow, Marie Nievies, wearing only a raincoat and a tattered pair of shoes, called police Friday after a friend convinced her that a crippled daughter could not be helped by her woman captor, police said.

Mary Hernandez, 28, was arrested Friday and her 27-year-old boyfriend, Eleuterio Torres, was picked up Saturday, authorities said.

Both were charged with kidnaping, assault, grant larceny, unlawful imprisonment, endangering the welfare of a minor and possession of a dangerous weapon. Miss Hernandez, described by neighbors as a palm reader, was also charged with coercion.

Housing Authority policeman Anthony Nicoletti said Mrs. Nievies told them she had been held in Miss Hernandez' housing project apartment on Manhattan's Lower East Side since last November.

Nicoletti said the apartment was decorated in red with numerous altars and statues placed around the rooms.

Mrs. Nievies' captor told her if she stayed she would use her religious powers to help the woman's crippled 15-year-old daughter, Carmen, police said.

But during her stay, the widow was beaten with baseball bats and kicked by Miss Hernandez, Torres and even by her own 16-year-old son, authorities said. She also was burned with cigarettes and forced to sign over her Social Security checks, police said.

Nicoletti said the woman told him she was not allowed to take a bath for months at a time.

She said she was sent out on errands, but that her captors threatened to kill her daughter if she talked.

Mrs. Nievies was treated at Gouverneur Hospital for multiple bruises and released, police said.

U.S. economy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A survey of top business executives reveals queasiness about the administration's economic policies and a desire to learn President Carter's specific priorities, U.S. News & World Report said Sunday.

The magazine published brief comments from 13 of the nation's business leaders and most of the executives indicated they are confused about which direction the administration is headed.

They applauded the White House for engineering an energy package through Congress, but criticized the program for putting too much emphasis on lower fuel costs and too little on finding more fuel.

Their chief desire, U.S. News said, is tax reform that will provide more incentive for capital investment.

A few of their comments:

—James J. O'Leary, vice chairman, United States Trust Co. of New York: "The administration really hasn't been tested yet. But now, for the first time, the White House is in danger of making a false move because there's a great deal of uncertainty about where the economy is going from here."

—E. Robert Kinney, chairman, General Mills, Inc.: "The worst economic disease world-wide is still inflation, and the administration must continue definite policies to discourage rising prices. We want to avoid wage and price controls which lead to all sorts of problems."

—George Blakely, chairman, Cabot, Cabot and Forbes Co.: "I think the jury is still out on White House economic policy.... Much will depend on the kind of tax reforms that the president will put forth.

"If the president would come out with a tax package that encourages investment — with features like an end to the double taxation of dividends — business and investors would feel much better about risk taking. But if those reforms turn out to be a package of socialism, the effects will be harmful."

—Paul Oreffice, president, Dow Chemical: "My main criticism of the Carter economic policy is the confusion that it has promoted... There's talk of taxing capital gains at the full rate, but you don't see anyone recommending that losses be deducted in full. Aş it stands now, there's not enough economic incentive for companies to go ahead with major spending plans."

—Robert Campion, chairman, Lear Siegler: "President Kennedy got people excited by setting a goal of reaching the moon. Now, we need someone to put forth some long-range economic goals that can be achieved. There's too much shooting from the hip."

Against concorde

WASHINGTON [UPI] About 200 demonstrators, led by a group of Scottish bagpapers and drummers dressed in kilts, marched Sunday outside the White House gates to protest supersonic Concorde landings in New York.

The demonstrators, most of them from the area around Kennedy airport in Queens, carried signs calling on President Carter to block landings by the Anglo-French aircraft.

One of the leaders of the group, Charles Love of Queens, pointed at the White House and complained Carter, "can't support his energy program and turn around and let those things fly... I could heat my house for a year on the fuel one of them burns on a single trip."

The Ford administration approved a 16-month trial period of SST landings in New York and Washington. Court fights in New York have blocked the landings. The plane has been using Dulles International Airport in suburban Washington for months.

Carter has endorsed the government's decision to allow the planes to land on a test basis, but has made no long range commitment on future flights.

"Everything is going to be decided here," Love said, " hat's why we came."

"Once they start to land, we're dead, there's no hope then," he said.

The group made a one-day trip on chartered buses. State Sen. Sheldon Farber, of Queens, said the SST controversy "is not merely a fight by residents surrounding Kennedy Airport to protect their homes, but involves major issues of state's and individual's rights versus those of the federal government."

Homeowners were having property "expropriated without proper condemnation awards being made to the citizens whose homes will be considerably diminished in value by severe noise pollution."

Chase in Washington

WASHINGTON [UPI] — For three years, Goodwin Chase was a lonesome dissenter. On the government board where he served, he was consistently outvoted, 4-1, 4-1, 4-1, 4-1.

So he decided to quit the government. The ex-banker packed up his pinstripes, shipped his furniture home, sold his apartment at the Watergate and prepared to resume retirement in his beloved Tacoma, Wash.

Then Jimmy Carter took office and fired the other members of the federal Renegotiation Board. Carter asked Chase to stay on — as chairman — and permitted him to select two more members, making sure the Chase viewpoint prevailed. Two other seats on the board remain vacant.

Chase bought another apartment at the Watergate.

Now the lonely dissenter is leading the charge against "excess profits."

The Renegotiation Board is an obscure government auditing agency with the job of studying the profits earned by defense contractors and "recapturing" those it finds to be excessive.

Over the past 24 years, it recaptured $1.4 billion.

But Chase says that was nothing. If the board had been up to snuff, he says, the amount collected would have been "staggering."

"Millions, countless millions, if not billions, of dollars have escaped the Treasury Department," because of the "lenient, permissive" actions of the board under the Nixon and Ford administrations, he contends.

Chase, 66, is a distant descendant of Solomon Chase, founder of the Chase Manhattan Bank, and of populist William Jennings Bryan, who the Democrats ran for president in 1896, 1900 and 1908.

So there is a streak of populism in this plainspoken big businessman.

Chase never finished college and once pumped gasoline to support his divorced mother.

During the New Deal, he had been a government bank inspector on the West Coast when he saw a business opportunity, borrowed $2,600 from a friend and bought an interest in a small bank in Ellensburg, Wash. That deal launched his business career.

Anti Semitism

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina [AP] — The other day the Tikvah Delicatessen here was crowded with shoppers buying honey and a sweet bread called jalot for the Jewish New Year holiday of Rosh Hashana, which begins at sundown today.

"We hope the new year may bring better tidings for the Jews of Argentina," the store owner told a visitor.

Newspapers on that day carried stories of the abduction of a Jewish couple. Foreign diplomats were working behind the scenes to obtain the release of a Jewish family of five kidnaped earlier by 12 armed men identified unofficially as security agents.

The abductions were the latest in a long string of incidents involving Jews here. They have revived suspicions that anti-Semitism is tolerated and even fostered in Argentina by government leaders.

The military regime denies this, and Jewish leaders agree that there is no official anti-Semitic campaign. They blame it on what they describe as small neo-Nazi terrorist groups, some military officers and segments of the Argentine news media. But they also accuse the government of doing nothing to counter it.

Anti-Semitic outbursts have occurred here before, but the current situation is believed to be the most virulent. It started late last year, coinciding with a step-up in the military's campaign against leftist guerrillas.

First came bombings and machine-gun attacks on synagogues and Jewish-owned shops. Thooe actions were blamed on the neo-Nazi terrorists.

This year Jews have been kidnaped by armed groups. Some Jewish leaders estimate that 30 to 50 Jews have disappeared this year. At least 2,000 persons in all have been reported kidnaped this year.

A rise in incidents of anti-Semitism coincides with the "Graiver Case," a major financial scandal involving prominent Jews. The case stems from a military investigation into the financial dealings of an Argentine-Jewish banker, David Graiver, perhaps one of Argentina's wealthiest persons. He was reported killed in a plane crash near Acapulco, Mexico, on Aug. 7, 1976.

Left-wing guerrillas here allegedly deposited millions of dollars from kidnap ransoms in Graiver banks to finance their operations. The probe has resulted in the arrests of scores of persons, mostly Jews, including relatives of Graiver and the editor of the newspaper La Opinion, seized by the government shortly after the editor's detention.

Some right-wing newspapers and magazines claimed the scandal stemmed from a Jewish conspiracy to destroy the Argentine lifestyle.

The Buenos Aires monthly political magazine Cabildo, widely regarded as neo-Nazi, said in an editorial last May that the military government "should fix the Jewish problem" by removing Jews from Argentine's political and economic mainstream.

The editorial triggered a protest note from Argentine Jewish leaders to the military government. It said in part: "Obscure and pogromist forces are at work in this country."

Despite all this, the Jewish leaders say they are unwilling to make public protests.

The Jews say they believe they are being singled out because security forces have long believed that Jews and Communists are allied.

"It all goes back to Marx and to the fact that many Argentines have a background of extreme Roman Catholicism with deep anti-Jewish psychologist.

During World War II, Argentina supported Nazi Germany and since then few Jews have achieved prominence in the military. At present not a single Argentine general is Jewish and no Jews hold top government posts.

Argentina has more than 500,000 persons of Jewish origin, constituting the largest Jewish community in Latin America. Argentina's population is about 26 million, mostly of Italian and Spanish descent.

Recently the liberal political newsletter Ultima Clave, said to have links with moderate elements in the army, reported that several neo-Nazi indoctrination centers have sprung up around Buenos Aires and Cordoba, Argentina's second largest city, 450 miles to the north.

A few Jews and others who have been released from abduction said they had been held in places containing such Nazi paraphernalia as portraits of Adolph Hitler. They also claimed that men in military uniforms had called them "dirty Jews" and made other anti-Semitic remarks.

In spite of the abductions and the reports of a rise in neo-Nazism, some of the Jews in Buenos Aires seemed unconcerned about their own safety as they prepared for Rosh Hashana.

J. Fluher, owner of a leather goods shop across from the Tikvah Delicatessen, said:

"I'm aware of certain problems of anti-Semitism here, but I have not been affected and as far as I can tell, Argentina's main problems are a bad economy, terrorism and political bickering. These things are more important."

Cubans sent to Angola

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa [UPI] — About 4,000 Cubans were sent to Angola recently to stabilize the nation's "most serious crisis" since the 1976 civil war, the South African Press Association said Sunday.

"Economic problems and stepped up guerrilla activity by liberation movements ... were creating grave problems" for the government of President Agostinho Neto, the agency said, quoting sources from Angola.

In the past two months guerrillas in central Angola have captured four towns previously held by government troops and the morale of government forces in the south is "at an all-time low," it said.

"This was aggravated by tension between government soldiers and Cubans," it said. "The Cubans were reported to plan operations against guerrilla forces, but they were reluctant to make contact themselves.

"It had become imperative for President Neto to stabilize the situation in his country and for this purpose another 4,000 Cubans were allowed into Angola recently," the newspaper said quoting sources.

The 4,000 Cuban troops would increase to 19,000 the estimated strength of Cuban troops in Angola and Cabinda, a tiny Angolan enclave to the north separated from the nation by Zaire's entrance to the sea.

The news agency also reported that a group of local journalists had been taken on an official tour of security forces operations on the Southwest African border with Angola.

"I BET MY MOTHER $5 SHE COULDN'T LOSE 30 LBS."

"In April, I bet my mother $5 she couldn't lose 30 pounds on her own in ten weeks. Her weight was 164. She took the bet. . .for many reasons, one being back trouble and because fat is ugly. Ten weeks went by and she didn't reach her goal. I won the bet.

My mother didn't give up. She went to Gloria Stevens Figure Salon, starting on June 21. By October, she had lost 30 pounds and looked great. Now my mother weighs 128 pounds, only eight more pounds than I. Some people think we are sisters instead of mother and daughter. I just want to say how proud we all are of her. Long live Gloria Stevens."

WORK STUDY JOBS AVAILABLE
SCER RESOURCE CENTER

Several work study students are needed to help staff SCER's Resource Center/Library. The Resource Center is a computerized access system for information pertaining to educational change, higher education and student empowerment. Documents are scanned, crossed referenced and entered into our computer for later access. The Resource Center works with publications, documents, periodicals and has a vigorous "outreach" program to obtain material from other campus organizations and agencies.

The following positions are available:

Coder/Librarians: These students will scan new material to determine subject matter and code material so that it can be entered into the computer by the typists. People will also serve as reference librarians to help students who wish to use the Resource Center.

Periodicals and Notebook Coordinator: This person would maintain SCER's reference collection of issue notebooks as well as maintain the periodicals files and bound books. It involves scanning periodicals and coding them for typists as well as evaluating new material to be included in our notebook series.

Computer Typists/Keypunchers: People are needed to type Resource Center information into the computer terminal. The terminal is similar to a typewriter, so no formal computer experience is needed, though typing skills are important.

Outreach Coordinators: Two work-study students are needed to coordinate Resource Center outreach to other organizations and agencies. Outreach Coordinators will be responsible to seek information for the Resource Center. They will work with leaders of student organizations, people involved in Student Unionization and others to see to it that SCER is meeting the information needs of our constituency.

SCER is committed to fighting racism and sexism at UMASS. Third World people and women are urged to apply.

More on Bert Lance

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., predicted Sunday this will be "decision week" for Budget Director Bert Lance, whose future has been clouded by allegations about his past banking practices.

Jackson, a member of the senate Governmental Affairs Committee, said he would not make up his mind about Lance's qualifications to continue in the budget job until after the Georgian testifies before the panel on Thursday.

"This week will be decision week, because this sort of thing can't go on any longer," he said.

Noting that federal budget preparations are underway, Jackson said: "I believe it is essential that this matter be resolved one way or the other this week."

The senator was careful to remain neutral during an interview on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," but said Lance is in a "very difficult position."

"I'm not asking him to resign at this point," he said. "I've not heard Mr. Lance and I think decency requires that he be heard."

Jackson added, however, that even if there are no violations of law shown the question will remain whether Lance's past record of performance qualifies him to serve as budget director. "I think serious questions have been raised about it ... "

One of the major items of the Senate inquiry will be why information about Lance's background was not made available earlier, he said.

Primary talk

DETROIT [UPI] — Democratic rules reformers yesterday backed a plan to eliminate New Hampshire's lock on the first primary of presidential election years.

But the party's 58-member reform commission split down the middle on proposals to police a proposed ban on presidential primaries earlier than mid-March.

Half of the commission headed by Michigan Democratic Chairman Morley Winograd supported a tough enforcement plan offered by Rep. Donald Fraser, D-Minn. Half the commission voted for an alternate by White House aide Mark Siegal that could open a loophole for New Hampshire.

The thrust of the original plan was to dilute New Hampshire's impact on the nominating process by requiring all Democratic primaries and delegate selection caucases to be held in a 13-week period beginning the second Tuesday in March.

Last year, there were 31 presidential primaries in the 54 states and territories that sent delegates to the party's national convention. New Hampshire held its 1976 primary last year on Feb. 24 under a law requiring the state to hold its presidential primary one week ahead of any other. Jimmy Carter won the Democratic contest.

The commission also gave majority support to a proposal that would deny national convention delegates to candidates who receive less than 15 per cent of the vote during primaries in the first month of the season; 20 per cent during the second month; and 25 per cent during the final four weeks.

The cut-off in 1976 was 15 per cent, but the White House has been backing an increase to 25 per cent.

Proposals by the commission will be sent to state Democratic parties and the national committee. Its final recommendation will be made to the national party next winter.

If the three-month limit on holding primaries is adopted, state parties could risk having their convention delegations denied seats if they were chosen outside the March-June "window."

The party law also provides exemptions for states whose Democrats cannot get their election law changed to conform with national Democratic rules. That might happen in Republican dominated New Hampshire.

The Fraser enforcement plan would require New Hampshire in that event to come up with some other delegate system such as caucus selection. Siegal's proposal would not change present enforcement, but would block states now holding primaries within the "window" period to change to earlier dates. That was viewed as a possible loophole to let New Hampshire continue as the first primary state in the nation.

The commission also adopted a proposed policy statement which said it was opposed to compulsory national and regional presidential primaries. About half the members voted for a statement expressing support for a heavier emphasis on delegate selection caucases in the states.

UMass' refugees

For the 50 or so new students who are still forced to call the Campus Center Hotel "home," the UMass experience has proven to be one of frustration and uncertainty. Not knowing where they will be sleeping from one day to the next, and occasionally being moved from one floor to another, these students have found studying, let alone leading a 'normal' college lifestyle, next to impossible.

Now, some two weeks after the initial housing "crisis" began, most students have been filtered into the dorm system. Those who remain are understandably bitter, particularly after a weekend of being shuffled and confused by University administrators.

For the administration's part, a considerable effort was made to find space for the students. Unfortunately for the Campus Center occupants, the administrators have also been unable to get their story straight, resulting in repeated misunderstandings about when and under what conditions the students would be moved out. To many in the hotel, it appeared that they would be forced into rooms and lounges against their will, despite a Friday agreement that such moves would require the consent of all parties involved — students and dormitory officials included.

Hopefully, when the present agreement is finally clarified for all concerned, the situation will be under control. Still, some students will remain in the hotel until openings gradually appear in the dorms. It is understandable, if not quite practical, that those students would wish to have the fifth floor of the hotel, where they now reside, converted into a dorm for the remainder of the semester. The sooner they can be moved into permanent locations, the better.

The waiting will continue: meanwhile, some thanks are in order to all those students, housing officials, and dormitory officials who have worked countless extra hours trying to alleviate the problem.

Perhaps the administration, which is ultimately to blame for this foible, can arrive at some way to remunerate the students who have survived the hassle rather admirably. More than mere apologies are in order.

Students in hotel state demands

To the Editor:

We the students now residing on the fifth floor of the Campus Center hotel wish to be heard! We are all new to the University, and because of our ignorance of university procedure and the rights and resources which are ours we have been taken advantage of by the administration. Because of the housing dilemma this semester, we have not been able to settle down to the University life which is taken for granted by most other University students.

We've paid for an education, and we can't study because we're constantly being moved and harassed. We've paid for a regular dorm room and there aren't enough to go around. We've paid our Campus Center fee, and we are being intimidated into leaving and going into dorm lounges, despite assurances from Vice Chancellor Woodbury, Dean of Students Field, and Fred Preston from the housing office that we would not be forced into these lounges and would be allowed to see the rooms before moving in. We do not want to live in dormitory lounges and we will not be forced or threatened with expulsion if we don't. Some of us have been moved three and four times within a week, and we have decided that we are tired of being moved.

Dean of Students Field has said that he is concerned for our welfare and that he wishes us to experience the community of dorm life. We feel that in terms of community feeling, meaningful relationships, and the other benefits of dormitory living, we have established those qualities securely on this corridor of the hotel. In view of this, we demand that the fifth floor of the Campus Center Hotel be declared an official residence for the remainder of the semester, and be granted the rights, restrictions and privileges of any other residence hall on campus. We are prepared not to leave our rooms under any circumstances. After living in the hotel for two weeks, we feel that we would be most uncomfortable moving into a residence hall where relationships are already established, and furthermore, that we in turn would be resented by the house residents if we moved into their lounges.

We would like to thank those who have stood by us, advised us of our rights, and supported us through this ordeal — especially Pierpont dorm, Legal Services, and those news agencies which have taken an interest and covered the story.

In conclusion, we feel that the purpose of any institution of higher learning is to provide quality education for all who pay to attend. The longer we are shuffled about and refused our rights, the longer we clog the entire University system and decrease the quality of education at UMass-Amherst for all.

Editorial misrepresents PIRG

To the Editor:

In last Friday's Collegian, Dan Paradis discussed MassPIRG's involvement in the asbestos issue. I would like to clarify and expand upon several of the points he made, because of the pressing health problems which asbestos presents to workers and their families, and potentially to consumers and city dwellers as well. It is critical to make clear the actions which workers, citizens and MassPIRG can take to alleviate the cancer perils posed by this persistent and ubiquitous dust.

MassPIRG's invovlement in the asbestos issue began by monitoring the work of the Massachusetts Asbestos Commission and assisting in their search for legislative funding for their work. Having received $50,000 from the legislature, the Commission is aggressively seeking to detect and eliminate the possible hazard of deteriorating asbestos ceilings in public schools throughout the Commonwealth.

As a second activity in asbestos health hazards, PIRG is undertaking a project concerning brake repair and automobile mechanics. One million garage workers in the United States are exposed to large amounts of asbestos dust released during the "blow out" process of repairing brakes. Proper work place procedures are needed to alleviate this hazard. PIRG researchers will contact brake mechanics throughout the Amherst-Northampton area to alert them of this hazard.

Collegian readers interested in learning more about asbestos-related health hazards should consult MassPIRG's fall newsletter. Students are also urged to attend MassPIRG's first general meeting of the year on Tuesday, September 13, at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center 162, to find out what PIRG is doing not only about asbestos, but Nuclear Power, Consumer Protection, and Telephone Company rif-offs.

Making a difference

By STEVE SHULMAN

—53 per cent of all black children die before the age of five in South Africa.

—Blacks earn 20 times less than whites in South Africa.

—Blacks have no civil liberties in South Africa.

—There is one doctor for every 415 whites and one for every 100,000 blacks in South Africa.

—Apartheid is the legal system of racial separation which legitimizes white minority rule.

—U.S. corporations in South Africa have a profit rate nearly double the world-wide average.

Is anyone wondering about the relevance of these facts to this (our local heaven-on-earth) campus?

Some of you may not remember and some of you may not have been here, but last semester there was a periodic commotion due to the University's financial connection with South Africa. It seemed that UMass owned well over $600,000 in sixteen multinational corporations with South African investments. Since these corporations provided military and financial support to the white supremecist regime, the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa decided that the best support we could give to the black freedom fighters would be to force the University to sell that stock and publicize its reasons for doing so. This would also publicize University complicity and thereby strengthen the resistance to local racism. Similar demands have been made around the country in a rapidly growing movement against U.S. support of apartheid (this summer there was a California conference of 50 anti-apartheid university groups). So we circulated petitions, wrote letters, and held rallies and teach-ins.

From the trustees' point of view, the commotion must have seemed like an embarrassment if not downright subversion. In a display of rational social conscience, they issued a statement condemning apartheid and then proceeded to buy an additional $20,000 of the South African stock.

Thanks a lot.

From our point of view, the commotion was a welcome exercise in survival and growth. Survival for white as well as black people in the beginnings of a unified resistance to the profiteers who create and capitalize on the mass misery which stretches from New York to Hong Kong. Growth towards the human side of being by taking the responsibility to change the conditions which reduce all of us to pettiness and prejudice. And with results: the issue became widely discussed, a variety of people became involved, the trustees were forced to respond, and our work spread into the community over the summer.

This week the trustees will vote on whether or not to sell that stock. We will gather to present them with our petitions and our presence on Wednesday at 1:30 in Memorial Hall. We hope everyone who opposes racism will join us.

But your involvement should be an informed one. Today in room 904-908 in the Campus Cenner there will be a teach-in with some extremely interesting people:

11 a.m. - Ann Seidman, a professor of economics who spent six years in South Africa, will discuss the role of transnational corporations.
1 p.m. - Nana Seshibe, exchange student from South Africa and coordinator for Africa at the Center for International Education, will be speaking on the refugee problem in Southern Africa.
2 p.m. - Bheki Langa, the head of the Center for Racial Understanding, will be speaking on the history of oppression in Southern Africa.
3 p.m. - Slide show.
3:30 p.m. - Gregg Williams, Third World peace education staff person for the American Friends Service Committee who just returned from the border states of South Africa last week, will speak on "Southern Africa: View of the Front Line States."
6 p.m. - Film showing of "Last Grave at Dimbaza," an excellent documentary illegally taken in South Africa and well worth seeing more than once.
7:30 p.m. - A rally organizing party with music, coffee, and poster materials in the Center for Racial Understanding, Moore House - Southwest.

Racism affects all of us. Drop by our table in the Campus Center to talk about it. Come to the teach-in today and the rally on Wednesday. You can't wish it away. What you do makes a difference.

A long, long time ago, in a city far, far away...

paul yanowitch

"Baby, let your hair hang down, let it all hang down". While this mere bastardization of some a.m. melodramatic tune may not symbolize much to the happy residents of this peaceful valley, as it is so often referred to, it does represent incalculable pleasure to the battered, scared and weary denizens of New York City.

David Berkowitz, allegedly the infamous Son of Sam, is in the process of being arranged in various hospitals around the City, with each borough District Attorney anxiously awaiting the chance to barbecue Berkowitz over a blazing fire, provided gratis by 12 good and true men and women. A lottery may be held to decide which borough to try him in; this way, you include the community in its own legal affairs, produce harmony and similar virtues within disparate populations (black, white, brown, red and green, all lynching together, side by side), and raise money for some housing project.

While it may be a bit hasty to call Berkowitz the prodigal son, his appearance has certainly produced a noticeable ebullience in the normally dour character of the cities residents. For the first time in what seems an eternity, the front page is not reminding us of police ineffectiveness and an ever present threat; women are returning to the quaint practice of shyly admitting that they are 21; hats and caps have all but disappeared from the heads of young ladies, as have all attempts to appear older than one actually is, aided by affected gestures, artificially colored hair, limps, appearance of semi-baldness. In fact, long hair swaying in the morning breeze is making its deserved return, along with the temporarily depressed sales of cosmetics, redolent fragnances and shampoos, contraceptives and similar items.

However, now that the miesma has cleared a bit, the sidewalk judges and gutter lawyers are picking up where they left off, speculating on the destiny of Mr. Berkowitz in the courts. The usual rumors are circulating, either that he will go free, or be paroled by 1980. I do not believe so. I would hazard a guess that he will be dead or lynched before he hits the streets again — New York's a rough town. He has been found mentally incompetant to stand trial, meaning that psychiatrists have determined that he is either incapable of comprehending the proceedings going on around him, or he is incapable of aiding to his defense. The former seems a bit hard to swallow, as he was a blue collar worker for 3 years, performing adequately in a somewhat complex environment. The latter, therefore, appears to be the reason for the finding, and if the Court accepts such a finding, Mr. Berkowitz will be kept in a mental hospital until he is determined competant to stand trial. If he does, he may still plead innocent by reason of temporary insanity, and if 12 people believe him, he will revert back to the hospital. If found guilty, he will assuredly spend many years, if not the rest of his life, behind bars. It all depends on the frailty of our memories.

As in all other major murder cases, the death penalty issue rises to the surface, as angry residents clamor for the ultimate solution. Liberals who oppose the death penalty are forced back upon their heels, once again, and must put forward tired and overused philosophic and moral arguments which are for the most part, inefffectual when hurled against an angry and emotional mob. Comments such as "don't even waste five bullets on him; use one" are not uncommon. The issue has so pervaded the City that the mayoral candidates may use it as the central issue in the run-off, many political observors predict. Some have even wiped the dust off of Shirley Jacksons "The Lottery", and advocate the method of death found therein; stoning. (Who knows, it may become America's newest and last loved outdoor sport.) However, the death penalty, its advocates and combatants, must wait for another day, or column.

But now we should reflect on the episode, and attempt to learn what we can from the ashes at our feet, as so often advocated by our pedegagical mentors. What can we learn from Son of Sam?

—Newspapermen can profit extraordinarily from a good murder; Breslin, however, has a knack for getting all the good murders. Gilmore, Berkowitz, who next? If any of you are depraved and insane, write me and let me profit financially and professionally from your blinded rage; I promise to plead with you to turn yourself in, write open letters to you in major newspapers, and make you the talk of the town. I will be your bitterest enemy, and yet your greatest friend (after your captured!) I also promise to contribute your share of the movie and book proceeds to a worthwhile charity.

—Don't talk to strange dogs.

—If your neighbor blows your head off with a shotgun and scrawls funny messages all over your walls, it is time to move.

—The Daily News and the Post are first rate papers; there wasn't a rumor in the whole City that didn't eventually make its way to page one of these papers. In fact, they printed confessions, statements, rumors, evidence and any other information that touched on the Sam story, regardless of its truth, verasity or appropriateness. There is really no need to put him on trial now — all 8 million residents of New York City have the case before them, and not surprisingly have returned a verdict of guilty, by a unanimous vote.

—Disco has powerful enemies.

—It's safer to stay home and do your homework than go parking — in more ways than one.

—Develop community ties, and hold down a job before you go off the deep end — you may get out on bail!

—It's funny how parking tickets can get you in more trouble than you ever imagined — and at the most inappropriate times.

One reporter remarked that it was not really surprising that this series of events took place; it was surprising that it didn't happen more often. Well, there is always an optimistic side to consider.

Fighting the proposed nuke at Montague

nuclear power

By Members of the Hampshire County Alternative Energy Coalition

Northeast Utilities has applied for a permit from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the federal government to construct two nuclear plants with 600-foot high cooling towers on the Montague Plains. Beginning this fall, throughout the next year, public hearings on the utilities' application will be held by the licensing agencies.

The hearings are to be conducted simultaneously by the federal Nuclear Regulartory Commission (NRC), and the state Energy Facilities Siting Council (EFSC). Despite the joint hearing, each agency has the power to deny Northeast Utilities' application, and forbid the building of the Montague reactors.

The hearings will focus first on site suitability, whether the application should be denied because of possible environmental damage the two reactors could cause.

The power of the EFSC to deny the use of the site for a nuclear reactor is critical. In the past, all nuclear plants in the U.S. have been licensed only by the NRC, which acts as a lobbyist and apologist for the nuclear industry. The NRC is notorious for granting all applications for nuclear plants without objectively considering the issues involved.

The state EFSC, however, may give a fair hearing. The Montague application will be the first ever reviewed by the EFSC. The five members of the state Council include a member of the Conservation Law Foundation who will act as the Hearings Officer, the Secretary of Consumer Affairs, a representative of the Utilities, the Secretary of Environmental Affairs, and the Secretary of Manpower and Development.

INTERVENTION

Two Local intervenors in the site suitability hearings are the Franklin County Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC), and the Hampshire County Alternative Energy Coalition. These citizen's groups have actively opposed the plants at a grassroots level since it was first proposed. Other intervenors include the Attorney General of Massachusetts who is intervening on behalf of the people of the Commonwealth, the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, MassPIRG, the Town of Montague, Franklin County, and others.

These intervenors have taken on the tremendous task of opposing the plants at the hearings. The utilities have virtually unlimited resources, while the intervenors have only the support of the communities around the proposed reactors.

Successful intervention is possible if people can be found to work in several areas. The AEC attorneys need help researching issues, preparing testimony, etc. Experts are needed to aid in analysis of the issues, or to write testimony and submit to oral cross-examination. In the Five College Area, faculty members can either research and write testimony, or supervise students in doing so, and giving them credit for their work. Students could constructively direct their studies to one of the many facets of this crucial issue. People are also needed to do public education, fundraising, canvassing, media work, and other organizing tasks. Potential for stopping the Montague plants depends on people dedicating their efforts toward this goal.

To the extent that resources are available, the intervenors plan to raise the following issues:

1. The proposed reactors will damage plant, animal and micro-life in the Connecticut River, including rare species in the river as a result of:
    a. the thermal effects on the river water from plant operation;
    b. chemical effluents discharged into the river from the plants
    c. entrappment of fish and micro-organisms by the intake of river water by the plants;
    d. the heat bridge in the river caused by discharge of waste heat;
    e. the destruction of river pools and the life in them;
    f. radiological discharges into the river;
    g. erosion of the banks of the river.

2. The proposed plants will draw more than one-third of the river water during operation, seriously lowering the level of the river and:
    a. hampering or eliminating hydroelectric generation on the river;
    b. destroying agricultural land in the Connecticut River Valley, by lowering the groundwater level of the land along the river.
3. The Montague Plains, the proposed site, is a unique ecological area which could be destroyed by these reactors. The Plains are a natural aquifer, and is the water source for the town of Montague. The aquifer will be affected by:
    a. the chemical dispersion of salt and other effluents by the cooling towers;
    b. possible leaks, radiological and otherwise, from the intake and outtake pipes in the river;
    c. wastes, chemicals, and petroleum products filtering into the acquifer from plant construction, laying of pipes from the river to the plant, and levelling of acres of vegetation.

4. The effects on the geographical area include:
    a. climactic effects from the heat and water vapor from the cooling towers, including fogging, icing and clouding;
    b. environmental and health effects of the constant noise of the towers;
    c. socio-economic effects of a workforce of 9,000 needed for construction of the plant;
    d. aesthetic effects of two 600-foot towers with accelerated plumes of water vapor hundreds of feet high, visible as far as Springfield.

5. Safety and economic issues include:
    a. the dangers and expense of storing spent fuel on the site forever. After six years, 450,000 pounds of spent fuel will have accumulated;
    b. locating the reactors near earthquake faults;
    c. the refusal of the utility to pay for decommissioning of the plants after their thirty-year life, costs which could amount to more than $2 billion.
    d. the danger of transportation of nuclear wastes, and the emission of radioactivity by possible accidents;
    e. the lack of evacuation plans in case of nuclear accident.

People interested in working on the intervention to stop the Montague reactors should contact The Franklin County AEC, 773-5580, the Hampshire County AEC Intervention Office, 584-7379, or MassPIRG, 256-6434.

The lecture is sponsored by the Greenfield Recorder, one of the nearly 1,000 daily newspapers that publish Anderson's syndicated column, "Washington Merry-Go-Round."

Anderson, who won the Pulitzer Prize in Journalism in 1972, was among the major investigative reporters revealing the Watergate coverup in the White House. In a recent column, he reveals how the CIA was being used by two Watergate masterminds in trying to "do me in."

The columnist will speak on the subject, "The News Behind the Headlines," and answer audience questions.

Christian foundation programs have openings

For those who missed the open house at United Christian Foundation, there are sign-up sheets posted outside its office, 428 Student Union.

UCF is the cooperative work of nine Protestant denominations through United Ministries in Higher Education. It is ecumenical, pluralistic and seeks a balance between inner (spiritual) and outer (social action) concerns.

An informational meeting will be held Wednesday at 7 p.m., Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell, UMass. Job descriptions and application forms will be available, and questions will be answered about training, the role of the counselor-advocates, and the time commitment required.

If you are unable to attend Wednesday, or have questions, call Everywoman's Center at 545-0883.

Support group forming to help rape victims

There will be a support group for no more than eight adult (18 years and older) female rape victims who feel they are ready to integrate the experience into their lives (insofar as this is possible) and who feel a safe, non-threatening group is a good way to do this.

Each member must be committed to the full 10 weeks.

The group will meet every Monday, beginning Sept. 26, for 10 weeks from 7-9 p.m. at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell. The facilitators, Serena Lurie and Leslie Goldberg, are both counselor-advocates with the UMass Rape Task Force, and helped run a support group for rape victims last year.

Interested women should leave their names and telephone numbers at Everywoman's Center, 545-0883, during the day; in the evening, call Serena at 773-7385, or Leslie at 367-2889. Contact the center before Sept. 16.

An arm tackle is no way to stop "Sam Bam" Cunningham, as this Atlanta Falcon finds out. Cunningham and the Patriots overran the Falcons yesterday, 29-10, in both team's final exhibition game. The Patriots raised their record to 5-1, while Atlanta dropped to 3-3.

Pats clip Falcons in finale

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Steve Grogan, ignoring the pregame walkout of his two top blockers, fired a pair of second-quarter touchdowns yesterday to ignite the New England Patriots to a 29-10 pre-season victory over the Atlanta Falcons.

Before the game, guard John Hannah and tackle Leon Gray left the team after two days of contract extension talks between their agent, Howard Slusher, and the club's management.

The Patriots, who finished the exhibition season with a 5-1 mark, built a 19-0 halftime lead. Atlanta, which scored its points in a third period burst, completed the pre-season schedule with a 3-3 record.

Grogan connected on touchdown passes of 31 yards to tight end Russ Francis and 14 yards to wide receiver Darryl Stingley.

Jess Phillips added a 14-yard touchdown run, John Smith kicked field goals of 26 and 40 yards and linebacker Rod Shoate was credited with a safety for blocking a John James punt out of the end zone.

The Falcons scored early in the third period on a 63-yard pass from Steve Bartkowski to wide receiver Alfred Jenkins, and added a Nick Mick-Mayer field goal of 22 yards four minutes later.

Bartkowski, playing his second game with a brace on his right knee, reinjured the leg early in the fourth period and did not play again.

New England built a 19-0 halftime edge by outgaining the Falcons 186 yards to 53 over the first 30 minutes.

John Smith opened the scoring 3:36 into the second period with his 26-yarder that followed a short Atlanta punt.

Grogan hit Francis 2:24 later after linebacker Steve Nelson had intercepted a Bartkowski pass at the Falcon's 35-yard line.

Shoate, a third-year linebacker, blocked James' punt from the goal line at 13:29 of the second period and the Patriots notched another seven points on the next series of downs.

Rookie Raymond Clayborn returned Atlanta's free kick 26 yards to the Falcon 33. Four plays later Grogan hit Stingley, who was standing alone in the right side of the end zone, to give New England its 19-0 halftime edge.

Sox' Hobson wins TV 38's 10th player title

BOSTON [UPI] Butch Hobson was named recipient of the "Tenth Player Award," before yesterday's game between the Boston Red Sox and the Detroit Tigers.

The Red Sox third-baseman was batting .264 with 28 homers and 98 RBIs going into the game. He won a car.

The award is presented annually by WSBK-TV for "the player who has performed above and beyond the capacity one would normally expect."

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release MONDAY, Sept. 12, 1977

MONDAY, Sept. 12 — Born today, you possess a highly original, enterprising and inquiring mind – one that may lead you as often into trouble as it does into pleasurable and gainful activity. You have a taste for luxury – but you also have the common sense to realize that you cannot afford luxury at the price of burdensome indebtedness.

Yours is a more or less contented disposition: you do not yearn for what you cannot have. This doesn't mean, however, that you are not one to try for gain or that you will not try to develop your talents and abilities. On the contrary, your naturally curious nature will not allow you to sit back quietly while new and different things are going on about you.

You possess a good sense of humor, but you are somewhat inclined to hide it beneath an air of seriousness. You have a fear that others might believe you to be offering perhaps less than your best to a given endeavor were you to add laughter to the scene. Ultimately, though, you should mature enough to be able to bring to your work whatever mood is upon you – whether comic or seriousness.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, Sept. 13

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Reconsider steps recently taken where children are concerned. A change of heart and mind are in order now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Wholesome charm may not get you everything you want today – but it will certainly help. Make yourself welcome; be helpful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Though you may not find things quite the way you wish early in the day, there should not be a dangerous reversal. Cheer up at evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Cheerful companions yield cheerful hours of productive enterprise. Solemnity yields a failure late in the day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Peculiar sensations are not to be taken lightly. The Capricorn worried about his health should seek advice from a professional.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Fits of gloom could evolve into a long-lasting depression of spirit. Circumvent this by seeking help from a professional with new methods.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Allow a sense of justice to prevail – regardless of how frustrated you may become. Hold onto to good thoughts regarding children.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A desire for self-improvement may cause laughter in the "enemy" camp. In your own, however, it serves to raise the general morale.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An advantage to those dear to you is an advantage to you. Don't forget this, as you tend to feel left out of things today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Consider the degree of affliction before you bemoan its mere existence. It may be that you are more fortunate than you realize.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Success comes early to Cancer today – in spite of risks taken with matters vital to the progress of his career in general.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Work for whatever progress there is to be made. Don't refuse to put forth an effort simply becayse results do not promise to be of the best.

A LULL IN THE STORM — Guillermo Vilas (l) and Jimmy Connors pause early in their match at the US Open, with Connors clearly in command. Vilas turned things around in the second and third sets and finally routed Connors in the fourth set on his way to a 2-6, 6-3, 7-5, 6-0 triumph yesterday.

Vilas takes US Open as Connors falls apart

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [Compiled from wires] — Guillermo Vilas outfought Jimmy Connors in a dramatic third-set tie-breaker and went on to beat the defending champion 2-6, 6-3, 7-6, 6-0 yesterday, winning the U.S. Open Championship and strengthening his claim toward being the No. 1 tennis player in the world.

It was Vilas' 39th consecutive victory and seventh tournament title in a row. He has won 46 straight matches on clay or clay-like surfaces.

Connors won the opening set with surprising ease, but Vilas bounced back to take the second. With the score tied 5-5 in the third, the two traded service breaks at love, setting up a 12-point tie-breaker, won by Vilas, 7-4.

His confidence soaring after that brilliant pressure performance, Vilas went on to destroy Connors in the final set, winning it when Connors sent a forehand wide. At first, the line call was not clear, but after a brief delay, umpire John B. Conan announced, "Mr. Vilas is the winner."

Vilas, a 25-year-old left-hander from Argentina who has been the hottest in the game this year, has won 11 of the 21 tournaments he entered and made the finals of four others.

And while Connors won the World Championship Tennis final and Borg won Wimbledon, Vilas captured the prestigious French Open and now has added the U.S. Open to his list.

"I'm very happy," said Vilas, who has published well-received free verse and is regarded as one of the more intellectual playing pros. "This tournament doesn't count if you're a runner-up. You have to win it. I knew it would be very tough. My main concern is to be number one and I want to dedicate this to my country, Argentina."

Vilas, the leading moneywinner on the tour this year, earned $33,000 from the total Open purse of $462,420 to give him a total for the year of $330,812.

Connors, who received the $16,500 runner-up prize, hurried from the stadium with his mother Gloria and coach Pancho Segura and left in a limousine without talking to newsmen.

"On the last point, I saw it out," Vilas said. "It was so noisy I didn't know what was happening. Some of the fans shouted that it was out. I turned to the linesman and he said it was out.

"I tried to get to Jimmy after the match, but they were pulling on my headband and nearly pulled my head off."

Connors, 25, from Belleville, Ill., left the court in a bitter mood amidst the charging spectators. He reached out to swing at a fan who ran at him and was pulled apart.

"Who's next?," Connors screamed.

'Army Air Force' routs UM

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

(WEST POINT, NY) — When the UMass football team departed for West Point on Friday it figured it would be confronted by the U.S. Army, but when the team bus finally pulled away from the Military Academy Saturday, the players aboard must have realized that it was the United States Air Force who had devised the home team's game plan as Army quarterback Leamon Hall's aerial tactics produced 32 points in the Cadets' 34-10 bombing of the Minutemen.

Hall's effort (19 of 33, 310 yards and five touchdowns) was good enough to shatter a couple of Army records and aid and abet in the demise of another.

The Cadet QB couldn't have done it alone, however, a point attested to by the fact that at the end of the third quarter UMass was still in the ballgame, trailing only 20-10.

The Minutemen might have even been ahead at that juncture if not for two fumbles inside the Army five yard line by fullback Billy Coleman. As UMass cornerback Dave Croasdale put it, though, the game was a "team loss" — a loss that was cemented when tight end Keith Wilson caught Hall's fourth touchdown pass of the afternoon, a 16-yarder, to make the score 27-10 three minutes into the final quarter. The Minutemen, who had been utilizing a ball-control offense throughout the contest, were unable to get their passing game together, and the Cadets coasted the rest of the way.

Army got on the scoreboard first, taking the opening kickoff and 'driving' 76 yards in four plays to take a 6-0 lead. Freshman end Mike Fahnestock was the recipient of Hall's 10-yard TD toss, but the big play of the four was a 48-yard bomb from Hall to sophomore end Bill Skoda.

The UMass ground game, which ammassed a very respectable 180 yards, saw to it that the Cadet lead was short-lived. An interception by Todd Holt staked the Minutemen to good field position at the UMass 47. Six straight runs, four of them by Coleman, put the ball on the Army 22 and set the stage for a pretty run to paydirt by Dennis Dent. Croasdale's conversion gave UMass its only lead of the day at 7-6.

The seven-play drive took 3:11 out of the timepiece that UMass coach Dick MacPherson tried to employ as the Minutemen's ally.

Here's the man who did all the damage. Army quarterback Leamon Hall (16) is in control here as he was all Saturday afternoon against the Minutemen. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

"Our game plan was to keep the ball on the ground and eat up the clock," said MacPherson. It seemed a solid idea since it would have allowed one Leamon Hall less time to spew aerials, and since a football in Hall's hands was a touchdown waiting to be scored.

Despite the plan, Hall managed to get hold of the spheroid just long enough to heave two more touchdown passes before the half ended, and Army led, 20-7.

It wasn't that UMass' offense didn't move the ball, it was simply a case of not being able to finish what it had started.

"What we were doing was exactly what we wanted to do," said MacPherson, "it's just that...well, we got beaten. What can I say?"

Other than Hall, the Minutemen's number one nemesis was the Minutemen. That's no misprint, dear reader. UMass gave away the football six, count 'em, six times. Three on fumbles and three on passes that fell into the wrong hands.

"I thought we'd cured that problem last year," said a dejected coach MacPherson referring to the fumbles, but I guess we'll have to work on it."

Fumblitis, however, wasn't the only recurring problem for the Minutemen. The injury bug is also back, and it seems to have grown teeth. Starting quarterback Mike Fallon was removed from the game midway through the third quarter, and although the specifics of his knee injury are not known, coach MacPherson says that it looks "very, very bad." Senior guard Russ Cooke suffered a slight concussion, and a gaggle of players saw the team doctor for various minor aches and pains.

Perhaps Croasdale, a casuality himself, best summed up the tone of the game from a UMass point of view — "Leamon Hall is one of the best passers we've faced in a long time."

Then again, perhaps David can be accused of understatement.

Injury bug bites big

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Some things never seem to change.

The leaves turn color each fall. And every autumn it seems the UMass football team is struck with a series of injuries.

Last season the Minutemen seemed headed toward a highly successful campaign until a rash of assorted hurts, both major and minor, felled a number of players.

No less than nine UMass gridders were sidelined for a good portion of the 1976 season. Of them, eight were starters or prospective first-liners.

Well, the injury bug has already begun to bit again.

Five important Minutemen were injured during Saturday's 34-10 season opening loss to Army here at Michie Stadium.

"We got those guys back, and now we're losing them again," said a disconsolate UMass coach Dick MacPherson after the game.

The most serious loss the team suffered was quarterback Mike Fallon. The senior starter tore knee ligaments midway through the third quarter.

According to MacPherson, "we're very concerned," about Fallon's condition. But UMass will know little more about his status until the quarterback is examined today by orthopedic surgeon George Snook. "It looks bad right now," was MacPherson's estimation moments after the loss.

Fallon, who appears as though he'll be viewing this week's game against Maine from the sidelines, will be joined there by guard Russ Cooke.

The senior star, who sat out part of 1975 and all of 1976 with a serious head injury, was reinjured during the game.

Cooke suffered a slight concussion, and "will be out for awhile," MacPherson prophesied. Cooke was expected to be an integral part of the offensive line this fall.

The three other injured Minutemen will be back in time for the upcoming Yankee Conference opener against the Black Bears.

Middle guard Phil Puopolo (hyperextended elbow), fullback Henry Sareault (shoulder), and cornerback Dave Croasdale (badly bruised heel) should all be back in the lineup by gametime Saturday.

Sophomore Mike McEvilly is slated to start at quarterback against Maine, while Cooke's place may be taken by junior Alec Westerlind (listed second at right guard on the preseason depth chart).

Three seriously injured starters from a season ago — Kevin Cummings, Steve Telander, and Todd Holt — all returned to action against the Cadets. But Cummings, all-Yankee Conference despite missing the last three games a season ago, did not look sharp.

"He was a help to the ballclub, but he wasn't catching like the Kevin Cummings of last year," said MacPherson of his split end.

Cummings made no receptions, which prompted the coach's comment of "I've never seen him drop so many passes."

Last season, Cummings ranked first on the Minutemen in total reception yardage (358) and was second on the team in aerials caught (18).

But right now, MacPherson isn't dwelling on the rehabilitated players. It's the newly-hurt he's worried about.

"My main concern right now is to get those guys back," he said.

BREAK THE CHAIN OF OPPRESSION THROUGH UNITY

Archie Shepp Quintet in Concert

The Pioneer Valley was blessed Saturday evening with a concert performed by the Archie Shepp Quartet at Look Park in Northampton. The concert was sponsored by the Pines Theater Music Festival which drew a fairly large crowd for a cool night in September.

Professor Archie Shepp rewarded the ears of the audience by bringing a Quintet which featured Charli Persip on the Multiple Percussion Instrument (drums), Ron Burton on Piano, Cameron Brown on Bass and Charles "Majeed" Greenlee on Trombone, all master musicians in their own right.

Why Be Called Third World

By NKRUMAH LUMUMBA OLINGA
Political Analysis
Nummo News

Question, do people who use the phrase Third World really understand the origin and connotations it denotes. This article is timely and important because most people of color progressive and non-progressive permit others to put them into a numerical digit that negates being first. It is serious and dangerous for a people to continue to use Third World without investigating it's origin.

Charles Deguale first used the phrase when he had to give a report to the then European power block of the world at that time. Deguale was apologizing for losing the war to Bro. Ho Chi Minh in North Vietnam. The great countries of the world at that time were afraid of the outcome of people of color really controling their own destiny. Back in the early 50's one could see the eventual fight between the Soviet Union and The Republic of China. The struggles of Mao Tse-Tung is a prime example of people of color organizing among themselves to fight against the powers of Europe.

People of color must realize their potential as oppressed people and become critical thinkers. A lot of progressive people think the term Third World is exceptable because of Franz Fenon (The African Psychiatrist who used the phrase in his two major books The Wretched of the Earth and Black Skin White Mask). People of color soon forgot this brother's contridictions that he eventually admitted to in the Wretched of the Earth. He did not support the oppressed Africans in Algeria until he came to the conclusion that there was a war going on between the Oppressed and the Oppressor, and then had to decide like other Freedom Fighters who desire freedom from the common oppressor who they will support, Bro. Frantz came to his conclusion almost too late, he had treated many French soldiers for their emotional problems they received from killing and emotionally defeating the oppressed Africans.

People of color must begin to see that language is a large part of their oppression. Today in the U.S. and other parts of the world oppressed people have not yet realized that they hold a balance of power in the world today. People of color must refute the phrase Third World, comments or disagreements can be directed to Nummo News, 103 NAH, Amherst, Mass. 01003.

Who is and What is the Tri-Lateral Commission

Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga

The Tri-lateral Commission was formed back in 1972, by David Rockifellow president of Chase Manhatton Bank of New York City and almost the rest of the world. The prime reason the Tri-Lateral Commission was formed was to offset the balance of power in the world between countries of color and European countries, forming what is called N.A.T.O., and the European Common Market. These organizations is set up to maintain the present balance of power of the world. Why was the Commission set up in 1972? Nixion was making the American people at home and abroad feel that the country was going to the dogs in which it was constantly moving towards since 1976 after the troops were taken out of the South to protect the newly freed African captive. The Tri-lateral Commission is presently trying to become a modern form of slave owners in the world. The Commission back in 1972 was grooming Jimmy Carter to be the next president of the United. They did not care about democrat or republican. The two party system does not mean a thing to this commission. Jimmy Carter was a member and so was David Rocky and his friends who is supposed to

The Quintet opened things up with a familiar tune from the album "Things Have Gotta Change", reflecting Prof. Shepp's awareness of the political status of the world. The music mixed elements of Afro-American, African, and Indian music. This caught the ears of the young listening audience which seemed apprehensive to respond at first but as the evening progressed were captured by Prof. Shepp's controlled melodic adventures on Tenor and Soprano Saxes.

The tunes ranged from soft ballads to fiery blues all of which were played with such intensity that it boosted the flow of adrenalin through your body.

Each musician exercised ultimate mastery and control over their instrument. Bassist Cameron Brown and percussionist Charli Persip (best noted for his work with the Dizzy Gillespie Big Band) layed down a rhythmic blanket for each soloist to sit and relax on. Pianist Ron Burton added a superb choral basis for the improvisational wizardry of Greenlee and Shepp.

One highlight of the evening was when Prof. Shepp picked up his soprano and blew the immortal Thelonius Monk classic "Round Midnight" which brought the crowd to its feet.

Prof. Shepp born in Florida, moved to Philadelphia at the age of seven. He acquired his first saxophone when he was fifteen. Philadelphia, home of many musicians of Black Classical Music, was a training ground for Archie, exposing him to a wide variety of music. He attended Goddard College in Vermont where he graduated with a degree in Playwriting. He moved to New York's Lower East side in 1959. There he met other musicians who were experimenting with new ideas in music, musicians such as Cecil Taylor, John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman, just to name a few. They encouraged him to create a style all his own. He did just that, putting to use a more melodic sturcture in his playing, being that melody is indigenous music of the Afro-American Culture.

Because of his efforts behind musical creation, Prof. Shepp along with other musicians of the sixties such as Don Cherry, Cecil Taylor, and Ornette Coleman were stereotyped by the "Jazz" critic as being "Non-Musical" or having "horrible tone" making the word "Avant-Garde" have negative connections. Despite criticism Shepp has gone on to become one of the true giants of Black Classical Music.

Recently returning from Europe where he toured with his Quartet Prof. Shepp will be teaching courses in Afro-American music here at UMass. We are fortunate to have amongst us a genius such as Professor Archie Shepp.

Philadelphians Fight Back

by Andy Feffer

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. (LNS) — The latest in a series of killings and beatings by the Philadelphia police has brought significant protest by the city's poor black and Hispanic communities.

The most recent serious incident occurred earlier this summer, on the afternoon of Saturday, July 2, when a Puerto Rican man named Jose Reyes was hot and killed in the doorway of his home, in the poor North Philadelphia section of the city, by police officer Gerald Salerno. While police claim that Salerno fired in self-defense after chasing Reyes into his home, neighbors say they saw police deliberately shoot Reyes and then attempt to cover up the killing.

Twenty people were arrested and four injured shortly after the shooting, as people attacked policemen still in the neighborhood with bricks and bottles in a spontaneous eruption of anger. At this point a police force (estimated at over 100) flooded the neighborhood. Police remained for close to a month — on street corners, in vacant lots, and stationed on rooftops with high powered rifles.

According to the police version of the incident, Salerno and his partner were investigating complaints that Reyes was acting peculiarly and smashing up his old car. As the policemen drove up, they say, Reyes threw an ax (which he was using on his car at the time) at the police van, ran into his house, and reappeared in the doorway brandishing an iron pole. It was then, they say, that Salerno fired — in self-defense.

Several of Reyes' neighbors had a very different account of the incident. They say that Reyes, who had been harassed by the police before, ran in fear for the safety of his home at the appearance of a police van, flinging the ax behind him. Reyes then fell through his doorway, neighbors say, and was lying on his back as the police van arrived at his house. They say that officer Salerno then aimed at Reyes, who was still lying in his doorway, and calmly shot Reyes twice — once in the head — after listening to neighbors entreat him not to shoot. No witnesses saw an iron pole anywhere in the vicinity at the time.

Salerno was not suspended for killing Reyes, but transferred to the homicide division — even though he was convinced last year of assaulting a man he had arrested.

The beating of another balck man, Alvestus Goode, by seven policemen. Goode, who was working as a gas station attendant, was attacked after asking a patrolman to move a car the officer had parked in front of the gas as statio-

The U.S. Attorney's office is currently investigating allegations that the homocide division of the Philadelphia police has routinely and savagely beaten suspects (most of them third world people) in the basement of police headquarters in order ot extort murder confessions.

The city is headed by an ex-cop, Frank Rizzo, who first gained a reputation as an officer who personally enjoyed beating blacks and rose to police chief and then the mayor's post, where he has bragged that he "would make Atilla the Hun look like a faggot." Around the time of Reyes' killing, Rizzo was on a trip to Italy, where he told the Presidentof the Italian Senate that "the best way to deal with criminals is to break their heads."

Jamaican Migrants

Victims of Capitalism

By W. J. Wheeler

Reprinted from Nummo News 4-19-77

The source of this report prefers to remain anonymous therefore no names shall be mentioned.

In order to understand why Jamaicans are hired to pick Tobacco in North Carolina and the state of Massachusetts one needs to know the advantages. They are hired for one sole reason which is cheap labor.

Farmers in the U.S. were in somewhat of a fix, they needed labor and they needed it quickly. The government is 1943 started sending out small flyers and ads in newspapers notifying Jamaicans that jobs were available for them in labor camps.

The first group to come came voluntarily, the second group was recruited. The ads are fill-in blanks, little information is necessary. The ads only require that men be no older than twenty-five. Once the men reach the labor camp they are given a complete army physical. If they are not physically fit they are sent home.

The government pays for the passage of the workers, but they must pay this back. In 1946 the average wage was 55 cents an hour. The workers are not citizens of the U.S. so they are not covered by the minimum wage law of the U.S. Twenty-five per cent of their pay is sent back to their families. In 1949 they payed $6.00 too $7.00 a week for room and board. Each farmer has his own camp, the buildings are like old army barracks, they contain an average of 48 beds depending upon the size of the camps.

The workers come by boat, most of them, approximately 3,000 of them at a time. The first boat was called the starvation boat by the workers.

The ads are essentially contracts for one year's work, if workers wish to renew their contract they must do so at the end of that year of they are sent home. Some men do not renew because they miss their families, which in most cases is the reason most of them signed on to work, so that they could earn enough money to feed their families. The average family size in Jamaica is six to eight members.

They have to work six days a week in most camps, Sunday is a rest day, in most camps religious ceremonies are held on Sunday.

If someone wants to leave camp they must have a permit from the camp manager. They are required to be back in camp by 6 a.m. the following morning. If someone wants to visit a camp he or she must pickup a permit from the manager. No ladies are allowed in the barracks, they are only permitted in the visiting rooms.

The rules are not the same in all camps because they are subject to the approval or disapproval of camp managers.

No camp permits gambling, fighting, or women. These can result in termination of contract.

If a worker is a trouble maker he is often times beaten up by his fellow workers for they know if they do not control him he can make things hard on them all, some farmers encourage them to do this.

If workers are caught fighting they can be either deported or fined or sent to another camp, in most cases they are either fined or sent to another camp that way the government doesn't lose a worker.

The managers work for the government, it is their job to pick the workers up and take them to the camps and regulate their movement through regulations that he sees fit. He has officers under him that regulate the work in the fields. It is their job to see that things run properly in the fields.

The workers do not sick days, they can however work anytime that they please, but managers do not tolerate any loafers. The camps are required to have a doctor and nurse present at all times, the government requires this. What goes on in most camps is that a doctor makes a visit to camps once or twice a month.

The camps have no education facilities on the grounds. The only way for workers to get schooling is through the mail. The farmers will now allow schooling on the property in most cases, the primary reason why they do this is to keep the Jamaicans in the dark about what he can do to better himself.

Salesmen come to camps on weekends and paydays, they have to have a permit from camp managers to sell their goods. Their goods are of high quality, but are expensive. There are possibilities for workers to earn extra money by doing piece work.

Today the workers earn $1.50 an hour tops but everything have increased at a greater proportion. They have to pay more for rent, the fare has increased, and if they get sick they have to pay their own medical bills.

Some workers have been in camps for long periods of time know how to become U.S. citizens. Most of them do exactly that become American citizens. It is not easy for them to do this, they must have at least $500.00 saved to insure the government they will not be liable to support them, or they can marry an American citizen. This is the only way for them to get out of the contract arrangement and demand higher wages and stop being exploited by the farmers.

New Leader Hopes To Fire Up Students

School Daze

CHEYNEY, Pa. — It's a new era for college student body presidents. As leaders of a population with common goals in a common setting, their powers are rarely challenged.

Now, in fact, college administrators look to the presidents of the student body for advice on actions which may affect the younger population. They are always pleased when a responsible student representatives is elected. Being a student body president is a serious, multi-headache, multi-thousand dollar business.

At least, that's the way it appears at Cheyney State College.

Richard Goodman, the newly elected president of the Student Government Cooperative Association (SGCA) at Cheyney, knows this.

And Goodman — an enthusiastic leader who is known to be authoritarian in nature, plans to take advantage of the progressive atmosphere to voice his opinion on issues which affect the college.

Also, recalling a smaller, more intimate Cheyney — when the concept of the "Cheyney family" was a reality — he intends to restore that feeling, although enrollment now is higher.

A graduate of Bartram High School in Philadelphia and an Army veteran, Goodman worked for a number of PHiladelphia-area Social agencies, including OIC and the Prison Aid Society.

He entered Cheyney in January 1975. With his background in social work and his familiarity with problems in the city, the Urban Studies program was natural for him.

Now a senior, Goodman has done a lot of studying over the summer months to complete courses, so he could devote a lot of time to his position as the SGCA president.

"I want to instill a sense of pride about Cheyney in all of the students," he says. "The students have to believe that the college is their home."

Goodman predicts that youthful mischief and destruction will diminish once this is accomplished. "Everyone will be recognized," Goodman says resolutely.

According to the president, service to the college, by any member of the college community, will be recognized ceremonious. "We'll have a student, or a teacher or an organization-of-the-month," he says.

Goodman says the new SGCA will especially encourage scholarship. In fact, a new ruling permits only students with a 2.5 academic average or better to qualify for SGCA office.

"I want more student participation in every phase of campus activity," he says. To this end, Goodman has appointed dozens of aides and presidential assistants (in addition to his presidential cabinet of eight) to head various committees and projects. These appointees, in turn, hopefully will pass their enthusiasm on to still more students.

All Third World Students are invited to celebrate Puerto Rico's first cry for liberation, El Grito de Lares. A dance and cultural evening is planned for Sept. 23rd at 8p.m. at Farley Lodge. This event is sponsored by the Hispanic Council for Human Rights and the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee.

ATTICA

On August 21, 1971, George Jackson was assassinated inside San Quentin Prison two days before he was to go on trial. He would have further exposed the racist, sadistic brutality rampant in USA prisons. He had spent most of 11 years in solitary confinement — for a $70 gas-station robbery. When prisoners in Attica Prison, outside Buffalo, N.Y. heard of Jackson's death, they called for a silent fast. Prison officials and guards responded with lock-ups, beatings sentences to the "hole". Prisoners then took hostages and D Yard on Sept. 9, 1971. They armed themselves with makeshift implements, organized their living and articultated demands. Contradicting the first press reports put out by prison officials when first given lines to the outside prisoners shouted: This is not a race riot. We are in this together. There are no white inmates. No black inmates. No Puerto Rican inmates. There are only inmates." Commissioner Russel Oswald agreed to the prisoners' 28 demands, but would not agree to amnesty for the insurgent prisoners. On Sept. 11th, Rockefeller ordered Oswald to cease negotiations and to prepare an armed assault. On Sept. 13th, within four minutes 43 were murdered by guardsmen, police and guards. Hundreds were wounded and were tortured in the following days. On August 29th, 1976, 2000 Attica prisoners initiated a strike which lasted six days. The conditions remain the same. In Solidarity We Commemorate these struggles!

Thousands Lose Unemployment Benefits

NEW YORK (LNS) — Tens of thousands of jobless workers have lost their unemployment benefits as a result of Congressional legislation enacted this past April.

Previously, individual states paid for 26 weeks of benefits, and people still unable to find work could the receive 13 weeks of federal extended benefits (EB) and then federal supplemental benefits (FSB) for an additional 26 weeks. All together, the thousands of victims of long-term unemployment could receive benefits for 65 weeks. That was until the April cutbacks; the effects of which include:

Extended benefits have been eliminated in 37 states, cutting off benefits for 200,000 workers. In these 37 states, highly disputed government figures showed that unemployment had dropped below 4.5 percent, and federal legislation forced these states to discontinue payments.

The FSB was cut from 26 to 13 weeks as of April 30 and will be eliminated altogether as of October 30, 1977. A loophole in the legislation has allowed the states who have so far eliminated EB to also drop FSB.

Many workers in states still offering FSB are being dropped because they can't afford to take jobs at salaries lower than their unemployment benefits. Recent legislation signed in April forces people to accept any job they are offered, whereas previously, unemployed workers had to show that they were searching for work in their own occupation. This new provision has been strongly criticized by workers because of its depressive effect on wages nationwide.

Meanwhile, the official unemployment rate for young black people hit a new high recently — 35 percent. Real unemployment is actually higher than official rates, moreover. Official unemployment figures don't count workers who have given up hope of ever finding a job and workers who could find only part-time jobs.

U.S. Gets Into Baby Business

LIBERATION News Service

NEW YORK (LNS) — The meaning of Jimmy Carter's pro-family campaign rhetoric has finally become clear. The Carter Administration is supporting prochildbirth legislation proposing federal adoption subsidies that would pay adoptive families four times the amount paid to a natural mother on welfare to care for a minority, ethnic, or otherwise "hard-to-place" child. And some sources say that the Administration will complete the package in the near future by sponsoring legislation to pay maternity costs for poor women who agree to put their babies up for adoption.

Administration support of adoption subsidies comes hard on the heels of recent Supreme Court rulings that states are not required to reimburse poor women for elective abortions, and federal court rulings denying federal funds for elective Medicaid abortions. Frederick S. Jaffe, President of the Alan Guttmacher Institute of Planned Parenthood calls the adoptions subsidy plan a way of "bribing an unfortunate class of women to be breeders for the more fortunate."

The House Legislation

House bill, H.R. 7200, has already passed in the House and will be considered by the Senate Finance Committee when the Senate resumes meeting in September.

"A Cruel And Bizarre Bill"

One of the strongest critics of H.R. 7200 at Senate hearings this summer was Maya Miller of the Women, Work and Welfare Project of the Women's Lobby. Together with House legislation restricting the use of Medicaid funds for abortions, said Miller, H.R. 7200 is "a cruel and bizarre bill to salve the conscience of a society that would force poor women to breek children they cannot afford."

The Carter-Backed Bill

The Carter Administration at first opposed H.R. 7200 on the grounds that adoption subsidies are too costly. However, the Administration has since reversed its position and has come out in favor of a more comprehensive and expensive bill of its own, S. 1928.

Introduced in the Senate at the end of July by Senator Alan Cranston (D.-Cal) the Administration bill includes the House bill's subsidies and adds more subsidies for hard-to-place children continuing Medicaid benefits for them after adoption, and offering additional subsidies to adopting families who qualify under an income eligibility test.

The Carter bill does not provide maternity care subsidies for poor women who agree to put their children up for adoption — a provision included in an earlier bill introduced by Senator Cranston. But some sources say that the Administration will introduce separate legislation in this area in the near future.

"First, Administration policies create a supply of babies by cutting off abortion to the poor and subsidizing childbrith," notes the "Women's Washington Representative," a legislative bulletin in Washington, D.C.

"Then (it) creates a market for these babies by paying adoptive families four times the amount a natural mother would receive to care for a minority, ethnic, or otherwise 'hard-to-place' child."

Dawson Five Situation Brightens

DAWSON, Ga. — The situation has brightened a bit for the "Dawson 5" — five young black men accused of murdering a white man.

Doughty (Ga.) Circuit Judge Leonard Farkas last week suppressed two reputed confessions and freed three of the five suspects on their own recognizance. The other two already were free on bond.

The ruling apparently caught prosecutors by surprise. "This gutted us," said District Attorney John Irwin.

However, the state announced a short while later that it would appeal the ruling, thus postponing proceedings indefinitely. Assistant District Attorney Mike Stoddard said the appeal could mean a delay of "anywhere from two weeks to Christmas."

Roosevelt Watson, 21, the alleged gunman in the January, 1976 slaying of Gordon "Bubba" Howell at a grocery in this rural southwest Georgia area was to have been tried first. Dawson is located about 20 miles south of Plains, President Carter's hometown.

Farkas' dismissal of alleged confessions by Watson and J.D. Davenport left the state with only the testimony of storeowner Linward "Tiny" Denton.

He had told officers sometime afterward that four black men entered his establishment, put on ski masks and robbed him of $100 and that afterward, Watson shot Howell.

The state claimed at a preliminary hearing that Watson admitted the crime and the confession was corroborated by Davenport. Farmer has charged the defendants were forced to confess under questioning by Terrell County (Ga.) officers and the Georgia Bureau of Investigation.

Others charged in the case were Watson's older brother, Henderson; Johnny B. Jackson and his brother, James Edward Jackson.

The judge still refused to throw out the indictments.

Farmer had argued that they should have been, to "compensate" for the defeat, delay, procrastination, wrongful bias, denial of due process and inhuman actions of Pataula Judge Walter I. Geer, District Attorney John Irwin and prosecutor Mike Stoddard."

Geer had presided over the hearing of pre-trial motions but removed himself because of illness. He had not ruled on the motion to suppress the alleged confessions during six days of pre-trial motions in July.

President Fears Anti-busing

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration, in one of the rare public signals it has given on busing, has told Congress that new antibusing legislation would impede school desegregation.

The busing ban could have "significant" impact on enforcement of civil rights laws in schools in the North and West, said civil rights chief David Tatel of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The administration put its criticism in writing and sent it to Congress, telling lawmakers that under the legislation:

"HEW may be unable to require that school districts... put into effect any grade reorganization plan involving transportation, even if the students... are presently being transported, and even if the transportation resulting... would be less than that currently provided."

Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act prohibits federal funds to school and other programs that discriminate on the basis of race or national origin. HEW is charged with enforcing the provision and can cut off federal aid or refer cases to the justice department for prosecution.

Most desegregation-related busing is ordered by courts, but some busing occurs under desegration plans negotiated by school districts with HEW. No precise breakdown has ever been published, but well over 90 per cent of busing for integration is court ordered.

HEW never has become involved directly in a major city, although it currently is negotiating with Kansas City, Mo.

The legislation sponsored by Democratic Sens. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri and Joseph Biden of Delaware would have no effect on court-ordered busing.

But it would close a provision under which the Carter administration believes it can require limited busing through school mergers, called "pairing" or "clustering" of schools so that classes or grade levels can be desegregated.

The proposed Eagleton-Biden plan would bar use of HEW funds for direct of indirect transportation of students beyond the school nearest their homes.

Congress has passed the Eagleton-Biden amendment as part of an HEW bill that is tied up in conference on matters other than the busing issue.

Class of James Harris Shows: The Fans Love It

James Harris passes chance to crow

James Harris had a golden opportunity to crow last Thursday night, but he also had something else; class.

In the wake of what might have been his personally most satisfying win in pro football, Harris could have rubbed salt in the Los Angeles Rams' gaping wounds but — at least publicly — he chose to remain silent.

Shipped off to San Diego June 14 after the Rams acquired free agent Joe Namath, Harris returned to the Coliseum Thursday night and led the Chargers to an exhilerating 26-25 exhibition victory.

Harris completed 16-of-30 passes for 234 yards and fired three touchdown strikes, two to 1972 Heisman Trophy winner Johnny Rodgers, while Austrian-born Toni Fritsch beat the Rams with a 22-yard field goal on the last play of the game.

"No, this wasn't revenge," Harris said after the Chargers dealt the Rams their third straight preseason loss. "But it was a sweet victory and I'd like to thank my teammates.

"I'm really happy and I'm still laughing. I got a lot of support. Johnny Rodgers was great. I'm really proud of this team."

A year ago in a decision that some felt was made by Ram owner Carroll Rosenbloom and not head coach Chuck Knox, Harris lost his No. 1 starting assignment to NFL rookie Pat Haden.

He was booed frequently by Coliseum crowds and took his demotion bitterly. Because Harris is black and Haden is white, there was conjecture that the quarterback controversy split the Rams along racial lines.

But there were no boos for Harris Thursday night. Only cheers. When he was introduced, the Coliseum crowd of 55,946 greeted him with a strong ovation.

In contrast, Namath received a mixture of boos and cheers when he came onto the field in the second half.

"To me," Harris said, "the biggest surprise was when I was introduced. I felt fired up. I was very happy to know the fans like me.

"We hung in there against the Rams. I have a lot of respect for them because they're a great team. We had to play very well to beat them."

The Rams appeared to have the game won with 5:43 left when Tom Dempsey kicked a 35-yard field goal to make the score 25-23.

But then Harris directed the Chargers 57 yards in 10 plays to set up Fritsch's game-winning field goal that gave San Diego a 3-2 exhibition record and made the Rams 1-4.

Ex-Super Bowl Star Tells White Club To Forget Application

Willie Lanier

RICHMOND — When professional football star Willie Lanier withdrew his application for membership in the all-white Salisbury Country Club, he, in effect, told the racist leadership of the club to take their little facility and cram it.

Lanier's decision to pull his application didn't come as a complete surprise. In an interview with the AFRO shortly after, it was learned that his membership had been rejected, Lanier said he was not certain he wanted to be associated with an organization that followed such a strict racist policy.

"I really don't know," Lanier told the AFRO in response to a question asking whether he would become a member if the club reversed its decision against his membership. "That's one you really have to play with in your mind."

Lanier apparently did more than play with that question mentally and concluded that he hardly needs the club — for social status or anything else.

That assessment of Willie Lanier's needs is no overstatement. He is the only nationally-known celebrity who lives in Salisbury. Plus, he probably pulls in the biggest paycheck in Salisbury.

Lanier's wife Cheryl said Monday the couple won't resubmit their application to the club's board of directors, whose earlier rejection of applications by Lanier and by Dr. Thomas J. Wright Jr. prompted local protest against the all-white policy.

Mrs. Wright said she and her husband were aware of the Lanier's decision but plan to resubmit their application.

Lanier, a former all-pro linebacker for the Kansas City Chiefs, is a graduate of Maggie Walker High School in Richmond. The Laniers moved to the expensive Salisbury subdivision in Chesterfield County five months ago.

The applications of the Laniers and the Wrights were rejected June 28.

State's Attorney General Anthony F. Troy and former Republican National Committee co-chairman Richard D. Obenshain, who are members of the club, asked the directors to reconsider their decision.

A former club president said few persons have been rejected and acceptance generally is a matter of routine.

Court reopens Kent State shootings case

KENT, Ohio [UPI] — The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals officially reopened the seven-year-old Kent State shootings case yesterday ordering a new trial in a $46 million suit filed by parents of the victims against Ohio Gov. James A. Rhodes and others.

But, in another decision on a current matter of controversy, the Cincinnati court refused to block construction of a gymnasium on the campus near the site of the shootings. Angry protestors have been demanding all summer that the gym be replaced by a national historical monument.

The general contractor hired to build the gym said yesterday his crews will begin moving onto the campus to being construction "sometime this week."

Both matters stem from the May 4, 1970, shooting deaths of four students by Ohio National Guardsmen ordered onto campus by Rhodes to quell an anti-Vietnam war protest.

Parents of the four students, along with nine persons wounded by the gunfire, went to court in Cleveland two years ago, seeking $46 million in damages from Rhodes, former Kent State President Robert White and Guardsmen. A 15-week trial resulted in jury acquittals for all the defendants.

During the past two years, the victims have been working on a massive appeal of the case, and were successful yesterday in winning a re-trial.

"We conclude that the plaintiffs shooting victims are entitled to a new trial because the verdict was returned by a jury, at least one of whose members had been threatened and assaulted during the trial by a person interested in its outcome," the appellate court ruled.

Near the end of the case, it was reported to trial Judge Don J. Young that one juror and his family had been threatened three times and assaulted on one occasion.

See related story and other photos on Page 4

The appellate court noted the threats were related to the upcoming verdict in the case, that the trial judge did not interrogate the juror to learn what effect the incident had on him and that the juror remained on the panel.

In deciding to throw out the jury's verdict because of the threat, the appellate court called the situation "an attempt to pervert our system of justice at its very heart."

Although Rhodes and National Guard officials again will be defendants in a new trial, the appellate court threw out all charges against White, reasoning that as Kent State University president he had no control over Guardsmen.

Concluded the appeals court in ordering the new trial, "These cases essentially present the question of whether excessive force was employed in attempting to deal with a civil disturbance."

The court said the "basic issue" to be resolved is the "appropriateness of the response of state officials and National Guard members" to quell the anti-war demonstrations, which had included the burning of a campus ROTC building a few days earlier.

Officials in Rhodes' office said the governor would have no immediate statement regarding yesterday's court actions.

In the gymnasium issue, the appellate court tossed out two requests to halt construction of the controversial building.

The court last month ruled against gym protestors in the overall issue of whether the gym should be halted, but had temporarily blocked construction while it studied the protestors' request for a re-hearing.

The rehearing request was denied yesterday, and with it went the temporary block against construction.

SGA co-Presidents want more work

Treasurer's resignation held up

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-presidents are refusing to accept the resignation of SGA Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins pending a detailed financial report of an August convention in which he and several other student government people participated.

"The books don't look right, that's all," said co-president Jon A. Hite yesterday. "We think Tommy (Kerrins) should have come back with complete list of expenses ... "

"We think that everyone should be able to find out exactly where the money went. That's why we're doing this now, because once Tommy is gone we'll never be able to find out," said co-president Marion L. Batiste.

Hite and Batiste have asked that Kerrins present a detailed report of the expenditures of the trip to Undergraduate Student Senate at its meeting Wednesday night.

Kerrins had presented his final report and resignation at last week's senate meeting.

Kerrins yesterday said he thinks Hite and Batiste are exercising their veto power for political motives.

"They didn't verify the resignation and certification of vacancy because they'd like me to stay in office until after a new senate is elected so they can run someone who is not a senator now for the treasurer's position," Kerrins said.

"I'd like to know why it took them two days to think about it and decide to exercise their veto. Why didn't they question me about it at the meeting and if it's Pinky (Batiste) that has a question about the expenditures, why didn't she come into my office and we could go over it?

"I asked three times (at the senate meeting) if anyone had any questions and no one did," he said.

Kerrins said he would present the detailed report requested by the co-presidents to the senate on Wednesday night.

Hite said he thought the senate would be able to again confirm the treasurer's vacancy after hearing Kerrins' report.

"If the questions we have to ask on Wednesday are answered, then there's no reason that the senate can't elect a new treasurer," Hite said.

In a memo dated Sept. 9 to Brian J. DeLima, speaker of the student senate, Hite and Batiste wrote that, after reviewing the figures presented to the senate by Kerrins, they had found "major discrepancies" between authorized expenditures and what was actually spent, " ... especially centered around the expenses relating to the National Student Associations 30th Annual Congress."

Several members of different UMass student government organizations travelled in three vehicles to the national student government seminar in Houston. UMass ran almost half of the 50 workshops at the seminar.

In his report to the student senate Kerrins had reported the cost of the trip as approximately $3,905.15. The expenses were itemized into hotel and conference fees, travel expenses, parking fees, and approximate reimbursements.

Revenue for the trip came primarily from the Student Senate Co-ordinating Committee which authorized the spending of $1,500, and from the National Student Association itself which rebated $1,480 to the Senate.

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted on June 15 of this year to contribute $550 to the trip, but on August 11th, the day the people were to leave for the conference in Houston, the Board of Governors voted to withdraw the money from the conference expenses.

The loss of the $550 plus approximately $375 in additional travel expenses accounted for the $925.15 in unanticipated expenses, according to both DeLima and Kerrins.

Concerning the suspensive veto of the co-presidents, Kerrins said it was their right to do so, but that he questioned their motives and thought they were in some ways abusing that power in using it to delay the election of a new treasurer.

Carter's aides knew of Lance overdrafts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter's three top aides knew in January that Bert Lance and his family had written $450,000 in overdrawn checks, but they did not tell Carter, Press Secretary Jody Powell said yesterday.

Although Lance had been nominated as budget director at the time and was up for Senate confirmation, none of the three thought the President needed to know of the situation, Powell said.

Powell also said Carter will postpone a news conference, planned for tomorrow, until "as soon as possible" after Lance completes his testimony on Capitol Hill this week.

Lance, under pressure to resign because of the overdrafts and other questionable banking practices, is to testify Thursday before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. He attended a two-hour Cabinet meeting at the White House yesterday and left by himself afterward.

Powell said he, Hamilton Jordan and White House Counsel Robert Lipshutz saw an FBI report citing $450,000 in overdrafts in 1974 and 1975 by Lance and his in-laws, who founded the Calhoun First National Bank in Georgia where the overdrafts were made.

Of that amount, Powell said, $14,000 to $15,000 was Lance's personal overdrafts.

None of the three aides, Powell said, "felt that the FBI report gave rise to a need for further investigation or bringing it to the attention of the President."

Powell quoted an official in the comptroller's office, whom he refused to identify, saying what Lance did was a common small-town banking practice.

Powell said "a dozen people or so" were listed in the FBI report as having written overdrawn checks — none of them related to Lance campaign spending in the 1974 Georgia gubernatorial race.

The aides also were dissuaded from further action, Powell said, because the bank corrected the overdraft situation.

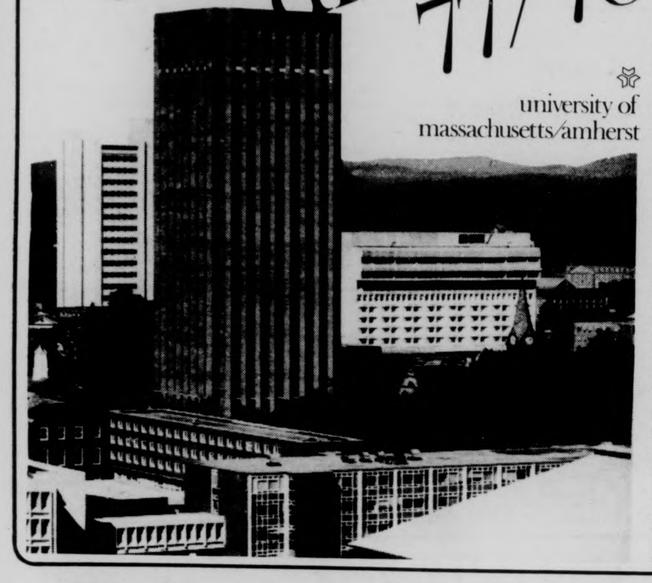
Powell said the three aides got the FBI report soon after it was written Jan. 6, and decided to follow normal procedure and turn it over to the Senate only if it was requested. It was not.

"The judgment we made is, certainly in light of events, open to comment, at least," Powell said. "I certainly wish I had done something, if there was something there to do."

In other developments in the Lance case yesterday:

— Sen. Charles Percy said there was the "appearance of a coverup" of Lance's problems early this year.

university directions 77/78 — a pathfinder



By GEORGE WENDELL
Collegian Staff

How many of you freshmen have felt like Dorothy trying to find Emerald City in your search for the parking office, Machmer of James House, of that first set of lecture notes? And how many worldly upper-classpeople have doubtfully pointed like the scarecrow in giving directions? Hopefully University Directions 77-78, that thick pamphlet available at concourse newsstands, will resolve some of these uncertainties.

University Directions is a compendium of such bric-a-brac as the complete, unexpurgated definition of RSO, a quality-rated list of alternatives to the DC's, an excellent UMass map, and a concise guide to local politics.

The Directions is revised yearly, according to the updates issued by the 120-odd offices and organizations which choose to be listed. University Publications does not intend it to be a freshman handbook. 17,000 copies have been printed, which are hoped to be useful as both a UMass "Yellow Pages" and a reference guide for all students.

Did you know that the sum total of our $32 student activities fees is in excess of $1 million? And that the undergraduate Student Senate has sole authority over its use?

This year the production of the guide was conducted by Bryan C. Harvey, student editor in charge. Harvey was careful to arrange the booklet from the perspective of a seasoned UMass student; that is, common knowledge first, then the important information.

In the Crime Prevention section you will learn that engraving tools are available night and day to mark bicycles and stereos for identification. If you are wondering how to register to vote in Amherst, there's a helpful section explaining that process. Also, the Directions has the only extant list of UMass abbreviations on campus, just in case you've wondered what NOPE and OSCAR stand for. And for weekend activities, the list of Western Mass funspots is a good starter.

Bryan Harvey has compiled many facets of UMass life, and exposes them in palatable style. Of course some are those things which you learn on day one, like where to eat, sleep, and drink. But he has also emphasized many obscure parts of the University.

His treatment of RSO's, those misunderstood groups that often have tables in the concourse, is enlightening. "Welcome to UMass" pamphlets barely mention RSO's, yet students should know exactly what is available to them here. There is more to going to college than drinking beer and studying.

The section on "Where to go for Help" is probably the most important one, especially to freshmen. Certainly in a school of 23,000 people, where each is entirely on one's own, and probably for one's first time, a list of people to turn to is a valuable one. Ranging from health care and crime prevention to religious groups and alcohol counseling, Directions is handy and complete. UMass is not as impersonal as it is said to be, if you search out the contacts that you want.

Harvey, who was a commencement speaker during the UMass graduation last May, this weekend estimated the time to produce Directions totalled 400 hours, from when he began collecting his facts in January until typesetting in June.

Elderly may join college scene

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Students returning to UMass next year might find themselves in classes along with elderly Massachusetts residents.

The Massachusetts House last week passed by voice vote a bill which would allow Massachusetts residents over 65 years old to attend state universities and colleges tuition free. The bill should be before Governor Michael S. Dukakis within two weeks.

If approved by Dukakis, the bill would take effect next fall. The only limitation would be that colleges would not have to give extra classes in any subjects to accommodate the elderly. Those taking advantage of the bill could enroll in both degree and non-degree programs.

According to Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, the bill passed this year because people, especially legislators, are stereotyping the elderly less, and becoming sensitive to "agism" and the problems of the elderly.

"The elderly should have rights," he said, during an interview last week.

The bill had been filed unsuccessfully in the past by groups such as the Association of Elderly Americans, said Collins.

Collins, who is the vice chairman of the Senate-House joint committee on education said he sees many advantages in the bill.

The most practical is that with the lowering birth rate, many institutions of higher learning may have to start closing down.

"This bill would meet the future in a positive way," he said. Collins said he also feels that it is a good idea to "continue lifelong learning" and "seek new experiences throughout life.

"It's hard to be old in America now," he says, "Inflation has cut people off from what they want to do."

Besides helping the elderly, the bill would have a positive effect on UMass. "Campuses tend to become isolated," Collins said. "The exclusion of certain groups makes education of a lesser quality."

As the leader of the state public education system, UMass would play a crucial role in the implementation of this bill, if it is passed.

The question is whether or not people over 65 would take advantage of the bill.

At the present time, there is only one person over 65 attending UMass, according to statistics from the office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies.

Barbara Griffith, of the Amherst Senior Center run by the Council on Aging, said she thinks there would be senior citizens who would take advantage of such a program.

Griffith said she "frequently has requests" for information about similar courses. Although the center does offer many programs to Amherst's 1,900 citizens over 60, few can compare to what UMass has. One reason for this is lack of space.

Janet Gezork, director of the Ann Whalen Elderly Housing project at 32 Kellogg Ave., Amherst, this weekend expressed views similar to those of Griffith.

"Yes, some would probably take advantage of it," she said, "depending on their schedules and when the courses are."

Roberta Fagin, of Counseling and Advising for Older Students, said that the number of elderly attending would spread with time.

Illegal 'fridges dumped

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The University missed its golden opportunity to go into the refrigerator business and earn itself some cold cash.

Instead of trying to make a cool deal and sell refrigerators it confiscated over the summer, it went out and "dumped" them, according Robert Campbell from the Office of Residential Resource management.

Actually, the University had no intention of going into the refrigerator business when it confiscated the refrigerators. Instead, the refrigerators were taken for violating the University's policy on refrigerator size.

Campbell yesterday said that last year prior to the close of school, notices were sent out to all students that if oversized refrigerators being stored in University storage spaces for the summer were not removed, the University would take them.

To prove the University wasn't just talking to itself, Campbell said "about fifty to sixty" refrigerators were taken. He said after the units were removed from their various places of storage around campus, they were "dumped". But he added that those involved "were given more than ample opportunity to get them out" before the University took action.

There is no report on what students who owned the confiscated refrigerators were doing to cope with the situation.

Central Area Council plans Sunday concert

By SERENA RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The fall concert was discussed and scheduled last night for September 18 during the first Central Area Council meeting of the semester.

Also on the agenda were the budgets for the four Central Area centers, and the upcoming elections for treasurer and activities coordinator.

Sean Doyle, currently running the concert, explained that there will be four groups playing this year: Clean Living, Mad John, The Bricker Band, and Scaramouche. The total cost of the concert will be $2,070. The CAC passed a motion to allocate $335 to help defray costs.

Nomination papers for treasurer were distributed at the meeting. The election will take place Sept. 28 in the Franklin Dining Commons from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

At next week's meeting, nominations for Activities Coordinator will be reviewed, and the council will then select a new coordinator.

The budgets for two of the four area centers were discussed. Ron Coler requested $3,400 for the Arts and Crafts Shop, and Cindy thomas from the Women's Center indicated that it would like to receive $2,539 from CAC. The council will be voting on these proposals in the near future. Mark Zinan, president of the CAC, explained that the council expects approximately $18,500 in the total budget this year.

An evening trip to the Alpine Slide, open to all residents of Central was discussed and the CAC will be voting to allocate $200 for the trip costs next week.

Jon A. Hlte, Student Government Association co-President, spoke about a number of bills the SGA would like passed this semester. Non-mandatory housing for juniors and decriminalization of pot were among the issues discussed.

The dorms of Central were not all represented. Half of the dorms, Baker, Chadbourne, Butterfield, Gorman, and Brooks, had no representatives at the meeting.

'Lance will resign'—Jack Anderson

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

GREENFIELD — The White House has already decided to force Budget Director Bert Lance to resign, and public announcement is only a matter of how long Jimmy Carter is willing to hold out, Washington columnist Jack Anderson said last night.

Anderson, in an interview following a speaking engagement at Greenfield Jr. High, said White House aides assured him of the decision to remove Lance as a result of his questionable banking practices while president of two Georgia banks.

"Put simply, it's a matter of how long Carter's pride holds out," Anderson said.

Earlier in the evening Anderson, a 1972 Pulitzer Prize winner, told an estimated 375 persons in the packed auditorium that while he did not know if Lance broke the law, he did not feel it a function of the press to prove him guilty.

"I do, however, know that the things he did were newsworthy. He announced time and time again that he had told us everything.

"He did not. We do know he was passing money around in funny ways. He passed $450,000 around. To me, that's irregular," Anderson said.

For nearly 90 minutes Anderson, a former Mormon missionary, continuously told anecdotes ranging from Texas oil millionaires fortunes to the Watergate cover-up in a half-comic, half-preaching posture, pausing only to remove his green suit jacket.

"Yes, there were violations of the law," Anderson said. "That's my opinion. Whether his activities were illegal or not, the fact remains if he cannot manage his personal finances, I don't particularly want him to manage the country's finances."

Anderson characterized Jimmy Carter as "an amateur", with good moral principles and a desire to do a good job as president.

"After another year or two he will be qualified to be president," said Anderson.

Anderson's daily column, "The Washington Merry-Go-Round", is carried in 746 newspapers across the country. With total daily readership around 45,000,000, "Merry-Go-Round" is the most widely read political column in the United States. In addition, Anderson also syndicates daily radio and television broadcasts.

Other Anderson observations included:

—Watergate: "A lot of people say Watergate was a third-rate burglary. It wasn't. It was a fourth-rate burglary."

—Richard Nixon: "When Richard Nixon put his hand on the Bible and swore to uphold the constitution of the United States, he should have read the constitution first."

—Welfare: "When I was a young man growing up in Utah we were always told 'It's better to climb the mountain on your own strong legs than to coast down.' I don't mind the government using my money to help you out. Not by giving you a check, but by giving you a shovel."

—Nelson Rockefeller: "I don't want to pay his taxes. He makes more money than I do."

—Jimmy Carter: "Even if you didn't like surgeons, if you needed an operation you'd go to one before you went to a boy scout with first-aid training. Jimmy Carter is a boy scout."

Half-way into his talk, sponsored by the Greenfield Recorder, Anderson launched into one of his favorite topics: energy.

Anderson maintained U.S. energy policy is being dictated by the major oil companies, not the Federal government. Because these concerns — notably Exxon, Texaco, Mobil and Standard Oil of California — exert such a huge influence, alternate energy sources are not being developed as they should, he said.

"My friends, it is they who are calling the shots. They intend to keep us hooked on oil until they've sold the last drop, squeezed the last dollar out of every barrel," Anderson said.

Anderson recommended the use of alcohol fuels to replace petroleum, and pointed to the successful conversion of refineries in West Germany and South America. A three-week investigation into the per-gallon cost to the consumer showed alcohol fuel would cost about 10 cents more than gasoline, he said.

Anderson, 54, received the Pulitzer Prize for national reporting in May 1972, for his disclosures of administration policy in the 1972 India-Pakistan crisis.

Anderson last night also told of an unsuccessful plot instituted by Jeb Stuart MacGruder in 1972 for Watergate burglar G. Gordon Liddy to "off" him.

Selectmen delay 'Home-Rule Bill' appeal

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night decided to postpone an appeal of the Massachusetts Attorney General's ruling against the enactment of a "Home Rule Bill" in Amherst.

The selectmen last night also dissolved a committee, relocated the Amherst Common Market this Saturday, announced a parade, and reviewed a parking problem in North Amherst.

The Home Rule Bill, if enacted, would give Amherst authority to establish a Security and Deposit Trust Account for the tenants and landlords of Amherst.

The establishment of such a trust account system would hold the security deposits of area tenants in an interest bearing account which would remain unaffected if an apartment complex should go bankrupt. This account would also protect tenant security deposits in the case of tenant-landlord disputes.

The Home Rule Bill will be filed tomorrow with the state legislature by Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst. However, no final decision concerning an appeal of the attorney general's ruling against this bill was made by selectmen.

"It is not unheard of that a higher court would overturn the Attorney General's decision," argued Diana Romer, chairman of the board of selectmen.

"We shouldn't lose the opportunity of going through the court system ... It is a viable vehicle of having the town protect its legislative right," she said.

However, Romer also pointed out the need for a more in-depth study of just what would be involved in undertaking such action. She specified the need for determination of any other reasons for not appealing the ruling, as well as the need for a second opinion on the costs which would be involved.

Further discussion concerning the issue was postponed until next week.

Vice Chairman Nancy B. Eddy voted to disestablish the Cable Advisory Committee in a decision to "wipe the slate clean" regarding its existence. Selectman Nathaniel Reed seconded the motion.

The committee was first established in 1972 to act as a liaison between the Cable Vision Co. and community users. It was one to which appointments were never made.

"It was never appointed, because we were in the process of negotiations," explained Eddy. "We were uncertain as to the role that the committee was to be."

Also considered in last night's meeting was the issue whether the Amherst Common Market should be closed an hour early as a result of traffic problems during UMass home football games, or if, as an alternative, it should be relocated for the day.

The traffic problem arises from a converging of cars at the Boltwood-Main Street intersection. It was felt that the football game traffic in conjunction with the market traffic would pose serious congestion problems.

The final decision was to move the Common Market, itself, to a location on the North Common. It would be an experimental, one-day trial for Saturday, Sept. 17.

In this way, the Common Market's business would be preserved, traffic flow in the Boltwood-Main Street area would be expedited, and the additional cost of engaging extra traffic police officers would be avoided.

Romer last night also finalized the date of the Belchertown Parade. It is to be held on Oct. 15. Any groups wishing to parade should contact authorities in Belchertown.

The problem of parking at Rooster's, a local diner in North Amherst was also reviewed.

A petition received from local residents had pointed out the parking and noise problem now in existence, specifically in regard to trucks. No resolution was determined.

Southern Africa teach-in increases sensitivity

By BETH SEGERS
and MOIRA CAMPBELL

Greg Williams left the United States for South Africa with intentions to boycott all South African goods from peanut butter to chapstick. He and his group couldn't do it. South Africa owns everything.

The Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa, organized by the Five Colleges, sponsored a "Southern Africa Teach-In" yesterday to inform and raise interest among the UMass student body.

Workshops on various aspects dealt with corporate investment, oppression, and Front Line States in South Africa. The speakers included Anne Seidman, Bheki Langa and Greg Williams who have all lived in or visited South Africa in the recent past.

A rally will be held at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon at Memorial Hall where the Trustees will be voting on University investments in South Africa. Videotapes of the workshops may be seen in the concourse of the Campus Center today.

The Liberation wants the UMass Trustees to sell its stock and they said why in the workshops. Seidman, an economics professor who spent eight years in Africa, spoke on the structure of South Africa's political economy.

The U.S. is the second largest foreign investor in South Africa and has increased investments 400 per cent between 1969-70 she said. Corporations currently in South Africa include General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, General Electric, ITT, Westinghouse, IBM and Mobil.

Seidman said that as transnational corporate investment increases, so does the oppression in South Africa. The country is governed by a white minority regime and is run by apartheid, the legalized system of racial oppression of poverty and discrimination for the black majority.

Increased capital intensity makes it easier for the white minority to control South Africa and not hire blacks, Seidman said. The Africans, already forced into low-paying unskilled jobs and prohibited from joining unions, are confined to 13 per cent of the land in South Africa, she said.

Seidman said the exploitation of the black cheap labor market is used to improve the whites' standing in government. Other African governments joined South Africa by 1960 in asking transnational corporation to invest in their countries also.

Seidman said that South Africa has also received in excess of $9 billion in foreign loans from the U.S. and other countries. Although there is no published information on loans, five U.S. banks make up a large portion of the funds: Citicorp, Chase Manhattan, Kidder Peabody International, Morgan Guarantee and Manufacturers Hanover.

Seidman cited the position taken by President Carter that supports the South African government with black majority rule incorporated over a period of time. This will probably not work, according to Seidman, because the South African government is in no haste to accommodate the blacks.

The Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa wants to stop the UMass investment of over $540,000 by urging the trustees to sell their stock. The committee also advocates a boycott of ITT products and services, including Wonder Bread, Hostess Cakes', Morton Frozen Foods, Smithfield Hans, Scott Seeds, Sheraton Hotels and Hartford Insurance.

Seidman's talk was followed with workshops by Bheki Langa on the "History of Oppression in South Africa" and Greg Williams on the "Front Line States."

Langa, head of racial understanding at UMass, concentrated on a study of the relations between the Negro and minority racist regimes in South Africa since the 1600's. He detailed the efforts of England, France, and Holland to uplift the educational standards of the Negro during the nineteenth century. The work of these western colonizers proved futile because levels which determined literacy in each culture were so different. A Negro at that time was considered literate if he had command of an oral education as opposed to the Western ideal of a written education, Langa said.

Langa also related the history of various movements within South Africa which failed to reconcile resentments between the races. Some of these were the Union of South Africa in 1910, the Native Land Act in 1913 and the Tomlinson Report in the 1950's.

Langa stressed the fact that every time the South African Black man has tried singularly or collectively to set up new government or gain human rights, he has been quashed. African youth realized in the fifties that, Langa said, the more they protested, the more oppressive the regime became.

Langa closed by saying "it would be suicide" to treat the racial problem in South Africa as Blacks in America did, by demonstration and bombing. It has proved unsuccessful too many times in the past, he said.

Williams spoke about a trip he took with 14 other Americans to the Front Line States of South Africa. His topics of discussion stayed mostly within the political sphere in the states but he also talked about South African attitudes towards President Carter and Andrew Young, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Williams reiterated Langa's sentiments that violence is undesirable in South Africa. But he did say that violence is often unavoidable and may be a necessity in order for Blacks in South Africa to gain their rights.

What really impressed Williams was the total cooperation he found among the Blacks in their determination to be free.

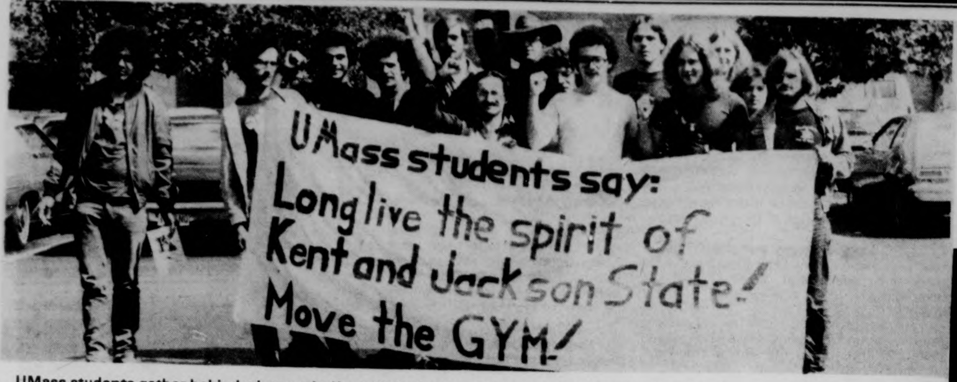
"We need to learn here that there, people are not stepping on one another for achievement as they do here," he said. "There is a great sense of togetherness in communal villages in order to further the liberation."

The political process in the Front Line States also received his praise. In Mozambique, "one comes before the community and is judged upon whether he should be allowed to vote or not." The whole political process," said Williams, "is much more advanced than here."

The Front Line States are also dealing with women as an important part of the liberation process. Although they have a long way to go, South Africans are developing day care centers and better water systems in order to leave women more time to develop their interests outside of domestic life.

As for the South African reaction to President Carter's policies there, Williams said that South African leaders are taking a wait and see attitude towards Carter's initial aid. They won't be fooled by Carter or Young, said Williams. American aid, he said, is welcomed and the liberation leaders feel that once all Americans understand what's going on in the liberation they will want to help.

Williams concluded saying that UMass students "have to become political. We have to take the same serious vein here."



UMass students say:
Long live the spirit of
Kent and Jackson State!
Move the GYM!

UMass students gather behind a banner in Kent, Ohio demonstrating opposition to the proposed construction of a new Kent State Gym to be built on the site where four students were killed by National Guardsmen in 1971.

Occupation tactic useful

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

Although there are similarities in tactics between the May 4 Coalition, the group opposing construction of the gymnasium near the site of the May 4, 1970, murder of four Kent State students, and the Clamshell Alliance which is the main anti-nuclear power force in New England, there are significant differences in philosophy.

Both groups have used the tactic of civil disobedience via physical occupation to prevent construction. The May 4 Coalition occupied the proposed gym site with a "tent city" for two months during the spring and summer. The Clamshell Alliance staged a sit-in on the site of the proposed Seabrook nuclear power plant at Seabrook, New Hampshire.

Both groups have used "proper channels" to little avail. The May 4 Coalition has gone to the end of the road with the courts. Two supreme court justices have refused to grant temporary restraining orders against construction of the gym. The Clamshell Alliance has had very little luck with the courts and regulatory agencies, regardless of mounting evidence of the hazards of nuclear energy.

Each group includes many people who were active in the anti-war movement.

However, the Clamshell Alliance believes in non-violence as a philosophy. But the prevailing attitude among the May 4 Coalition is that while non-violence can be a useful tactic, and all its demonstrations so far have been basically peaceful there is often a need for militant action.

Before the Clamshell Alliance permits anyone to join them at a sit-in, it requires that you go to a workshop in non-violent resistance. If you do not attend the workshop, but occupy the site anyways, you will be ineligible to receive any of Clamshell's legal defense fund to cover your bail and legal fees.

At a meeting of the May 4 Coalition, during a shootout 2 weekends ago, between the "liberals" and the "militants", a proposal to deny defense funds for unprovoked acts of violence and to condemn violence in general was defeated, and several of the "liberals" walked out.

The May 4 Coalition, though, can maintain order within its ranks. When demonstrators marched on to the gym site, they did so with locked arms. When a jeep drove into a march, the marshalls kept most of the people marching forward, instead of attacking the jeep, averting a melee.

Perhaps the four muscular athletic looking men in the jeep expected no fighting back when they tried to grab a portable microphone from a woman's hand at the front of the march and drove into the crowd.

But when they saw what came after them, they were terrified seeing several black members of the Youth In Action, an urban revolutionary group, (which will be merging with the Revolutionary Student Brigade this fall to form a communist youth organization) looking like guerrillas with black berets and olive drab army pants tucked into black army boots.

Chilean solidarity meeting solid

By ALAN SHEPARD
Collegian Staff

About 200 students gathered Sunday night in the Student Union Ballroom to attend "An Evening of Solidarity", a program dealing with the political changes that have taken place in Chile during the last five years.

The evening marked the fourth anniversary of the military coup that overthrew the Popular Unity government of Salvador Allende in Chile and placed the current right wing rulers in power.

A talk was given by Michael Moffit, a political analyst from the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

He was the lone survivor of a bomb that exploded in a car claiming the lives of Orlando Letelier, former foreign minister of Chile, and his assistant Ronnie Moffit, Moffit's wife.

He spoke of the subsequent cover-up of the bombing by the United States government, where he said, "no arrests or indictments were made." In a response to a plea by Moffit and Letelier's wife for a re-investigation of the case, Attorney General Griffen Bell replied, "What do I need, another Watergate?"

Moffit explained that the Junta, which has executed 30 thousand of the 10 million people since its existence, is very much dependent on aid from American-based multi-national corporations, from which it has already received over $2 billion.

The program was sponsored by the Western Massachusetts Chile Solidarity Committee. The money raised by this group is sent to help support the current resistance movement now taking place in Chile.

Civil rights advocate, author, and comedian Dick Gregory will speak Thursday, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

Gregory will take part in a UMass Student Unionization Conference which begins Thursday, along with other featured speaker Tom Hayden.

Hayden will address the conference in the Campus Center Auditorium Sunday at 1 p.m. Hayden is now working on the Campaign for Economic Justice, and is a former student movement leader.

The conference is a result of the Student Government Association call for reorganization of the present system, to one of unionization for collective bargaining. Hayden and Gregory will discuss this issue of student empowerment through unionization.

Recyclers don't waste wastes

By CYNTHIA HARHEN
Collegian Staff

What will you do with this newspaper when you're finished reading it? Or where will you put the bottle of soft drink when it's empty?

Instead of just throwing them out, why not recycle? These questions are repeatedly asked by members of the Student Center Recycling Project, a student-run, student-funded organization whose sole purpose is the recycling of glass, paper and aluminum products here at UMass.

"The Recycling Project has provided a convenient and effective way for you to recycle your paper, glass and aluminum, and now it is up to you to make it a success," said Michael Fager, director of the SSRP in 306 SUB.

The project provides the University community with barrels in 28 locations and 46 Paxalls (large trash bins) for the recycling of paper, Fager said.

These containers are conveniently located throughout the campus and are easily distinguished from the Physical Plant's contianers by their markings "Recyclable Glass Only".

The bins are green and are also distinguished by their markings. Paper bins are also located in the SUB lobby. Fager said the Recycling Project also maintains a recycling center in Parking Lot 26 next to the bus garage for glass, paper and aluminum. Fager said commuters and students living in dorms without barrels should use this center.

According to Fager, last semester the project was able to recycle 15 tons of glass and 105 tons of paper. Repairs on its 12-ton trash truck and fluctuations in the paper market resulted in major financial problems said Fager, and it was forced to operate at a loss.

This fiscal year has improved considerably and Fager said he is optimistic. The fiscal year begins in July.

This success depends on the recyclable trash market and the cooperation of every individual here at UMass, Fager said.

"One of our biggest problems is the people who throw their trash into barrels clearly marked for recyclable trash only. This trash must then be separated by hand," Fager said.

Ideally, he said he would like to see non-mixed paper (newspaper and cardborad) as the main bulk of his shipment. Unmixed paper brings a much higher price on the market than mixed trash, Fager said.

However, because of lack of storage space and separation facilities the sale of strictly unmixed paper is not possible at this time, he said.

"Aluminum is also a problem," Fager said. "Because few cans today are pure aluminum," he said, there is a problem in separating pure aluminum cans from others.

The SSRP is organized by a staff which includes a director, assistant director and three area coordinators whose responsibilities are to organize the project within the living areas on campus.

"The decision to recycle glass must be the dorm's choice. We can't force them to recycle," said Fager. "What we need is cooperation and student interest."

Last semester 26 of the 47 dorms on campus maintained glass recycling barrels with many dorms, especially Dickinson, Hamlin and Patterson doing outstanding jobs in their participation, said Fager. He said that he would like to see every dorm on campus take an active interest in the Recycling Project.

The University Physical Plant disposes of 100 to 130 tons of trash each week. By recycling 120 tons of trash last year, Fager said, the Recycling Project was only able to scratch the surface of this tremendous amount of trash.

Only one-fiftieth of the trash produced by this university was recycled last year. Fager said this figure clearly indicates a lack of interest and active participation.

The SSRP offers people an opportunity to take an active concern for the environment and more specifically for what happens in the town of Amherst said Fager, who added limited landfill space in the town is becoming an increasing problem.

"The University is a tremendous burden on the landfill space in Amherst. As members of the community, it's our responsibility to do our share" said Fager. "This problem can be greatly alleviated by recycling our trash here at UMass."

Michael Fager, a senior in Natural Resource Studies, said he will be leaving his post as director as soon as he finds a successor. He has held the position for the past 14 months.

Fager said a new person will add a new perspective to the project.

Firefighters battle books

By JOAN FEENEY
Collegian Staff

A group of students on campus are fighting more than issues. The nine men living at the North Station Firehouse are both full time students and firefighters.

This student force is no junior squad.

Since 1968, the student force has commanded its own engine company and personnel. Fifty students who lived on campus then worked out of the Central Fire Station, responding to steam whistle fire alarms.

In 1975, the modern building by Tillson Farm on East Pleasant St. was built and designed to accommodate students. It now houses both the student force, commanded by sophomore Captain Thomas Vinsky, and the permanent squad.

"These firefighters are students first, absolutely," says Chief John T. Doherty, "and are required to maintain a 2.5 cum. These men are, however, on 24-hour call as firefighters." Add to that a tour of station duty every eight days, he says, plus training and drills, and you've got a very busy schedule.

This volunteer program is an outgrowth of the UMass Fire Department, organized in 1956 by UMass student Paul Knight. This Recognized Student Organization fought fires and taught campus safety.

Chief Doherty, more than willing to recognize the services of this group, organized in 1967 an independent student firefighting company.

In 1972, Doherty ended the custom of students choosing their own members, fearing the group had become "ingrown" with limited expansion. Since then, the Amherst Fire Department has assumed selection control.

Forty-five students were chosen from 205 applicants the first year. Since then, a "natural reduction" has occurred through students graduating or leaving the program. Four members remained at the beginning of this year. Five out of about 20 applicants were chosen this year.

How about women? No, says Doherty, for social and practical reasons. The design of the station house makes co-ed living impossible. Before anyone complains of discrimination, note that Doherty hired the first woman firefighter in the state two months ago. He says that she ranks among the finest of his department.

Jewish people usher in the new year joyously

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Israelis ushered in the Jewish new year of 5738 Monday with religious services at the Western Wall and at more than 7,000 synagogues around the country.

Thousands of cars and buses jammed the roads in the Jewish state at the start of the two-day Rosh Hashanah holiday and police issued calls for all citizens to report suspicious objects. Increased security forces patrolled to forestall any possible Arab guerrilla attacks.

The holiday started at sundown, just one day after nine Israelis were lightly injured by a timebomb explosion in the Beersheba bus station. Palestinian guerrillas in Beirut claimed credit for the blast in the Negev desert town.

Sounds of the traditional ram's horn at Jewish places of worship around the country marked the beginning of the new year celebrations.

Many Israelis headed for the southern resort city of Eilat and police estimated that 40,000 holiday makers would spend the holiday along the beaches between Eilat and Sharm el-Sheikh, at the tip of the Sinai desert.

The theme of holiday messages by Israeli leaders was a call to return home to the Jewish state, addressed to the estimated 300,000 Israeli emigrants, most of them in the United States.

"Come back home. You are not lost and are not our stepchildren," said Absorption Minister David Levy.

Extra buses and planes were added to normal schedules to handle the crush of tourists and Israelis as hotel owners reported high rates of occupancy around the country.

Customs maintains power to open and inspect mail

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Customs Service must maintain its power to open international mail in order to combat drug dealers and pornographers, customs chief Robert Chasen told Congress Monday.

He told a House government operations subcommittee internal rules for opening international "letter class" mail — equivalent to domestic first class mail and small packages — are being tightened beyond what is required by law to protect individual rights.

But he asked subcommittee members to consider the consequences of legislation overturning a recent Supreme Court ruling allowing the opening of overseas mail if there is "reasonable cause to suspect" it contains contraband.

"Do you really want the international narcotics syndicates, the child pornographers and the professional smugglers to use the mails as free-flowing conduits carrying prohibited items such as heroin, hashish and other poisons directly into this country — with no restrictions at all?" he asked.

Robert Mundheim, general counsel for the Treasury Department, said he has proposed new rules to prohibit customs inspectors from opening mail that appears to contain only correspondence, reading any correspondence without a search warrant, seizing letters even if sent as part of an otherwise illegal package and sending mail to other government agencies without a warrant.

"There must be reasonable cause to suspect that merchandise or contraband is contained in sealed international letter class mail before it may be opened," Mundheim said.

"The mere fact that letters are sent from a country which is a known source of heroin would not alone be a basis for opening them."

Is the will of Howard Hughes signed by him?

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Ink used on the so-called "Mormon Will" of the late Howard Hughes was the same type used by him to write memos to one of his former attorneys, a report filed with the Nevada District Court said Monday.

Attorney Harold Rhoden filed the document when pre-trial hearings began as a prelude to an Oct. 3 jury trial to determine whether the three-page, hand-written document is authentic.

The court imposed a gag order on attorneys and Rhoden filed a lengthy pre-trial statement listing his witnesses.

Rhoden is substitute executor of the "will" and has been gathering evidence for the past 17 months in an attempt to prove the document is valid.

The memos to Hughes attorney Richard Gray used in the ink sample report were written in March 1968 and the "Mormon Will" was dated March 19, 1968.

Rhoden filed a 31-page pretrial statement showing he would call 45 witnesses, including former Hughes aides, doctors, 5 handwriting experts, former Utah service station attendant Melvin Dummar and Levare Forsythe, an Alaska contractor.

Dummar said in an open-court deposition earlier this year a mysterious stranger delivered the document to him. He said he took it to the Mormon Church headquarters in Salt Lake City and left it on a desk.

Forsythe came forward later and identified himself as a secret courier for Hughes and said he delivered the document to Dummar upon prior Hughes instructions.

Dummar receives a sixteenth of the Hughes estate in the Mormon Will.

Clean water by 1985 might just be a dream

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Environmentalists Monday named the trade associations representing the steel, oil, chemical, paper and electronic utility industries "the Filthy Five" for political opposition to enforcement of the nation's clean water laws.

"We have labelled these trade associations the 'Filthy Five' because of their avowed efforts to gut the federal water pollution control program," said Peter Harnik, coordinator of Environmental Action, the citizens group spearheading lobbying action to enforce environmental legislation.

It is chiefly known for originating the "Dirty Dozen" political campaigns against anti-environmentalists in Congress.

The five trade associations named by the environmentalists were the American Iron and Steel Institute, the American Petroleum Institute, the American Paper Institute, the Manufacturing Chemists Association and the Edison Electric Institute.

Harnik said the five trade associations were heavily lobbying Congress to change or eliminate clean water requirements.

"If they get their way in Congress this month, the nation will not reach its goal of clean water by 1985," Harnik said.

Harnik said the five associations have combined staffs of more than 1,000 people and combined budgets estimated at $54 million but that all figures, including what companies belong to the groups, are kept secret.

At issue between the environmentalists and the trade associations is the Water Pollution Control Act Amendments, adopted in 1972 at the height of pro-environmental action in Congress.

The amendments set 1985 as the target date for clean water — "zero discharge of polutants" — and established interim standards for installing clean-up technology that were to be met in 1977 and 1983.

Congress is currently considering changes in the water pollution law and the five trade associations have sought to remove or defer the 1983 standards and the 1985 goal of zero discharge.

FBI agent's son in prison

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Christopher Boyce, 24, son of an FBI agent and formerly employed in a top security defense contractor's job, was sentenced to 40 years in prison Monday for selling secret CIA information to the Soviet Union.

Boyce, who had said he was "disenchanted" with his country because of Vietnam and Watergate, was told by U.S. District Judge Robert Kelleher the stiff sentence was imposed so "Boyce and others like him understand that you play this game at the risk of the most severe penalty."

Boyce's accomplice, Andrew Daulton Lee, 25, previously had been sentenced to life by Kelleher on the same espionage charges involving turning over microfilm and codes to Russian agents at the Soviet embassy in Mexico City.

Two Americans try to cross Atlantic in balloon

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (UPI) — Two American fliers trying to be the first to cross the Atlantic in a balloon splashed down in cold, wind-whipped waters off Iceland Monday, defeated by bad weather more than 800 miles from their European goal.

Maxie Anderson, 44, and Ben Abruzzo, 47, both of Alburquerque, N.M., missed a try at landing on the northwest tip of Iceland before their silver-and-black balloon named "Double Eagle" dropped into the Isafjardardjup, a 50-mile-long inlet of the Denmark Strait, 17 miles from shore.

A U.S. Navy helicopter snatched them out of the water and flew them to Reykjavik for a checkup, but American military spokesmen said both fliers appeared to be in good condition. The gondola of heir craft was equipped to float on the ocean surface.

Anderson and Abruzzo, who set out Friday night from Marshfield, Mass., did not set either distance or endurance marks in their flight, although it lasted almost 65 hours and covered more than 2,000 miles.

American Ed Yost, 57, who splashed down 250 miles east of the Azores last Oct. 10, has come the closest to achieving the trans-Atlantic flight that has been the dream of dozens of airmen. Yost traveled 2,500 miles from his launching point on the Maine coast and stayed aloft more than 107 hours in his bid to make the record books.

Storm winds sent the Double Eagle veering away from Iceland's northwest tip as Anderson and Abruzzo tried at least to end their journey with a landing on solid ground.

Sailors aboard fishing boats and Icelandic coast guard vessels tracking the Americans "saw the balloon glide past them at high speed," a radio operator said at the city Isafjoerdur.

The balloonists, who had hoped to reach Europe by Thursday — they said they would be satisfied with a landing anywhere in France, Germany or Scandinavia — ran into difficulties Sunday when adverse weather patterns kept them looping in circles over Greenland.

They used up most of the ballast used to regulate the Double Eagle's altitude and early Monday radioed a "mayday" distress signal: "Have to land on the ocean sometime today. All right at the moment but getting short of fuel."

The Navy base at Keflavick, Iceland, sent a P-3 Orion search plane, a C-130 Hercules rescue plane and a Jolly Green Giant helicopter out to track the balloon across the rough North Atlantic waters between Greenland and Iceland. High winds in the area whipped waves up to 14 feet high, spokesmen said.

The helicopter, which refueled in the air to keep in close touch with the American fliers, tracked the Double Eagle as it gradually descended the last mile to the surface and splashed down at 5:10 p.m. local time 1:10 p.m. EDT.

Revisions of welfare system sent to Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration yesterday sent Congress a legislative proposal for the first major revision of the welfare system since the Great Depression, a $30.7 billion package of jobs and supplemental income for the poor.

House hearings on the proposed Better Jobs and Income Act are scheduled to begin next Monday.

In a letter to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., HEW Secretary Joseph Califano and Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said the plan would:

"Replace the existing federal welfare reform programs with a single, coordinated program to seek to assure jobs, training and income supplementation for low income citizens able to work and income support for low income citizens in need who are not available for work by reason of disability, age or family circumstances."

The proposal would:

— Create up to 1.4 million public service jobs for the primary wage earner in families with children. These jobs should serve as many as 2.5 million different persons on a temporary basis during one year.

— Consolidate Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income and food stamps into a single system.

— Allow families headed by two parents to receive income supplements if the husband's earnings are insufficient to support the family.

The plan would result in a net increase of $2.8 billion in welfare costs, Congress was told.

State and local governments should save $2.1 billion, the cabinet officers estimated.

States that traditionally pay the highest welfare benefits — California, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York and Pennsylvania — will save more than 25 per cent of their present welfare spending, they said.

No state will save less than 10 per cent of its welfare costs. The administration offered this example of how the plan would work for a family: the husband, in a husband-wife family with two children, who could find no work would get a minimum wage job paying $5,512 in terms of 1978 dollars.

If the family had no other income it also would receive a cash supplement of $1,444, raising the family income to $6,956.

If the husband were working in a private job or a regular public service job rather than a job created under this proposal, he also would receive a tax credit of $476, raising family income to $7,432.

About 15 per cent of the public service jobs can pay 25 per cent more than the minimum wage.

For persons not able to work — the aged, blind or disabled without other income — cash benefits of $2,500 for an individual and $3,750 for a couple would be provided, the administration said.

Single parent families in which the youngest child is under age 7 would not be expected to work but are eligible for public service jobs.

'Roots' used as excuse to take people hostage

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Saying it was a "shame" to use the Emmy-winning television programs "Roots" as an excuse for taking people hostage, a judge Monday sentenced convicted kidnaper Jesse Coulter to 95-to-320 years in prison.

Coulter, 42, of Utica, Mich., stood passively as Hamilton County Common Pleas Court Judge Thomas C. Nurre handed down the maximum sentence on 16 separate counts of kidnap, assault and weapons charges.

Nurre sentenced Coulter to nine terms of 7-to-25 years, six terms of 5-to-15 years and one term of 2-to-5 years. The judge ordered the terms served consecutively.

Coulter was convicted by a jury Saturday of holding eight persons hostage for 15 hours last Feb. 11-12 at a Cincinnati home for unwed mothers.

Coulter, who admitted the kidnapings and pleaded insanity, said the TV series "Roots" motivated him to search for a long-lost son born at the home 20 years ago and put up for adoption. His "search" took the form of holding employes of the home hostage at gunpoint.

"It's a shame you used "Roots" as an excuse for perpetration of this crime," Nurre told Coulter before sentencing him. The judge praised "Roots" and noted it had won six Emmy awards for excellence Sunday night.

Several of Coulter's hostages escaped by getting a sawed-off shotgun away from him and the other hostages were freed later after a policeman tricked Coulter into surrendering by posing as his son.

"Had it not been for the heroic hostages and police, we would now be involved in sentencing for multiple homicides," the judge told Coulter.

Arab-Israeli tensions anticipated at the U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The Middle East could prove the flashpoint of the forthcoming 32nd session of the U.N. General Assembly, diplomatic sources predict.

The world body will focus on all major aspects of the dispute, which has worsened during the summer following the failure of several diplomatic initiatives and the election of Prime Minister Menaham Begin's hardline government.

Already on the Assembly's provisional agenda are the following subjects to be dealt with in separate debates:

— The general situation in the Middle East.

— The question of Palestine and the right of Palestinian Arabs to establish their own state.

— An account of a special committee report concerning human rights violations in occupied Arab territories.

— Financing of the two U.N. buffer forces in the Sinai and Golan Heights.

— Establishment of a nuclear weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Egypt also recently requested a separate discussion of new Israeli settlements in occupied Arab lands and the extension of Israeli laws and regulations to these territories.

"It will be a tough session," predicted Israeli press spokesman Tuvia Saar. "There will be concentrated vocal attacks on Israel with the aim of isolating us as a member country," he said. "We will fight back."

Egyptian Ambassador Dr. Ahmed Esmat Abdel Meguid said the Assembly's attention would be centered strongly on the Arab-Israeli conflict. "The Middle East," he told UPI, "will be in the forefront of matters to be discussed in the new session."

Also during the session, the Security Council will deal independently with at least three Middle East topics: the Palestinian question and continuation of the two U.N peace-keeping forces.

The Council is expected to receive shortly a report and recommendations from the "Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People," a 23-member group created by the Assembly two years ago to promote the Arab-Palestinian cause.

Last year it recommended a timetable for Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied in the 1967 war and restoration to the Palestinians of their properties. The recommended deadline for the withdrawal — June 1977 — already has fallen by the wayside.

The two more critical and immediate decisions to be taken by the Security Council during the Assembly session will deal with continued authorization of the two buffer forces. The mandate of the 4,000-man U.N. Emergency Forces stationed between the Egyptian and Israeli lines in the Sinai expires Oct. 24, and that of the 1,200-man U.N. Disengagement Observation Forces, between Israeli and Syrian positions in the Golan Heights, Nov. 11.

Neither force can be continued without direct authorization by the Council, which, in turn, requires Israeli as well as Egyptian and Syrian consent. If any of the three refuse it, or make it dependent on pre-conditions, the delicate military balance in the area could be jeopardized.

The General Assembly's deliberations will have a hearing on the Council's task of maintaining this balance. In particular, it is Egypt's request for separate treatment of Israel's new settlements policy that may bring fireworks to the Assembly that could spill over into the Council.

What neutral delegations fear is the emergence of a "showdown mentality."

The Egyptians have asked priority for discussion of their agenda item and hope it will be taken up about Oct. 10, immediately following the Assembly's general debate.

No development since the 1973 Middle East war has aroused Arab sensitivities more than recent moves by Begin's government to strengthen its hold on occupied Arab territory by creating new Jewish settlements and extending Israeli legislation to the Arab population, according to Arab diplomats here.

Begin, they feel, is confronting them with a number of faits accompli which he intends to use as bargaining points in any peace negotiations.

The new Israeli policy, the Arabs believe is likely to sour U.N. diplomatic efforts for a resumption of the negotiations in Geneva.

Africa wants majority rule

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — Black Africa will use the forthcoming 32nd session of the General Assembly to take its political drive for majority rule in the southern part of the continent a further step forward.

Recent developments — far exceeding the rhetoric of the past — have encouraged the Africans to press their demands in three directions:

— For establishment of a black majority government in Rhodesia.

— For establishment of an independent state of Namibia in the former mandate of South West Africa.

— Against policies of racial discrimination or apartheid in areas still under white minority rule.

On Rhodesia and Namibia, the situation has moved from a stage of wordy U.N. resolutions into a negotiating phase promoted by western political power.

Sacco and Vanzetti's lawyers believed they had no chance

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (UPI) — The Massachusetts State Police Monday released a voluminous package of wiretap transcripts related to the Sacco-Vanzetti murder case, including conversations of the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter and members of Sacco-Vanzetti defense committees.

The information has been kept secret and locked in a vault for 50 years since the executions of the two Italian immigrants for the murders of two persons during a $15,000 payroll holdup in South Braintree.

Massachusetts Public Safety Commissioner John F. Kehoe said the wiretaps were authorized on Aug. 8, 1927 by former state Attorney General Arthur Reading and had been requested by the then Public Safety Commissioner Alfred F. Foote.

Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, avowed anarchists, died in the electric chair on Aug. 23, 1927, seven years after a trial which captured international headlines. They maintained their innocence up until their deaths.

The wiretaps were placed on phones in the old Bellevue Hotel when the Citizen's National Committee and the Sacco Vanzetti Defense Committee had headquarters in two third floor rooms, and on a phone in the Duxbury, Mass. home of the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter who at the time was a Harvard Law School professor.

The verbatim transcripts of the Frankfurter conversations dealt mainly with detailed legal aspects of the case. At the time Frankfurter was a vocal opponent to the way the controversial Sacco-Vanzetti trial was conducted.

One day before the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti, the following conversation between two persons inside the Bellevue Hotel was recorded by law enforcement authorities, according to the transcripts. released Monday.

"Hello. Well, it looks as if they will die tomorrow."

"Yes, but you know they are guilty and that we have put up one grand and glorious fight for them, even though we didn't have a chance."

"Do you really think they are guilty?"

"Yes, I do."

The names of the two people were not released.

Kehoe said the nearly 1,100 pages of documents related to the case are all the evidence the State Police has in its possession.

Manufacturers say most coffee prices are down

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (UPI) — General Foods Corp., the nation's largest coffee roaster, Monday followed the lead of other major coffee firms in reducing its wholesale prices on ground coffee.

General Foods said it reduced prices on all ground coffees by 20 cents a pound, effective immediately. This takes the wholesale price of Maxwell House, its leading brand, to $3.51 a pound. The firm said instant coffees are not affected by the reduction.

Folger Coffee Co., the No. 2 roaster, Friday reduced wholesale prices on vacuum packed coffees by 10 cents a pound to $3.38. The Cincinnati-based division of Procter & Gamble Co. also reduced prices on instant coffees by 3 cents an ounce to $4.95 for a 10-ounce jar.

Also on Friday, Coca Cola Co.'s food division reduced its ground coffee wholesale price by 20 cents a pound to $3.28 a pound. Coca Cola markets Maryland Club and Butter-Nut brands of coffee.

The companies all said the reductions are in line with declines in imported green coffee prices.

A spokeswoman for Hills Brothers, the third largest roaster, said the San Francisco-based firm was "studying the situation," but had taken no action as yet.

Analyzing the issues

greg tarpinian

Political organizing is useless when there are no issues to organize around. At the same time, organizing around issues has no broad or continuous impact unless tied into a more overall political goal.

Those in all spheres of the political spectrum will surely have no qualms with the preceding statement. Problems emerge, however, when one questions the substance and motivations behind one's method of organization and choice of issues.

As usual, in future weeks student "political heavies" will be searching for the issues which will appeal to the majority of the student body, in an effort to obscure the true message of their adversaries.

We must view campus media releases with a critical eye, all of the time understanding that what is printed has been sifted through the mental framework of skilled political opportunists. We must learn to question the motivation of those who invest lots of time and energy in an effort to make it big on one issue, but place the burden of more general student organization, — like unionization — around issues of education and living at UMass, on "them".

Conditions of learning and living at UMass are at a critical point. We find ourselves sitting on the floors of our classrooms for lack of sufficient faculty, facilities and administrative sophistication. We've been trained to think nothing of it. More than four hundred students found themselves without housing upon arriving for the semester, and have since been moved upwards of five times. We laugh, however, and chalk it up as more evidence to support the case that UMass is a "mickey mouse" institution where students are no more than abstract entities with no definite needs or goals (except, of course, to find the opportunity to party as often as possible).

I can hear it now: "Sure, the students won't care if we put them up in the Campus Center for a couple of weeks as long as we let them smoke marijuana and break some light bulbs. What could be better, the Blue Wall is just an elevator trip away."

But, nevertheless, the conference of "Massachusetts State Assessors" went smoothly; everything right on time; donuts in the morning; cocktails at lunch.

Only rarely do our student leaders speak to the (presumably minor) issues which confront us daily. They are more concerned with showing you and I that they're on top of things of more substantial importance like the legalization of marijuana. When was the last time you felt nervous about getting busted at UMass or in the Amherst area for smoking a joint? On the other hand, when was the last time you were upset about the fact that you are crammed into a 12x12 room with someone you were at one time friends with? Or, when was the last time you were pissed off that you had to go cross-campus to Whitmore to cash a check and the line was 200 feet long? Do you know anyone who's come to UMass and found out that their financial aid forms weren't processed correctly?

Issues exist on different levels. The one who finds the "best" issue survives the longest.

It's our responsibility to call our representatives on the issues and then ask for an explanation of how they all tie in.

We must be weary of the way issues become issues. We should keep in mind the reasons that we're here and what it's like to live day-to-day in this environment. In our analysis of the issues which our leaders shove down our throats we should keep those reasons in mind.

Behind closed doors

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

Notes on a night out:

8:45 Arrive at the dorm from my off-campus bachelor abode in high spirits. Too early to make appearance at bash. Stop by to visit friends first. Door locked, giggling within. Visiting plans canceled.

9:00 Small crowd waiting for elevator, pleasantly chatting. Elevator arrives and a hush sweeps through group. There is no talk on the way up.

9:30 Elevator arrives at 13th.

9:31 Get a beer.

9:40 Everyone looks well. Lots of new faces. Smiles and laughter, visibly absent during the academic week, abound. Beers only a quarter. I casually treat several friends.

10:15 "Well, Exc-u-u-u-s-e Me!" That's me doing my Steve Martin routine. Goes over well. Groucho and Curly are saved for later.

10:30 To bathroom for the third time this evening. Beer is swiftly infiltrating the lower organs. Curses.

10:33 Finished with business here but can't leave. Joe Rude's latest entry longer than usual. A definite lack of profound literature. I hastily scrawl "Never trust a smiling dog" just to the left of the roll.

10:35 Several people socializing directly in front of mirror. Apparently compensating for an adolescent fear of straying too far from potty.

10:40 Bathroom floor sticky with alcoholic substance. Lose a shoe.

11:15 Intense small talk with petite blond. He slugs me.

11:30 Female friend calls me out for a shot of tequila. Accidently take salt and lemon after shot instead of before. Must repeat for the record.

11:45 Tell tasteless joke about giraffe with highballs and record reactions for Psych 301. Scholarly tendencies show through despite original plans to relax.

12:15 Time to boogie. Kinks and Stevie Wonder blare from corner speakers. I dance with one of the wall flowers. Wall flower suddenly blooms after second song. I tell her I have hay fever and retreat to bathroom.

1:00 Crowd in lounge thinning out. A rumor rapidly spreads of wild sex goings-on in several rooms on the floor. Glimpses of half-naked bodies through partially closed doors confirms rumor.

1:20 Paronoia strikes deep. Wall flower finds me and closes in. Time to vacate the premises.

1:25 I make my escape out the back way.

2:00 Hit the sack. There's no place like home.

Injustice unmatched

To the Editor:

This letter is being written on the road home from the Kent State University rally of Sept. 11. Twenty students came to the rally from UMass, and all were inspired by what they heard and saw there.

The May 4th Coalition, an organization founded this past spring, organized the rally to protest the construction of a gym. This gym is to be built on the site where four students were murdered, and another 9 wounded, by the National Guard on May 4th, 1970. These students had been protesting the invasion of Cambodia and the Viet Nam war.

Since 1970, the school has tried to cover up the massacre in a number of ways. They attempted to build a parking lot at the site of the murders, but were confronted by the students and cancelled their plans. Now they want to build a gymnasium there, which before the 1970 incident, was to be built in another part of the campus.

Obviously the new location was chosen to make people forget what has happened there — to make people forget that students across the country united for a common cause and refused to let the system hurt whoever they wanted for their own profits, to make people forget that students were punished — killed — for speaking out on what they felt, and the murderers are walking around scott-free today. Moreover, these students were made to look like criminals. K.S.U. still refuses to recognize the fact that the Kent State massacre was and is a horrible injustice.

Students at Kent State, UMass., and all over the country feel this is disrespectful, unjust, and obscene. Who would think of building a gym at Wounded Knee? All summer long, students at K.S.U. and their supporters have resisted the building of the gym, which was to be completed by September. They fought in the courts for the cause, but it was a dead end from the beginning, although it has been said that the judges were less than unbiased. It has become apparent that only people power will prevent the construction of the gym. The site was occupied by a tent city for 62 days, and over 300 of our brothers and sisters were literally dragged off the area to jail, where bail was set at outrageous amounts.

But students have held their own during their weakest time, and this in itself is a victory. Now, in the fall, thousands of students are returning to the campuses. So last weekend about 500 people from across the country were at the rally, to let everyone know that the issue is not dead.

The students, during a peaceful demonstration, were harassed by 4 men in a jeep. Soon after, the jeep was driven right through the group of protestors, hurting some. When the students began to attack the men in the jeep, they were drawn off by police. The police said the men in the jeep would not be arrested.

Soon after, the students made for the site of the would-be gym, which was declared off limits by a Supreme Court injunction. They tore down the fence and reoccupied the site for a short time, and no students were arrested. This also was a victory.

This rally was held as a springboard for another rally, which will draw thousands of students from across the country — as well as support from foreign countries — and is planned for Saturday, Sept. 24. A meeting will be held for those interested in this cause, in room 413A in the Student Union Building this Wednesday at 7:30.

There are those who have contended that the May 4th Coalition and its supporters are living in the past. We, however, left with the feeling that we are building for the future.

Return to the barracks

Every year at about this time, the national media embark upon the age-old event of Back to School. Women's magazines are the most helpful to us harried students, however; issues include everything from one hundred facial packs that can be made from vending machine purchases to beauty makeovers on women making that difficult fashion transition from high school to college. ("I'm really ready for college now that I've learned to pluck my eyebrows," sez coed MaryLou Finck.)

Since I've been plucking for years I had no use for Glamour's "101 Ways to Pluck." This year I opted for Esquire's Back to School edition and found out something more important than the caloric value of a Big Mac. I found out whatever happened to Hank Healey.

The last time I saw Hank Healey he was in a whole lot of trouble. He was in eighth grade, the perpetrator, and I was in seventh, a mere onlooker, upon the scandal of the decade at Star of the Sea School. It all began when Sister Ellen was leaving school late one afternoon and went to lock the place up. Naturally they kept the spare key to Our Lady Star of the Sea School under the status of "Our Lady," the Virgin Mary. Any kind of robber who would be Catholic enough to make the ccnnection to look there wouldn't be a robber in the first place, right? Anyway, on this spring afternoon, Sister Ellen went to replace the key only to find to her horror that the statue of the Virgin had been altered, and, lo and behold, in the outstretched hands that once held the whole wide world, there now lay a sanitary napkin.

Horrors.

Well, all hell broke loose at Star of the Sea for a week or so, but the nuns kept on the case, hiring third grade siblings of the main suspects to listen in on their brothers' phone calls until they finally narrowed it down to Hank Healey. After many hushed conferences in the convent, threats of excommunication and a future in hell (his crime exceeded that of eating meat on Friday) Hank was quietly removed from the ranks of the holy and placed in a private school.

And so it was natural to assume that a kid who had shown such great potential in his earlier days would go on to bigger and better things, but I hadn't really thought anything about Hank Healey until I opened to a page in Esquire to see a picture of young "Hank" (the quotations are Esquire's) dressed in a tuxedo, cigar chomped in mouth and a glass of top shelf in hand. It seems he made it in and through Princeton and is about to join the living. Yes, he's going to Sierra Leone to teach biology for the Peace Corps. Good work, Hank. (I hope they taught him at Princeton that statues don't menstruate. Well, maybe they do at Princeton ... )

The question of "whatever happened to ... " is second only to "what is reality?" this time of year, and sometimes when I find out, I wish the question had remained unanswered. But every now and then there are little moments that make growing up worthwhile. The girl voted "best looking" in high school dies of terminal acne. The Senior class president gets busted for embezzling Junior Chamber of Commerce funds.

But when I see a statue defacer go on to Ivy Leaguery I wonder why I ever bothered behaving myself at all when I was a kid. Mother always told me life was full of surprises.

No, people ain't what they used to be, thank God. If the past is prologue, as Carl Sandburg wrote, the present and future are sequels, allowing for change and growth, or deterioration. I suppose college is a time when most people come to grips with that growth, or begin to deteriorate. It's not an easy time, but it certainly is a lot more interesting than obeying those yearbook commands of "Don't ever change!"

It seems like this is only the beginning of running into old and slightly familiar faces so I'd better get used to it. Meantime, check out the Esquire Back to School issue. You may find that creep who used to throw up on your desk in third grade went on to become Caroline Kennedy's favorite boyfriend when she's in New Haven ...

editorial comment

A close look at the animated art

By DREW CRANE

Editorial cartoons are used extensively as a powerfully persuasive force in the press. Unlike the printed editorials which should require some thought and analysis by the reader a cartoon is simply absorbed with little or not critical examination. Why bother to examine a cartoon? Aren't you supposed to just look and not bother to think consciously about it? In the answer to these questions of yours lies, believe it or not, one of the many clues to our world's declining condition.

Well executed cartoons of any type can have a devastating effect on a controversial issue or they may simply reinforce the particular impression their author wishes to create...

The beauty or evil of a cartoon is the subtle manner in which its creator summarizes his opinions of some current political, social or economic event and conveys them to you. Depending upon his style and the complexity of the issue he may present anything from a simple sketch to a complex drawing complete with characters uttering caustic comment. Well executed cartoons of any type can have a devastating effect on a controversial issue or they may simply reinforce the particular impression their author wishes to create in the usually malleable public mind.

Editorial cartoons are as important as their textual counterparts but must be used with the same discrimination that is necessary for any semblance of objectivity. Just as you need varying opinion so should you be able to see cartoons expressing different views. To be continually exposed to the thoughts of one editorial cartoonist is a form of propagandizing which should be objectionable to both editors and readers.

The Collegian has published almost exclusively on this Op-Ed page editorial cartoons by the same person, Tony Auth of the Philadelphia Inquirer, which, although well done, are particularly repugnant in the message conveyed. He attacks the obvious problems of our society but offers a solution which by implication will only compound our social ills. He, like so many others, sees the results of government intervention in the economy but advocates more regulation and control. His cartoons only tend to fortify the myths and cliches of today's liberals and socialists. Repetition of misconceptions can only lead to social unrest without the proper solution in sight. That solution, which I have stated before and will continue to reiterate this year, is to discover a capitalism which this country has never known: laissez faire.

When you take the time to read the varying opinions on these pages you should at least follow through by consciously thinking about what you read and conceptualizing your agreement or opposition to these ideas. The same standards should be applied to editorial cartoons to avoid the easy trap of unthinking acceptance which eventually results in your voicing opinions you can't defend. If these cartoons are taken just a bit more seriously then perhaps we can begin to correct the multitude of blatant misconceptions and achieve a more rational social system.

The same standards should be applied to editorial cartoons to avoid the easy trap of unthinking acceptance which eventually results in your voicing opinions you can't defend.

A job not so well done

By GREG BRYANT

This past summer marked the not so startling emergence of the real Jimmy Carter; stripping away his populist, anti-bureaucracy facade and revealing rather an elitist-bureaucrat very much a part of the politician mentality. Carter has in essence displayed that he, like scores of Presidents before him, is unlikely to disturb to any great degree the Washington machine, while also exuding a contempt for the poorer elements of society not so fortunate as he.

Carter has for example stated his sentiments that Medicaid funds should be denied as payment for abortions. I'm sure he realizes that many poor women who cannot afford an abortion otherwise will be driven to the brutality of an illegal abortion. Women who can afford a much safer legal abortion, on the other hand, do not face such dangers. Carter does not seem too phased by such matters though. Quite the contrary, he clarified his decision by matter-of-factly declaring the inevitably of inequality in our system, thus nicely justifying an act that clearly gives the edge to those like himself: the haves. I was under the assumption though, that "our" government was created under the premise of minimizing inequalities, yet they seem merely to perpetuate it. The American political and economic tradition has not strayed from this fact. Carter only seems destined to continue them.

Then there is always Carter's proverbial albatross, Bert "The Banker" Lance. Among other improprieties, Lance used his position as head of the National Bank of Georgia (NBG) to acquire a loan to purchase stocks, then using another loan to pay back the original one. Ol' Bert was found innocent of any illegal actions, yet the morality of many of his dealings is being questioned and his records more closely scrutinized (his political demise is surely soon in coming).

Jimmy did not hesitate to throw his support to Lance in the belief that his friend's banking practices were no different than those of the banking industry as a whole. This action throws doubt on Carter's own morality.

Being a part of the upper income bracket himself — and a former member of the Trilateral Commission — Carter obviously has an extensive stake in the capitalist system and thus will not threaten its existence. Through his virtue as being a part of the one per cent of the American population who essentially run this country, Carter is also entitled to privileges that the vast majority of Americans are not able to exercise. He apparently does not wish to alter this aspect either.

In the case of Bert Lance his privileges include the aforementioned loans totaling $6 million, the amount of stock he was able to purchase (200,000 shares worth about $3 million), and his ability to overdraw his bank account by a hundred thousand dollars (his wife and their relatives amassed overdrafts of over $500,000) until he was told by federal bank examiners in 1975 to discontinue such practices. In addition the NBG paid bills totaling $78,000 for Lance's unsuccessful gubernnatorial campaign in 1973 and 1974 listing them as "bank expenses".

Carter thus sees nothing wrong with any of Bert's dealings. He simply regards them as a natural part of the system.

So much for Carter's often publicized populism. So much for the simple peanut farmer who was out to battle Washington and the corporate-megalomania.

Psychology students organize

To the Editor:

C.U.S.P., the Council of Undergraduate Students in Psychology, invites all students interested in psychology (majors, non-majors, etc.) to attend its first general meeting of the year on Wednesday night, September 14, at 7:00 p.m. in Room 304 Tobin Hall.

We are organized as a combination psychology interest group and lobby for undergraduates in the department. Our main goal is to provide a forum for open communication between faculty and students. One way in which we hope to have this open communication is through our office in 301K Tobin Hall. The primary function of this office will be to provide a student "drop-in" advising system whereby students can come in and talk informally with other psych students (CUSP members) about questions, suggestions, problems or gripes that they have that are related to the department. If we can't help you with your questions or problems, we'll refer you to someone who can.

This all sounds great on paper, but in actuality we can't do it alone. We need student involvement. WE NEED YOU!!!! People are needed to staff the office, work on a newsletter to psych undergrads, and other projects that CUSP has planned. Some of the things that are on the agenda are a Graduate School Night (where you can find out about your chances of making it in, requirements, etc.), writing a current undergraduate handbook, revising the advising program, raising the standards of core courses.

CUSP is our organization. It is here to do whatever we wish it to do. The above possible suggestions are meant only as suggestions. We very much want your ideas, suggestions, etc. The range of things that CUSP can do is limited only by our imaginations, and the amount of involvement that you as a concerned person are willing to put into it. We do have a say in departmental policy, but we need student input to be heard. This is a chance for someone to listen to what you have to say, and a chance for you to take an active role in seeing that things get done.

If you are interested in getting involved in CUSP, but can't make it to our Wed. night meeting, drop a note by 301K Tobin or call 545-2152, and we'll work something out.

Don't forget Wed. night 7:00 p.m. Room 304 Tobin Hall. See you there!

Kathy S. Hammersla
CUSP President

Hail to the idiots!

To the Editor:

HAIL TO THE IDIOTS! THEY HAVE RISEN AGAIN

Stand back everyone, and you shall hear, a tale of idiots, loud and clear. No, I'm not talking about the administration. I'm talking about our beloved Student Senate.

Last week, they once again showed their true colors. They stole 500 dollars of your money and mine to support their own political beliefs that Kent State University should leave unscathed the spot where anti-war demonstrators were shot and killed, a number of years ago.

Maybe while they're at it, they ought to allot a couple of thousand more dollars to erect a shrine in the middle of the street where JFK was shot back in '63. And how about a monument for Charlie Manson? C'mon, he deserves one as much as the next guy.

I'm beginning to believe that the Student Senate will give my money away to anyone. Last spring, through the various RSO organizations, they gave away some of my money for the Seabrook demonstration, and they also gave some of my money to the Peoples Gay Alliance and Lesbian Union. Hell, that means that they give money away on the basis of sex lives. Are there any restraints on how they will give my money away in the future?

Throwing my money away like that, they even had the gall to tell me that there would be a seven dollar increase in my student activities fee for this year.

On this campus right now, there is currently a housing crisis. And what has the SS done about it? Nothing! Oh, they have condemned the administration for their efforts, but have done absolutely nothing themselves in the way of solving the problem. But in the two and a half years that I've been here, that's always been the case. Blame the administration!

So I do hereby make a motion that all further expenditures by the Student Senate must be approved by the Dean of Students before they are made. Maybe the rational thinking of Mr. Field will save me the agony of watching my irrational peers waste away the million dollars that the students pay in student activities fees this year.

Stephen N. Mathieu

The role of criticism

To the Editor:

I was pleased to see mention made in the Collegian that the SGA Co-Presidents will be making critical remarks on the student union implementation plan produced over the summer (as mandated by the Student Senate last May).

Indeed, if there is anything we can't allow to happen as we get on with the building of our student union, it is people accepting without question any proposal. Our union will reflect our own needs and styles only to the degree that we each feel comfortable to give such critical comments.

The opportunity before us in both exciting and important: to create from the floor up our union of students, designed to enhance on every level the opportunity of "every one" (rather than just a few elected people) to participate in important student affairs, and to place the tools of the union (legal, research, etc.) in the hands of small councils of students to help them address their needs. And let us not forget collective bargaining too!

All this is important structural-implementation decision-making and must be carefully examined, not unquestionably assumed.

Lyndon N. Preston

On being literate

To the Editor:

I guess I don't know where to begin dis letter. I never wrote one before to a real newspaper. I guess my biggest problem is not being able to be articulatory. Monday, I waited for 1¼ hours (or was it 2) too get excepted into the UMass Rhetoric program. Than they shut the door. Then Tuesday I got shut out again. After 55 minutes ... I figered that today I get hear real early, (8:30). They open at 9:00. Well it's now 10:15 and the people havent showed up yet. I realize they are bisy people but I need to take a Rheteric coarse. I speek pretty good, but at times my grammer is a bit shaky. Unfortunately I'm a junior and haye never gotten excepted into a Rheteric coarse.

I may deel with every department in dis university but Rheteric can't seam to get it's head out of it's as. It's two bad people like I have two suffer becuz this deportment can't get strait. Oh well I gess I'll always rite like dis. Thanks Rheteric people for being so understandin.

Energy Committee rejects deregulations of gas plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Energy Committee, giving momentum to President Carter's energy plan, Monday narrowly rejected a plan for the gradual deregulation of natural gas prices.

By a 9-9 tie vote, the committee left intact Carter's proposal for raising the ceiling on interstate gas from $1.45 per thousand cubic feet to $1.75.

Republicans and oil state senators, however, planned to make at least one attempt Tuesday to gradually raise the Carter price ceiling to $2.41 by 1981 and to a higher level after that.

Meanwhile, the full Senate continued its own work on the energy plan, rejecting on a 56-25 vote a proposal to take away free parking places held by some federal government workers throughout the nation.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., sponsored the measure, which would have required that federal workers — including members of Congress — who now enjoy free parking pay the same rates charged by commercial parking lots.

He said the fees would have encouraged more use of mass transit by federal employes.

The Senate also was scheduled to vote on legislation which would ban the manufacture of cars that are not fuel-efficient after 1979.

Beginning with 1980 models, no sales would be permitted of cars which run on less than 16 miles per gallon, a standard which would increase to 21 miles by 1985.

That approach to discouraging the use of luxury autos is substantially different from the Carter energy plan, which called for a tax on high-consumption vehicles but no prohibition on their manufacture. The House has approved a slightly watered down version of the Carter taxing plan.

The conservation portion of the Carter energy package before the Senate would set new energy efficiency standards for buildings, home appliances and industrial equipment and make low interest loans available for home insulation.

In the Energy Committee vote, two Democrats, Wendell Ford of Kentucky and Bennett Johnston of Louisiana joined with seven Republicans in the losing effort to send a natural gas deregulation proposal to the Senate floor.

Last year, the full Senate approved deregulation, but the idea was rejected by the House.

The deregulation proposal sponsored by Sen. Clifford Hansen, R-Wyo., would have continued regulation of natural gas produced by offshore wells until 1982, but the ceiling would have jumped to $1.95.

New natural gas produced in states like Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma and sold across state lines would have been immediately deregulated. Gas produced before the start of this year would have remained under federal price control.

House and Senate will not budge on abortion

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate negotiators refused yesterday to budge from their positions on abortion, leaving a $60 billion appropriation to run most of the government's social programs for the next year stalled in its tracks.

The negotiators met for only 28 minutes, then quit without a date to meet again.

At issue is the use of federal funds to pay for abortions for low-income women during fiscal year 1978, which begins Oct. 1.

The House says the federal government should pay for an abortion only when a doctor says it is necessary to save the life of the mother.

The Senate favors a more liberal policy in which the federal government could also pay for abortions in cases of rape and incest and where a doctor says it is "medically necessary."

The leaders of the Senate negotiating team, Sens. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., and Edward Brooke, R-Mass., said the Senate specifically rejected the House proposal 59 to 34 but the House never voted specifically on the Senate's proposal.

They asked for a specific vote in the House on the Senate's position before the Senate side would discuss any compromise.

Rep. Daniel Flood, D-Pa., the chief House negotiator, refused, saying the House has taken its stand in five separate votes, making it clear how it felt about the Senate's proposal.

Whereupon Brooke and Magnuson asked for a recess and the session broke up.

"This is just being stubborn," Magnuson said, referring to the House. "They won't give us the courtesy of voting on our language."

"I don't know of any next step," Flood told reporters. "I don't know how they have the right to insist on what we the House vote on. That's something new."

Until there is some resolution, a $60 billion appropriation to run the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare for the year beginning Oct. 1, on which all other issues have been settled, is stalled.

The proposed House language is the same the full Congress enacted a year ago for the current fiscal year.

Three iron workers fell to their deaths at Mass. General

BOSTON (UPI) — Three iron workers were killed Monday afternoon when the scaffolding they were working on at Massachusetts General Hospital collapsed.

A Boston police spokesman said the three men were dismantling an iron staging of a crane on the roof of the Gray Building, when a section collapsed into the courtyard between several hospital buildings.

Hospital officials identified the men as Michael Flasinski, 31, and his brother Joseph 27, both of Everett; and Richard Costello, 31, of Chelsea.

Two of the men fell onto an adjoining building 13 stories below, and the third man fell 16 stories into the courtyard.

The three were members of the McGarrahan Company, a steel firm in Boston's Dorchester section. They were finishing up work on the building, sections of which were completed as early as 1968.

Robbers use elaborate tools in bank robbery at Boston vault

BOSTON (AP) — What police believe to be a well-equipped team of bandits made off with at least $125,000 in cash from the Suffolk Franklin Savings Bank downtown this weekend after cutting open the main vault with torches.

The bank said the vault was in disarray, and an audit was being performed to determine the exact amount taken.

A police spokesman said maintenance workers discovered the break early Monday morning. He said it was not clear how entry into the bank was made, but the robbers managed to avoid tripping any alarms.

The spokesman said the case had been taken over by the FBI.

A bank spokesman said the theft must have occurred after maintenance workers left Saturday.

One police spokesman said it was the first time in recent years that a team had used such elaborate tools to break into a Boston bank vault.

Early conversion to the metric system has many advantages

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. (UPI) — A South Hadley man's early conversion to the metric system has saved him a traffic fine.

Robert M. Adams, 22, avoided a speeding fine recently when he told Hampshire District Court Judge Alvertus J. Morse he thought his motorcycle's speedometer was measuring kilometers per hour instead of miles per hour.

Adams said he thought he was going only 50 kilometers per hour (30 mph) in a 40 mph zone. Instead he was traveling 50 mph, police said.

Judge Morse laughed through much of the testimony and then placed the charge on file without a fine.

Tutors needed for disabled adults

The Adult Skills Program is seeking students who are interested in tutoring developmentally disabled adults in functional literacy, math and other skills necessary for successful community living.

In recent years, people institutionalized as "mentally retarded" have been encouraged to move back into the larger community. Many of these formerly institutionalized persons are now in the much less restrictive environment of community residences. In order for community adaptation to be successful it is necessary for these people to be trained in essential community survival skills and not merely "dumped" into the larger society without adequate preparation.

Any student interested in participating in the Adult Skills Program should contact Martha Moyer or Peter Murphy at the Mass. Dept. of Mental Health, Franklin-Hampshire Area Office, Northampton State Hospital — 584-1644, Ext. 338. Information can also be obtained through the Boltwood-Belchertown Project.

Project Self workshops

Project Self is an alternative educational program at Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts. Since Fall, 1971 this program has provided a forum in which women can share their skills and ideas with other women in a non-competitive, non-authoritarian, supportive manner.

Every woman, whether facilitator or participant, is understood to be an expert on herself, and all work together to create a workshop structure and format that suits the needs of individuals and the group as a whole.

Project Self tries to offer workshops that would be useful to all kinds of women: mothers, lesbians, older women, students, working women, Third World women, returning students, divorcing women, and so on. In subject matter they attempt to include skills, creativity, spirituality, history, politics, personal growth, and cultural identity. As a result, there is something for everybody.

We offer an opportunity for women to have the space to learn a new skill or art form, meet other women, challenge old ideas, look at new ones, and most of all, to tap and cultivate that potential within every woman to explore and expand her talents and perspective on life.

This fall workshops will be held in four week, weekend, and eight week formats depending on the course. Cost range from $12.50 to $25.00 and partial scholarships are available. Credit can be obtained for approval workshops from the Women's Studies Department.

Included below is a listing of all workshops running this Fall. For more information, call the Everywoman's Center at 545-0883 or drop in at 506 Goodell Hall on the University campus. Registration deadline is September 16.

'Connections' may have freed Conn. politician

HARTFORD (UPI) — Two jurors who convicted lawyer Bernard L. Avcollie of murdering his wife yesterday said they thought the former Connecticut legislative leader's political connection helped him win his freedom.

Avcollie, a former Democratic minority leader, was convicted in July of murdering his wife, Wanda, but Superior Court Judge Simon S. Cohen tossed out their verdict and freed the 45-year-old Naugatuck attorney.

The decision is being appealed to the Connecticut Supreme Court.

The prosecution argued Avcollie strangled his 43-year-old wife, Oct. 30, 1975, to facilitate an affair with a younger woman. Mrs. Avcollie, the mother of five children, was found floating face down in the family swimming pool.

Avcollie maintained his innocence, saying the woman either drowned herself or tell into the pool accidentally.

Five of the jurors yesterday attended a meeting of the General Assembly's Legislative Management Committee, which voted not to investigate Cohen. After the meeting the five discussed their feelings about the trial with reporters.

"The error of this thing is that you know in your heart this man Avcollie is guilty and he either knows the right people or what in the right spot. If it had been any one of us (the 12 jurors) we'd be in jail," said Sally Cady of Shelton. "The jury system is a farce. I feel the Avcollie case was already decided before we were picked."

"It's evident to me that everyone in authority felt they wanted Avcollie walking the streets," said James Brown, also of Shelton.

In addition to Brown and Mrs. Cady, the other jurors attending the meeting were Waltraud Yeager of Shelton, Joseph Drennan of Shelton and Bernard Smith of Derby.

All but Drennan said they felt the panel's decision not to investigate Cohen was a policy of lawyers protecting Cohen because he is also a member of the legal profession.

All five strongly criticized the way the trial was run and said that if Cohen felt the state's case wasn't strong enough — his rationale for tossing out the verdict — then he should not have let it go to the jury.

The five said they would have preferred to find Avcollie guilty of manslaughter because they did not believe the killing was premeditated. But they said in Cohen's charge to the jury he did not give them that alternative.

Confident Pats await NFL opener

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — If positive thinking were the sole contributor to a winning season, the New England Patriots could book their reservations at the Super Bowl in New Orleans tomorrow.

With some justification, the Patriots feel they're the team to beat in the AFC Eastern Division. They were 11-3 last year and in the playoffs came within seven seconds of upending eventual Super Bowl winner Oakland.

They are two-deep at nearly every position, have one of the easiest schedules in the league, are spurred by the bitter defeat to the Raiders and possess a coach who has built a winner from nothing but draft choices and free agents.

Above all, they have the satisfaction of coming into the season as contenders instead of underdogs, something which most players feel is a help rather than a hindrance.

"I don't believe all this business about how we can't sneak up on anyone like we did last year," says tight end Russ Francis, a key to the 1977 Patriots. "We didn't sneak up on anyone last year after our first four games. Everyone knew we were coming."

But the schedule could be a wolf in sheep's clothing. It's loaded with last year's weak teams but any one of them could pull the same surprises the Patriots pulled in 1976.

And there are other intangibles, starting with the contract problems of All-Pro offensive linemen John Hannah and Leon Gray. Both want contract extensions and Hannah has threatened to go home to Alabama if his demands are not met. Both men walked out before the final pre-season game with Atlanta.

Also, Steve Grogan's passing has been inconsistent and the defensive front is questionable beyond the veteran core of Julius Adams, Ray Hamilton, Mel Lunsford and Tony McGee.

Grogan helped the Patriots become one of the league's top rushing teams last year but he admits his passing could be better.

"That's one of my goals this year," he says. "I have to improve on my passing, as that was a weakness last season and in some pre-season games this year. And I'm still going to run, although that slacked off a little last season."

The rest of the team is solid. The Patriots have backs like Sam Cunningham, Don Calhoun, Ike Forte and Jess Phillips — all of whom contributed last season. Rookie Horace Ivory, signed after a holdout, should help. Andy Johnson, however, was lost for the season after a torn right knee ligament torn in the last pre-season game.

The defensive backfield, once the league's doormat, is now anchored by All-Pro Mike Haynes, Tim Fox, Prentice McCray and Bob Howard. Backups are Doug Beaudoin, Dick Conn and top draft choice Raymond Clayborn of Texas, who had two touchdowns on kick returns in pre-season.

A strong linebacking corps is led by inside standouts Steve Nelson and Sam Hunt. Steve Zabel and Pete Barnes probably will start in the outside positions. Jim Romaniszyn injured his knee but a healthy Rod Shoate and Steve King add depth.

The team also has a well-balanced receiving corps, led by veteran Darryl Stingley, rookie Stanley Morgan and Francis.

The ever cautious Fairbanks won't make any predictions but says the team came along well in pre-season drills.

"We've had a good camp," he said. "Good spirit, everyone wants to play, and there are no problems."

Special teams were once a perennial Patriot thorn but no more. Mike Patrick is one of the league's best punters and John Smith has been more than adequate as a placekicker.

Rookies Morgan and Clayborn have been so good on the punt and kickoff returns that Haynes, who led the AFC in punt returns last year, will be used solely as a defensive back to start the season.

The key to the team is Grogan. If he can run the ball without getting hurt and improve his passing, the offense will be tough to stop.

But the Patriots need good performances from everyone, especially Cunningham, Francis, Nelson, Hunt and Haynes.

Haynes, like everyone else, knows the Patriots have the talent to go all the way. But he won't say it.

"I tend to look at the Phoenix Suns of basketball," said Haynes. "One year, no one thought they were worth anything and they made the finals.

UMass 10th in NE soccer

STORRS, Conn. (UPI) — The University of Connecticut soccer team, with 50 points, remained where it ended up last season in the preseason poll of New England soccer coaches — in first place.

UConn, which split a pair of games with nationally-ranked teams last week while most if its rivals were idle, received all 10 first-place votes, taking a five-point margin over Brown and 10 over third-place Rhode Island.

The voting coaches split their ballots after that, with Bridgeport taking fourth. UConn plays Bridgeport Wednesday.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release TUESDAY, Sept. 13, 1977

TUESDAY, Sept. 13 — Born today, you are one of those affectionate creatures who pines away when left for too long without anyone on whom to lavish your affection. In most other ways, though, you are extremely independent and can, in general, be found going about your own business in your own way and enjoying to the fullest your own successes. You are a cautious individual for the most part, hesitating perhaps overlong at times to take advantage of auspicious circumstances.

Although you are not self-indulgent, you are somewhat inclined to indulge those of whom you are fond in whatever small vices they may have. You have a great desire for personal happiness, but like most people, you are not at all sure how to about fulfilling such a desire.

You are not one to drift aimlessly from one thing to another, though you may at times go from one involvement to another in an extremely annoying way – annoying to you and to those responsible for you. You must learn how to change horses in midstream gracefully.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 14

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take care not to disturb another's dream of domesticity. You can be of great help in the rescuing of another's ego.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Several entangelments you didn't expect to be part of keep you from making the kind of gains you had hoped for today. Take time to relax.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Self-control and self-discipline: these will keep you from making the same kind of mistake others have made – much to their misfortune.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Don't waste your energy attempting to deal with matters obviously either over your head or too far "gone" to be rescued.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Continued self-indulgence may cause you to lose out on important results of last week's effort. Try to think of the "other guy."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You should be able to sense more than a compatibility between you and another today. Take advantage of what is obvious admiration.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Dissension on the employment scene may be enough to cause difficulties in getting a new phase of your work off the ground.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Look before you leap – but once you've ascertained where you will be landing, leap ahead! Don't fear new enterprises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The pride of work well done serves to launch you well into your next project. Don't hesitate to ask questions should you be in doubt.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you are certain you can master a new method of accomplishing an old chore, give it a try. Better safe than sorry, however.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — It should be obvious to all that you are in dead earnest regarding your career progress. Avoid argument; speak your mind peaceably.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — One person on the employment scene or on the home front must take the lead. If you cannot be the "boss," be a good and responsible follower.

Hannah, Gray walk; Johnson gone for year

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — The New England Patriots had no news on the offensive front and bad news in the backfield Monday as they prepared for the National Football League season.

Coming off an 11-3 season in 1976 and a 5-1 exhibition record in 1977, the Patriots seemed playoff-bound this year.

But their offensive strength suffered three bad blows Sunday. First All Pro linemates John Hannah and Leon Gray walked off the team prior to the Patriots' 29-10 win over Atlanta. Then starting halfback Andy Johnson suffered a third quarter injury that will sideline him for the season.

Patriots owner Billy Sullivan met with Howard Slusher, agent for the linemen, on Saturday and twice on Sunday — before and after the game against Atlanta. Sullivan steadfastly refused to renegotiate the players' long-term contracts. Counting the option year, Hannah has four seasons remaining on his contract and Gray three.

Through Slusher, the pair has sought contract extensions and other financial arrangements to bring their salaries up to a level of other All-Pro linemen. While coach Chuck Fairbanks was mulling the ramifications of the Hannah-Gray question, he learned Johnson had suffered a torn medial collateral ligament in his right knee when an Atlanta defender fell on him in the third quarter of the final pre-season game.

Johnson, a fourth-year pro from the University of Georgia, underwent successful surgery late Sunday at Norwood Hospital by Dr. Donald Akikie.

The Patriots will have to use reserve fullback Jess Phillips as a halfback and hope second-year runner Ike Forte and rookie Horace Ivory have recovered sufficiently from minor leg injuries.

If Hannah and Gray refuse to suit up, they will be forced to sit out any regular season National Football League action until their option years are completed.

Hannah has asked to be traded if his contract is not extended.

Fairbanks, meanwhile, is concerned with his roster problems heading into Sunday's season opener against Kansas City.

"If they come back, we'll be glad to have them. But if they don't, I'm not going to suspend them," said Fairbanks. "I'll find out the best way to handle the situation if it comes to that."

The Patriots apparently think the NFL office will allow them to keep the roster limit of 43 players while leaving Hannah and Gray in limbo.

If Hannah and Gray must be kept on the roster New England would be forced to carry just 41 players.

"I've got reason to believe we'll work that out," Fairbanks said.

If the two players remain inactive, Fairbanks will have a very large hole to plug in the offensive line.

Shelby Jordan and Pete Brock filled in for the two All-Pros in the Atlanta game and did well. But quarterback Steve Grogan and the running backs will have more problems penetrating the left side than they did last year while setting a club rushing record of 2,948 yards.

"I didn't want to say anything against the young guys who are playing, but I don't think you can make a comparison with Hannah and Gray," Grogan said. He is running less and passing more quickly this year in their absence.

Get ready fans - September is now

The pot has been simmering all season, and it appears now as though the Red Sox—Yankees rivalry is about to reach the boiling point, as Boston moves into Yankee Stadium tonight to open a critical three game series.

At present, the pinstripers lead by one and a half games, and one game in the loss column, but the Yankees are coming off an embarrassing weekend split with the Toronto Blue Jays which was culminated by a 19-3 drubbing on Saturday.

Boston, on the other hand, is red hot, having won five in a row and eight of its last nine games. Carlton Fisk has forgotten how tired he is just long enough to go on a batting tear, and the pitching, believe it or not, has actually been good, at least for now.

The Red Sox, though, have no reason to feel cocky about the series either. Even with their impressive winning streak, one has to remember that the eight victories have come against Toronto and Detroit, hardly what you'd consider legitimate contenders. And besides, if there is one thing the Sox have shown us for sure this year, it's that when they seem to be riding high, it's time to look out.

Before falling on their most recent hard times, the Yankees had been playing the best baseball in either league, winning in one stretch 24 out of 27 games.

Reggie Jackson has let his productive bat make more noise than his productive mouth, and has been carrying the offensive burden in the wake of a slumping Thurman Munson. Mickey Rivers has been doing his thing to perfection as well, namely, spraying hits, stealing bases, and scoring runs. Of course, he has also been misjudging fly balls and underthrowing cutoff men, but that's beside the point.

Other than Fisk, the Red Sox have been aided by the bats of Jim Rice, who leads the league with 38 homers, including that big grand slam against John Hiller, and, of course, by the ever-present Carl Yastrzemski. The resurging pitching, strangely enough, has been sparked, not by Luis Tiant, Rick Wise and Fergie Jenkins, but by rookies Mike Paxton and Don Aase and Don Zimmer's season-long forgotten man, Bill Lee.

Paxton, 9-4, will open the New York series tonight against Ron Guidry, who at 13-6 has been the Yankees most consistent starter all season long. The Yankee lefthander features a blazing fastball, but has been prone to the long ball this year, a fact which must delight the Sox' fabled sluggers.

Reggie Cleveland, 9-7, will oppose Ed Figueroa, 14-9, tomorrow, and Luis Tiant, 10-8, will do battle with Mike Torrez, 16-12, in the series' finale on Thursday night.

At present the season's series stands at 5-5, and few of us have forgotten those two wild weekends in June, when first the Red Sox, and then the Yankees swept three-game series against each other at home. The two teams will meet again next week in Boston for a two game set and by then things should certainly be hot.

And so, sports fans, Red Sox lovers and haters alike, hold on to your respective hats, whichever color they may be. If nothing else, the series should at least prove interesting, and if there was any way the Red Sox could possibly win one and a half of the three games, they'd probably find a way to do it. We've all been waiting since March for these days. Let's just hope that everyone involved is ready for them.

Sox invade Big Apple

BOSTON (AP) — It could be the season this week when the Boston Red Sox take the field at Yankee Stadium tonight for the first round of a three-game standoff series against the Yankees.

The Yanks lead the American League East, one and a-half games ahead of the Sox.

Yanks-Red Sox relations are not what one would call jolly.

The Yanks visited Fenway Park early this season and lost a weekend series. A week later, the Sox visited the Bronx. They made up for the previous week's performance by losing three straight.

The Red Sox led the division through much of the summer while the Yanks drifted in and out of contention.

Now the Yanks are on top, and behind Boston, the Baltimore Orioles are closing in on both clubs.

The game is televised. Game time is 8 p.m.

NL cites top players

NEW YORK (UPI) — Cesar Cedeno of the Houston Astros and Willie McCovey of the San Francisco Giants have been selected as co-players of the week in the National League for the period ending Sunday, Sept. 11.

Cedeno led the Astros to five wins in six games, hitting 12 for 30 (.400) in continuing his 14-game hitting streak. For those games, Cedeno hit a home run, drove in seven runs, scored six and stole three bases for a total of 51, second in the league behind the Pirates' Frank Taveras.

Cards' Brock honored

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals was recognized as "the best base-stealer in Major League baseball history" in a resolution introduced in the senate yesterday by Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo.

"Whereas Louis Clark Brock, generally known as Lou Brock, a great American and outstanding athlete, on Aug. 29, 1977, at 8:33 p.m., in San Diego, Calif., stole his 893rd Major League base thereby breaking the record held by Ty Cobb for over 49 years," the resolution said.

"Whereas Lou Brock, by virtue of his feat in equaling and surpassing Ty Cobb's previous record of 892 career stolen bases, has established himself as the best base-stealer in Major League baseball history."

The resolution also commended Brock's contributions off the field, including his work through the Lou Brock Boys' Club of St. Louis and his place on the board of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters of America.

UMass's nemesis

Hall named QB of star backfield

NEW YORK (UPI) — Army's Leamon Hall is the quarterback who has the pro scouts both drooling and shaking their heads.

Hall could be the best passing quarterback in the nation this year but he can't be considered for pro ball because of his long military obligation after graduation.

So Hall must confine his heroics to college football and Saturday he boosted his number of school passing records to 20 as he threw five touchdown passes in a 34-10 victory over UMass. The 6'5", 220-pounder from Apopka, Fla., who set single game and career marks for touchdown passes, yesterday was named quarterback on UPI's first backfield of the week for 1977.

Joining Hall in the backfield are running backs Terry Miller of Oklahoma State, Dexter Green of Iowa State and George Woodard of Texas A&M.

Hall threw touchdown passes of eight, 54 and 18 yards to freshman Mike Fahnestock, a 16-yarder to Keith Wilson and an 11-yarder to Tony Landry. He eclipsed Pete Vann's record of 25 career TD passes and now has 28.

Miller, one of the leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy this year, rushed for 189 yards and scored on runs of 16 and 13 yards to lead Oklahoma State to a 34-17 victory over Tulsa. He was the leading underclassman in Heisman balloting last season.

Woodard, Texas A&M's 270-lb. fullback, scored three touchdowns and rushed for 150 yards to power the Aggies to a 28-14 victory over Kansas. The bruising Woodard scored on runs of 14, one and 51 yards to help push Texas A&M to a 28-0 lead.

Green scored three touchdowns, including a 51-yard run on his first carry of the season, in Iowa State's 35-9 victory over Wichita State. Green, who had 1,074 yards last year, also scored on two one-yard runs. He gained 85 yards in 16 carries and then sat out the second half.

Earning honorable mention for backfield of the week were West Virginia quarterback Dan Kendra, Southern Illinois back Clarence Robison, freshman quarterback Bob Commings of Iowa and Mississippi State quarterback Bruce Threadgill.

Kendra threw two TD passes and ran for a third score in West Virginia's 36-0 rout of Richmond.

Injury picture brightens; Fallon may play Saturday

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The injury report isn't as bad for the UMass football team as most people originally thought.

More specifically, quarterback Mike Fallon may be back in time for Saturday's Yankee Conference game against Maine.

Fallon was examined yesterday by orthopedic surgeon George Snook, and the verdict was, at least if not totally favorable, a bit hopeful.

According to coach Dick MacPherson, Fallon's leg will not be placed in a cast.

"We're going to give him some treatment and observe him for the rest of the week," MacPherson said last night.

He added that Fallon will be re-examined by Snook Friday, and if his torn knee ligaments have responded favorably to the treatment, he may be able to play Saturday.

If he is unable to play in UMass' home opener, Fallon's place will be taken by Mike McEvilly.

However, guard Russ Cooke's medical report is not as promising.

MacPherson said that Cooke (slight concussion) will still "be out for a while," and that his starting spot will be taken by Gerry Greene.

Ross Schubarth is slated to move from his normal tackle position over to the other guard post, while the rest of the offensive line should remain the same.

Alec Westerlind, listed second at guard on the preseason depth chart, has a bad ankle and will not start Saturday.

The offensive front will line up thusly against the Black Bears: center-Mike McLaughlin, guards-Greene and Schubarth, and tackles-Jim Penta and Bruce Kimball.

Lou Brock is honored prior to last night's St. Louis-Chicago game for his new career stolen base record. Brock was playing in his first contest at Busch Stadium after eclipsing Ty Cobb's mark. See related story in Baseball in Brief, page 19. (UPI)

Baltimore Oriole shortstop Kiko Garcia (3) slides safely into second base with a steal in action last night against the Toronto Blue Jays. The Orioles defeated the Blue Jays, 6-3, behind Jim Palmer and pulled to within 2½ games of the idle Yankees. (UPI)

Palmer notches 16th; Birds top Jays, 6-3

TORONTO (UPI) — Dave Skaggs drove in two runs with a pair of singles to help Jim Palmer earn his 190th career victory and move the Baltimore Orioles to within 2½ games of first place in the American League East last night with a 6-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Palmer, who gave up seven hits, struck out seven and walked three to notch his 16th win against 11 defeats this season. He was relieved in the ninth by Dennis and Tippy Martinez when the Blue Jays scored all their runs.

Dave Lemanczyk, 11-14, took the loss for Toronto. The victory enabled the Orioles to gain a half game on both second-place Boston and first-place New York who were idle.

Baltimore took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Al Bumbry singled and moved to third when first baseman Doug Ault dropped a throw on a grounder by Rich Dauer. Bumbry scored on a single by Ken Singleton.

The Orioles made it 2-0 in the second when Kiko Garcia reached first on a fielder's choice, stole second and scored on Skaggs' single. Pat Kelly led off the Orioles' third with a walk, stole second and came home on a base hit by Eddie Murray to make the score 3-0.

In the Orioles' sixth, after Doug Decinces doubled, Andres Mora hit a sharp grounder to third base. Decinces was caught off the bag at second but in the rundown scored on an error. Mora moved to second on the play and advanced to third on a single by Garcia. He then scored on Skaggs' second single of the game.

Steve Staggs trippled in two Toronto runs off Dennis Martinez in the ninth. Staggs then came in on a fielder's choice.

Baltimore 111 002 001 — 6
Toronto 000 000 003 — 3

E — Ault, Staggs. DP — Baltimore 1, Toronto 3, LOB — Baltimore 7, Toronto 10. 2B — Decinces, Bumbry. 3B — Staggs. SB — Garcia, Kelly.

Pity the poor pinstripers

Is this the real life, is this just fantasy?

Sitting in the Drake on a Saturday afternoon with Murph, Dale, Tim, and Jimmy. The Sox were on the color screen in front of us, taking on the Tigers. Other Red Sox fans mingled around the semi-crowded tavern.

But the important thing — how were the Yanks doing?

Then the score of the Blue Jay-Yankee game was announced.

First, 2-0 Toronto. Then 4-1. The barroom crowd was psyched.

When it was announced that Toronto led 11-3, the Drake was buzzing.

16-3 was almost unbearable. Almost passed out when the final of 19-3 Toronto was announced.

That night, I got to thinking. It's not right. Red Sox fans should feel sorry for the Yankees. Here's an expansion team with such well-known celebrities as Roy Howell, Tim Nordbrook, and Al Woods taking advantage of the Big Apple's millionnaire pitcher Catfish (or is it Goldfish) Hunter, and the rest of Billy Martin's boys.

There should be some sympathy shown for our neighboring state's American League entry since their National League team is having a rough season (the Mets record is just about opposite that of the Yankees).

Rather than lose any sleep over it, I put the matter out of mind, figuring the Yankees could get even with the Jays via a doubleheader sweep to wind up that series.

It never materialized. The two teams split the games and the series. Toronto was smiling. Martin is staying away from the phone (his job is secure-at least through tonight's game).

Now the Yankees are feeling badly. They couldn't sweep the Jays at home, and during the year have had a rough time with the other 'new' club, the Mariners.

Their once secure lead of four games, has dwindled to 1½. 'Hate Yankee' clubs have been spurting up across the country.

Yet, no one will shed a tear for New York.

In any other league the Yanks would be kicking tails. They'd be (approximately) eight games up on the White Sox in the AL West, 11½ up on Pete Rose's Reds (NL West) and 6½ up on the Pirates of the NL East (not to mention 31 games up on the Mets).

But they're in the AL East as we all know, where they can hide from the Indians, Brewers, etc., but not the Sox or the Orioles.

And still, not a tear shed.

They have to worry not only about winning ballgames, but whether their car is being ripped off while they're up at bat; whether they'll make it out of the stadium alive if they blow any more games; and who their manager will be next season.

And still not a sob is heard.

Oh, there were a few students still donning NY hats still seen on campus yesterday. Not a single one was purposely tossed into the campus pond (meaning the NY hat, not the student). But the 'Go Yankees' and 'Way to field 'em (Graig) Nettles-kid' signs have been removed from the side of the 'Rocket Ship' library.

Still, no march to church to pray for the New Yorkers.

Well, I'm gonna do it. I'm gonna feel bad for the Yankees. I'm gonna go to church and pray for them.

I'm gonna pray hard. Please Lord, please. Please don't let the Sox sweep 'em, or sneak into first place some other way. Please don't let Nettles have another day like 'that day.' And please, Lord, don't allow the Jays to pick on the Yanks anymore. Reggie (Jackson) was really down in the dumps.

Yup, I'm gonna pray extra, super hard.

And if you believe that, I've got this unbelieveable deal I'll give you on a used Pontiac. And some swampland in Florida you might be interested in.

Just don't cut in front of Martin in the unemployment line next month. He feels bad enough as it is.

Dukakis vetoes anti-abortion bill

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis vetoed a proposed ban on the use of public funds for abortions in Massachusetts yesterday, but backers of the curb planned a new effort to put it on the lawbooks.

Dukakis told a State House news conference the measure sought by Reps. Raymond Flynn and Charles Doyle, both Boston Democrats, amounted to discrimination against the poor.

"I don't believe the people of this state support a dual standard of justice in Massachusetts based on wealth," Dukakis said. He predicted the legislature would sustain his veto.

The bill, opposed from the outset by Dukakis, was approved by a wide margin in the House but by less than a two-thirds majority in the Senate. Thus, opponents of the curb have been counting on the Senate to sustain the governor's long-expected veto.

However, Flynn disclosed a new strategy for getting the abortion curb into law — making it a part of a supplementary budget scheduled for consideration in the House on Wednesday. He said he and Doyle would introduce an amendment hooking the ban onto the supplementary budget, which contains a pay raise for state employes.

If that occurs, the governor would then have to try getting the abortion rider stricken by sending the budget back to the House and asking for deletion of that particular section. If that failed, he could veto the entire budget package. The anti-abortion camp is hoping that if a pay raise is at stake, either Dukakis will be deterred from a veto or else a two-thirds margin will be mustered in both houses to override him.

Some of the governor's advisors think the governor could use a line-item veto to kill just the rider, but Daniel Taylor, Dukakis' chief counsel, said he doubted such a maneuver would stand up in court. He said line-item vetoes customarily are used just for deleting specific appropriations, not for changing broad policy provisions.

The Doyle-Flynn bill, subject of bitter debate all through the summer, would prohibit the use of government funds to pay for abortions under the Medicaid program. It was proposed shortly after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that states are not obligated to finance abortions through their welfare programs.

There has been disagreement over whether the bill would also cut off state employe health insurance payments for abortions. Dukakis said a "reasonable interpretation" of the bill is that such payments would continue and added this makes the discrimination in the measure even worse.

The federal government recently stopped its support of Medicaid abortions and the Dukakis administration said the state would take over the entire cost in Massachusetts. Last year about 5,000 such abortions were performed in the state, costing about $1 million.

Trustees to decide on S. Africa stocks

By GAYLE YOUNG
and MARY BROWN

The UMass Board of Trustees will decide today if they will sell University owned stock on companies with holdings in South Africa.

A sub-committee, formed in April to investigate the University's stock holdings after students requested an investigation be initiated, unanimously requested stocks in three companies be sold.

The committee members, including student trustee Marion "Pinky" Batiste, trustees Daniel Dennis, Paul Marks and UMass Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnston, have also recommended the University review their holdings in eight other corporations.

The trustees meeting, to be held at 2 p.m. in Memorial Hall, will also be the site of an outdoor rally, described as a "teach-in" by Batiste.

The rally will be conducted by the Committee for the Liberation of South Africa.

In executive committee before the full board session, the trustees will also decide if they are willing to hear a speaker from the rally outside. A vote will also be taken to approve the showing of the film "Last Grave at Dimbaza" during the trustees lunch break. The film is about the apartheid practices in South Africa.

Batiste said she is confident both motions will pass.

Stock in the Amax Corp., FMC Corp., Newmont Mining Corp will be sold if the full board accepts the special committees recommendations.

Rally organizers say they are satisfied with selling stock in three companies because UMass owns stock in many other companies with holdings there.

These corporations have investments in the copper and mining interests in South Africa. The trustee sub-committee has also asked reviews be conducted of Eli Lilly and Company, Honeywell, International Business Machines (IBM) Johnson and Johnson, Eastman Kodak, Nabisco, Smithkline Corporation and Pfitzer Inc.

Stocks in Caterpiller, Exxon, General Electric, Goodyear, General Motors, Motorola, Sothern Company, 3M, and Xerox will be reviewed if the sub-committee's vote passes.

According to Batiste, the group will also recommend that University investment counsel include a report on each proposed investment to keep all future investments consistent with University investment policy.

If the proposed votes are approved, Batiste said the committee will spend the next three months studying the approximately 3200 shares of stock in the eight companies left to be reviewed.

The committee will also consider reviewing stock in other companies the University now owns, she said.

Last year, students from Hampshire College, a liberal arts college located four miles from UMass, occupied the Hampshire administration building until trustees agreed to sell stocks in companies with holdings in South Africa.

UMass students say they will not go to these extremes to get the University trustees to sell their stocks, but will call upon the trustees to sell "in an orderly fashion."

The trustees have also been asked to hear an appeal from UMass-Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Golino, expected to retire next year at age 65. The trustees recently passed a motion which would require all senior level administrators to retire at age 65 unless they are asked to stay by a majority vote of the board.

Golino is expected to ask to stay on at Boston, but some observers say the trustees will probably turn down the request.

Another personnel matter to be discussed by the trustees is the appointment of an associate vice chancellor for community development and planning.

Batiste said she thinks the salary for the position is about $40,000.

The trustees may be unwilling to approve the creation of the position, tabled from the last board meeting, since the job is being viewed as unnecessary.

The board is also expected to approve the operating and fee budgets of the three campuses at tomorrow's meeting, formalizing the budget appropriations UMass received from state funds in July.

The board will not take up a discussion of tuition waivers, as they had planned to earlier this year.

The Student Affairs Committee of the board is in the process of discussing athletic tuition waivers, Batiste said, which were "sent back to committee" as a result of a trustee vote in July.

In-state athletes were to receive 66 tuition waivers, had a June vote approving those waivers been allowed to stand. The trustees rescinded it in July.

The student affairs committee is expected to bring up a full tuition waiver policy sometime this semester.

WMUA - campus radio

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Ahem, FM.

In 1933 a curious gentleman named E.H. Armstrong did a curious thing. He invented FM radio.

Long considered the poor cousin to AM radio, FM came of age in the mid-1960's when the number of stations blossomed from the original 25 stations licensed to operate in 1940, to somewhere around 3000 today. Within a period of a few years FM had become big business.

The Pioneer Valley today is served by three FM outlets, though signals from other more distant stations can be picked up easily. Two of the stations, WMUA (91.1FM) and WFCR (88.5FM) are non-profit educational stations. (See related story opposite). The third, WH-MP, is a commercial 3000 Watt AM-FM station in Northampton.

What often times distinguishes a radio station from the ubiquitous musical offerings of its competitors is the quality of the local news operation. Because both non-commercial stations, WMUA and WFCR, are educational stations, they do not face genuine competition.

"Fortunately-or unfortunately, we are the only FM station providing full time coverage of the area's news. Most of the other area news is nothing more than re-fried local wire stories. Then again, we're also not in the position of having to compete with other stations," co-News Director William "Biff" Price said.

Co-Director Robert H. Levine maintained other local stations, AM and FM, have cut down their commitment to local news. "Rip-and-read news is out," Levine declared flatly.

Originally conceived as a closed-circuit station, WMUA has operated continuously since 1948. The 1000-watt station in Marston Hall is staffed by 125 students and community members.

Last July the station revamped its news operation, switching from conventional newscasts to a "newsmagazine format". The 5:30 Magazine, according to Price, is an attempt to integrate hard news storiss with feature reports and news likely to be overlooked in a conventional newscast.

"We have never tried a format like this in the past, so we really are out to see what we are capable of doing. Stories will be weighed equally: Big and little. But because radio is basically an entertainment medium, the emphasis will be on features," Price said.

Besides offering a closer integration between news and public affairs programming, Price said the new format allows enough flexibility "to drop everything if the big story comes around." WMUA will also program 15 minute newscasts at 7, 7:30, 8, 8:30 and 9 a.m. and noon and 11:55 p.m. Price said.

WHMP newsman Hugh Massey disagreed with Levine and Price, however. Massey, a 1973 UMass graduate, said while the emphasis of WHMP's FM programming is on music, local news is still covered with a "young slant".

"The new approach calls for tighter editing and tighter writing. International news is held to a minimum. The audience is the young age group and doesn't particularly care what happened in Ethiopia on any given day. They want news with direct consequence and effect on them," Massey said.

Massey said the thrust of the news is aimed at the 18-49 "youth market". This includes, but is not solely focused on, college-age listeners, he said.

"Plus I doubt they will dominate the market mainly because of the sheer strength of our signal. We have 3000 Watts FM," Massey said.

The co-directors said they plan to expand area coverage to Northampton and Greenfield, as well as providing more in-depth Amherst coverage.

The station broadcasted live the Amherst Town Meeting last May. Levine said full coverage is expected for next year.

WMUA Sports Director Arthur J. Quitadamo said the streamlined format will make for a smoother transition between the news and sports sections of the magazine.

While sports will still occupy five minutes of the broadcast, Quitadamo said beat reporters covering soccer and cross country will add greater variety to the program.

Quitadamo also said the sports staff is planning a "Game of the Week" program which will alternate between women's basketball and men's hockey. Final arrangements have not yet been made, he said.

WFCR - the classics

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Classical music and jazz enthusiasts have for 16 years been tuning their radio dials to WFCR, 88.5 FM, a non-commercial station broadcasting from Hampshire House on the southwest part of the campus.

The station which also broadcasts a myriad of news programs, is heard in six states, 20 hours daily.

WFCR is a professional station and employs only persons trained in radio broadcasting, although there are two volunteers working regularly at the station, according to Joan Wilber, program coordinator.

Being non-commercial, WFCR gets no revenue from advertising and relies on grants, five-college aid, and listeners for financial support. Forty per cent of its funding comes from listeners.

The station begins each day at 6 a.m. with "Daybreak," an hour of taped classical music from Boston's WGBH. Works of such artists as Beethoven, Mozart, Gershwin, Shavez, Bach, Brahms, Vivaldi and Handel are featured.

WFCR also broadcasts classical music Monday through Friday afternoons on "Pedal Point". Late-night classical tunes can be heard Monday through Thursday at 11:30 on "Music for Night People."

Jazz can be heard on the station Fridays at 11:30 p.m. until sign off at 2 a.m. and Saturdays at 10:30 p.m. WFCR also broadcasts special programs, such as "Dutch Treat," Great Black Music," and "Music from Germany."

A variety of news shows are broadcast throughout the week at 1 p.m. Examples are: "Firing Line," with William F. Buckley; "Images," reflections of black people and their lives; "Pacifica," exploring different cultures; and "National Press Club," with the world's national newsmakers addressing the club in Washington, D.C. Also offered are news programs focusing on Japanese, Arab, Israeli, French and Spanish news.

"All Things Considered" is the station's major news show. News, features and commentary from the National Press Release in Washington, D.C. are discussed weekdays from 5 to 6:30 p.m. and weekends from 6 to 6 p.m.

"Daily Roundup", aired Monday through Friday, presents area events and headline news. In addition, WFCR broadcasts reading programs, one for adults at noon, and one for children at 7 p.m.

SW Assembly emphasizes goals

By JILL METLITZ
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) plans to emphasize its goal this semester, that of combatting racism and sexism in Southwest, announced Diana Fessenden at last night's opening meeting in Hampden Student Center.

Fessenden said not many Southwest residents were aware of this fact, and the hope this year of the SWA is to increase communication between dorm representatives and their constituents.

The SWA also plans to establish a system for suggestions to which the assembly can publically respond. Furthermore, the SWA hopes to increase its social activities, a prime student complaint of last year's assembly.

Also last night, the Student Organizing Project (SOP) presented a workshop explaining student unionization. It is SOP's goal to change the University's power structure and allow the students to take part in collective bargaining, representatives said.

SOP feels students should have a say in policies such as tuition raises, food costs, class scheduling, and helps to protect student's rights. SOP will hold a meeting this Sunday, and is sponsoring a lecture by Dick Gregory tomorrow night.

On Sept. 29, the assembly hopes to sponsor an outdoor, all-day concert. Tentatively scheduled are Sass, a hard rock group, Chris Rhodes, a bluegrass-jazz band, and Images, a band that has frequented the Hatch.

The assembly has also planned a carnival early in October. With rides and concession stands, the assembly hopes to appeal to the Amerst community as well as the student body. The possibilities of a parachuting exhibition and fireworks are also being discussed.

Fessenden stressed that in order for these plans to take place all houses in Southwest should have elected representatives by next Tuesday's mandatory business meeting.

Add-Drops due sundown on Friday

There are three days left to change to or from pass-fail, add, or drop a course without record. The deadline is sundown, Friday, Sept. 16.

Note: If you are pre-registered for a class but never attended, you still need to file an official drop form with the Registrar. Instructors will not automatically drop you from their class rolls.

UMass student arrested

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

Amherst police Monday night issued a warrant for the arrest of a 22-year-old UMass Continuing Education student on drug charges, a police spokesperson said yesterday.

Michael J. Cosine of 25 Nutting Ave., is charged with possession of marijuana with intent to sell, possession of a hypodermic needle and syringe, and sale of marijuana following a police search of his apartment. Cosine was not home at the time of the search.

According to police, events leading to issuance of an arrest warrant began Monday morning when Officer Thomas O'Connor spotted two juveniles on Spring Street and recognized one as a runaway. Both youths were brought to the station, where they were found possessing marijuana, and it was discovered that the second youth wanted on a felony larceny charge in Chiopee.

From the youths' information, police were led to obtain a search warrant for Cosine's apartment, which they entered at about 6 p.m. and found a "sizeable amount" of marijuana.

Police said further charges against Cosine were to be sought at Northampton District Court yesterday.

There are more college newspapers published in the United States than commercial daily papers — true or false?

True, according to Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies at UMass, who has just completed the fourth edition of his Directory of the College Student Press in America.

The directory is published by Oxbridge Directories, Inc. It lists not only the locations of student publications, but also historical, typographical, financial, and statistical information.

In his research, Politella found that 2,524 college newspapers were printed in 1977 compared to 1,756 commercial daily papers. 2,581 campuses have reported for the latest directory, listing 5,499 forms of media, which includes magazines, yearbooks, and campus radio stations. The campus media claims a circulation of 11,832,435.

With such a large circulation, the student press provides a profitable channel to the college-age market.

"No one ever compiled a directory for the student press," Politella said, "No one realizes the power of the student press. It's a multi-million dollar industry with a buying power of an estimated $25 billion a year."

He said the directory was invaluable to politicians and was even used by Robert Kennedy in the 1964 presidential campaign. Also, the Nixon Committee to Re-Elect the President used a copy to send out press releases and gain promotion.

Other users of the directory are advertising agencies, charities, the federal and state governments, as well as public relations firms.

As a result of an item in the Wall Street Journal last spring, Politella received calls from Washington, Los Angeles, Chicago, and New York inquiring about the next edition.

The directory is published every two years. Politella says he already sees the next edition as having over a hundred more pages with a listing of student radio and television stations, as well as the newspapers.

Politella dreamed up the project of a student press directory in 1968 when he was president of the National Council of College Publications Advisers (NCCPA). It was a labor of love, all royalties went to the NCC-PA, he says.

He compiled his directory from the most authoritative sources available — student editors, faculty editorial, business advisors, and presidents of campuses around the country.

Politella is internationally recognized as an authority of campus press in America. He is an author of six books and has written over 500 magazine and newspaper articles.

The Directory has grown from a small paperback edition to 1968, selling 500 copies, to the 1977 large hardback edition, selling over 2,000 copies. It is the most comprehensive compilation of data about the campus press that is available anywhere.

"Who owns what?"

By LARRY UCHMANOWICZ
Collegian Staff

With the intention of helping citizens gain the necessary skills to bring about social change, the Citizen Involvement Training Project (CITP),a three-year project sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education and the Cooperative Extension Service at UMass, began last December.

According to Dave Magnani, project coordinator, CITP attempts to help citizens answer questions like "Who decides how I eat, dress, work, and travel? Who owns what?" and, "How many votes does a dollar buy?"

Located in 138 Hasbrouck, CITP provides this training through four formats: consultation sessions, written training materials, workshops, and a citizen involvement library and resource center.

According to Robbie Gordon, media coordinator for the project, the consultation sessions are free. "After the session," Gordon said, "the group or person sometimes sees that the problem was not as bas as they thought, or that the problem is sometimes deeper rooted than they thought."

Workshops are held on the core needs of the region in which they are held. CITP has divided Massachusetts into seven regions: all with different problems and goals. Methods for reaching the people include volunteer action projects, training festivals for citizen's groups, and through the core workshops.

"There has been good reaction to these methods," said Gordon. "We hope to continue to maintain a profile of UMass expertise and community involvement."

The entire project is funded by $188,000 grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Michigan.

The CITP staff includes eight full-time workers and six to eight work-study students and volunteers. The staff is "non-hierarchical," according to Magnani and major decisions are made by all staff members, including students.

The staff's background includes membership on the Governor's Commission on Community Education, the Governor's Commission on the Status of Women, co-founding of the Vocations for Social Change Office, The Boston People's Yellow Pages, The Holyoke and Chicopee Children's Yellow Pages, the Spanish-American Union, and Public Television.

The staff members are now in the process of developing, tabulating, and distributing an in-depth needs survey to show citizen's groups what types of problems they may face. Also in the works is a video-project to raise citizen involvement, focusing on the question "Do citizen's have control?"

Some of the groups served by CITP are the Gray Panthers, the Worcester Area Alcoholism Council, neighborhood councils, the Western Mass. Health Planning Council, drug rehabilitation centers, the Alternate Energy Coalition, Easter Seals, Home Care Corp. and others. To date, CITP has served or worked with over 100 groups throughout the state.

UMass first major college to go metric

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Ready or not — the metric system is here to stay and the chemistry department at UMass leads the country as the first major university to switch to the modernized SI (International System of Units) metric system.

UMass joins Europe, Canada, and Japan in this venture. Eventually all major manufacturing countries, including the U.S. must go SI, which means students and faculty must learn as well.

Previously, scientists used a wide variety of metric units and prefixes. The switch to SI means discarding many units such as the calorie and replacing it with the international unit, the joule.

Problem solving currently is plagued by converting units which in turn slows down and complicates the process. This chore will die with the adoption of SI units.

For the freshman chemistry students who will work with the modernized SI units, learning will be easy, but the professors must recondition their minds and rewrite new problems.

"People have this great fear of the metric system," says Evan Johnson, head of the Metric Resource Center in the School of Education. "They think it will make their lives more complex, but we've been drifting into it all along and we just don't realize it."

The department of physics and mechanical engineering have gone totally metric and the department's of hotel, restaurant and travel administration and home economics are in the process of switching over.

"Although there has been no official mandate which says UMass must be metric by a certain time," explains Johnson, "we're making a coordinated effort through workshops, the Metric Resource Center and the various departments to spread metric awareness about campus."

The U.S. is the last nation in the world to go metric. Economically speaking, we must. Beginning July of 1978, no European bloc nation will accept auto imports from the U.S. if not metric. Next year the U.S. Weather Bureau will report temperatures only in degrees Celsius, posted speed limits and mileage indicators will soon be metric, and even weight watchers will be counting joules instead of calories.

There is no need to panic yet. The University Store has a variety of metric-learning resources to assist students and faculty in learning the SI system. "We've been anticipating this (the metric switch) for years," said the store's trade book manager. Pamphlets, metric converters, and manuals are available ranging from $.50 to about $3.50.

According to Johnson, it only takes about two and a half hours to learn the S.I. system.

The current metric system used in the U.S. will soon become a primitive relic. And UMass is leading the way in a new era of simplified communication.

Group helps rape victims

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Rape is a very real experience. It does exist on-campus and off-campus as well. It is a topic that people do not like to discuss, which is not helpful for rape victims. When someone is raped, there becomes a need for them to talk about the experience, to sort out how they feel about it, and overcome the bad after effects that occur.

Last year, a "Support Group for Rape Victims" was started with the help of facilitators Serena Lurie, and Leslie Goldberg. Goldberg is working in a local human service agency and was at Room-to-Move for two years. Lurie is a graduate student in counseling at the School of Education and has worked at the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center.

This same kind of group will meet this year beginning Sept. 26, at the Everywoman's Center. The group was formed to help female adult (18 years and older), rape victims. It will be a small group made up of eight women, to give each member a chance to have their say. It will be a "safe" environment, everything said will be confidential, and there will be no pressure on the group to talk so members can talk and listen as they wish.

Rape is a frightening and devastating experience, and after it has happened the trauma can be very painful. There are many things the victim has to decide; what to do about medical examinations, whether or not she should go to court, and just being able to talk about it without feeling to blame are important aspects.

Often a woman will feel unique, she will feel she is the only one it has happened to. By bringing women together to talk about this similar experience, it helps them to see what others are going through.

A woman may want to deny rape has happened to her and never think about it. But in reality, it bothers her in the back of her mind, which may cause nightmares or other emotional distress. By not talking about it, in the long run will hurt the woman more, because she will never be able to talk comfortably about it, and never feel really good about herself.

When a woman is raped she may feel her power is gone. Her power to control situations because she had no control in the rape situation. To get this control back is an important thing, and this group will be able to help women do just this, Goldberg says.

The group will begin Sept. 26 and will meet every Monday for ten weeks from 7 to 9 p.m. If you are interested contact the Everywomen's Center, 506 Goodell.

Mass. PIRG needs people

By RICHARD LENIHAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) is looking for "people who are dissatisfied with things," said Executive Committee member Essie Schwartz last night before a group of about 45 people at a recruitment meeting in the Campus Center.

Stressing the need for consumer action, she added, "complaining is good but doing something about it is even better."

Founded in 1972 by Ralph Nader, MassPIRG currently consists of 17 chapters on colleges across Massachusetts. The UMass chapter is working in the areas of telephone company reform, investigation of the hazards of nuclear power and asbestos, as well as combatting them, and restaurant sanitation and the development of alterantive energy sources.

While MassPIRG receives its funding from students in the form of a $2 negative check-off, it is currently holding a raffle to help raise money to get 90,000 signatures in support of TelCAG, the telephone reform group. The prize will be a stereo system valued at $680 and the drawing is Sept. 28.

Amin rests well After surgery

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Ugandan President Idi Amin, who underwent minor surgery last week, is recovering in a hospital tent on an island in Lake Victoria and received his first foreign visitors Tuesday, Kampala Radio said.

The report said a "special delegation of Palestinian liberation forces" was the first group of foreigners to call on Amin since his operation last Wednesday.

Kampala Radio did not disclose the nature of Amin's ailment or his condition.

It said Amin was staying in a mobile medical unit — a tent — provided by his "suicide striking force" on Carlos Island in Lake Victoria, near Entebbe.

Amin named the island after the head of a visiting delegation of American blacks earlier this year.

The broadcast appeared to confirm that Amin had not suffered serious complications from the operation, which was performed by a Soviet surgeon.

Amin's withdrawal into seclusion coincided with a public outcry from other African leaders over the execution of 15 persons, most of them accused of plotting to overthrow Amin's regime.

However, Kampala Radio said "thousands of messages" were pouring into Amin's office in support of his decision to go ahead with the executions.

In another sign that the unpredictable Ugandan leader was capable of handling his duties, Kampala Radio said Amin had issued a proclamation in connection with the end of the Moslem holy month of Ramadan.

He congratulated Ugandans on their fortitude during the month of fasting and wished them a happy future, the radio said.

Amin has not been seen in public since he went to Mulango hospital for the surgery.

A film of the operation broadcast on Uganda television last week showed the Soviet doctor making a small incision on Amin's neck.

Some western residents of Kampala said it looked like a blemish was being removed.

Co-star of "Whats Happening," recuperates

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — Child actress Danielle Spencer left the intensive care unit at St. John's Hospital Monday, reportedly recovering satisfactorily from injuries suffered in an auto accident last Tuesday.

The 12-year-old co-star of the TV series, "What's Happening," suffered a number of fractured bones in the accident which claimed the life of her father, Timothy Pelt, 39.

Black leaders upset

CONCORD, N.H. (UIP) — Black leaders in New Hampshire, bitter over Gov. Meldrim Thomson's criticism of the late Martin Luther King Jr., plan to honor the slain civil rights leader.

The leaders planned to meet tonight in Bedford to coordinate their efforts with an Oct. 14 testimonial in New York City for King's father, the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr.

Thomson refused an invitation from U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young earlier this summer to attend the dinner, saying he strongly disapproved of Young's and King's civil rights activities and accused both of being associated with Communist causes.

The ethics committee of a predominantly black church in Portsmouth sent Thomson a letter earlier this week, scoring the governor for his remarks and urged him to stop.

In addition to honoring King, the black leaders said they will seek to bring a "significant speaker" to New Hampshire to appear on college campuses and champion minority causes.

Thomson, who is chairman of the International Conservative Caucus, has launched a petition drive to seek Young's ouster. In the letter seeking funds for Young's removal, Thomson claimed the U.N. Ambassador had "deep involvement with both domestic and foreign Communists and Communist-inspired terrorists and organizations."

CCEBS Convocation

"An inspiration to Freshmen"

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

On September 16, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) will present its annual convocation. It will be held in the Shirley Graham Dubois Study Lounge in New Africa House at 7 p.m.

In an interview with Dr. Michael L. Jackson, the Director of CCEBS, it was learned that the basic purpose of the convocation is to function as an "inspiration to freshmen."

"The convocation," he said, "serves as publicity for goals of the coming year. We want freshmen to meet each other and "to understand what we (CCEBS) are trying to do."

This is the second annual convocation. Said Jackson, "no type of vehicle existed in the past" to acknowledge the achievements of minority students.

Upperclassmen will recieve academic awards which he is hoping to act as an instrument to gear freshmen toward better academic achievement.

This year convocation will be combined with the fall reception because of external problems, that arose from UMass's housing situation. "This year the reception and the convocation will be combined," Jackson said, "because of the current housing situation, we don't know where all of our students are."

Jackson hopes to increase the scope of the convocation in the future by introducing, scholastic-athletic awards. This will enable black athletes to be recognized who have maintained a certain accumulative average while participating in a full-time college sports.

125 to 150 people are expected to attend the convocation. Catering for the reception will be done by Yvonne located in the New Africa House.

A party will follow the reception, everyone is urged to come out for an enjoyable evening at the New Africa House.

Two Blacks emerge in Detroit primary

DETROIT (UPI) — Two black men, incumbent Coleman A. Young and City Councilman Ernest C. Browne Jr., defeated two whites Tuesday night in the primary election for mayor of the nation's sixth largest city.

The two white candidates, Wayne State University law professor John Mogk and businessman Thomas Dailey, conceded defeat just 2½ hours after the polls closed at 8 p.m.

With less than 2 per cent of the vote in from the city's 1,122 precincits, Browne was leading with 1,925 votes, Young had 1,394, Dailey 766 and Mogk 495.

Various media projections based on test precincts identified Young as the top vote-getter, followed in order by Browne, Dailey and Mogk. Young was said to have carried black precincts, but trailed Browne badly among whites.

Workshops

Project Self, an alternative educational program at the Everywoman's Center, is launching its fall series of workshops. A few of these are of special interest for Third World women. "Third World Women and the Arts", facilitated by Marilyn Chin and Roberta Uno, is a sharing and support group in which sisters can meet, discuss their works, and encourage each other as sister artists. This runs for four weeks and meets on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m. Another workshop is "Health Education and Issues for Third World Women". Facilitated by Carol Reliford, a nursing student, this workshop is designed to give Third World women an opportunity to explore and discuss health issues pertinent to themselves. Topics include contraceptives, self-help, and how to deal with your physician. This workshop will run for eight weeks on Thursdays from 7-9 p.m., and credit is available. Another workshop is "West Indian Culinary Arts and Dance", facilitated by Loida and Dian John of Yvonne's Kitchen in New Africa House. This workshop will meet for one weekend (Sat. and Sun., 12-4 p.m.) and then for four weeks (Wed. 7-9 p.m.). Other workshops include: "Ethnic Roots, Our Grandmothers and Ourselves", "Frame and Off-Loom Weaving", "Survival for Mothers", "Women's Practical Self-Defense", "Hatha Yoga", "I Ching", "Political Women: Their Autobiographies", and "Investment Planning".

Costs for these workshops range from $12.50 to $25.00, and partial scholarships are available. Credit is available for some of the courses, most of which begin the week of October 3. # Narc charged with perjury

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — The Vermont Supreme Court yesterday sent back to District Court in Burlington for further consideration the perjury charges against former narcotics agent Paul Lawrence.

The high court this summer overturned the 1975 perjury convictions on grounds testimony had been admitted on alleged crimes for which Lawrence had not been prosecuted.

The court later agreed to rehear arguments by the Chittenden County state's attorney's office.

Chittenden County State's Attorney William Sorrell said a plea agreement has been reached and he hopes the case will be resolved in the lower court in about a week.

The stipulation will not affect Lawrence's perjury convictions in Franklin County Superior Court, for which the former drug agent is now serving up to 10 years, Sorrell said.

Lawrence was credited with hundreds of drug arrests before he was charged with perjury and lying to fellow police about his investigations. Former Gov. Thomas Salmon later issued gubernatorial pardons for people convicted solely on Lawrence's testimony.

SDS outlaw surrenders

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark Rudd, leader of student uprisings at Columbia University in 1968 and a fugitive, will surrender to authorities today, his attorney said.

Rudd will surrender at the office of Manhattan Dist. Atty. Robert Morgenthau at 9 a.m., his attorney, Gerald Lefcourt, said.

Lefcourt said Rudd, once identified as a leader of the terrorist Weather Underground, will surrender to the state attorney's office in Chicago the following day.

He declined to say where Rudd is now or why he decided to surrender himself after years of hiding.

He was indicted in 1969 in Chicago in connection with bombings by the Weather Underground.

Lefcourt said Rudd would face misdemeanor charges here stemming from the Columbia University demonstrations and charges in Chicago stemming from demonstrations in 1969. He also faces bail-jumping charges, Lefcourt said.

Rudd was indicted by a grand jury in Chicago with 11 others for conspiring to incite and participate in violence during the "Days of Rage" demonstrations in October, 1969. He disappeared after the demonstrations.

Rudd, from Maplewood, N.J., was elected national secretary of the Students for a Democratic Society in 1969 after he was expelled from Columbia for leading the student revolt there. He played a key role in organizing the Weather Underground.

In 1975, newspapers reported that friends had received smuggled letters from him that were written in Cuba. At that time, Rudd was believed being held in a camp in Piar del Rio, a province southwest of Havana, on unspecified charges.

The New York Daily News reported then that the letters said Rudd had been placed in a camp for the rehabilitation of homosexuals after he had been arrested.

Convicted embezzler repents

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — A former bank manager convicted of embezzling $487,316 was sentenced Tuesday to up to six years in a federal prison.

William M. Murphy, 24, of Woonsocket, R.I., pleaded guilty July 25th to charges of embezzling from the East Greenwich branch of the Old Stone Bank.

Before sentencing, Chief Judge Raymond J. Pettine of U.S. District Court called the case "a tragedy". He said Murphy's behavior was surprising for someone without a previous record.

"You acted so abnormally that I feel the sentence should carry with it treatment and supervision," the judge said.

Murphy took an oath that he gambled away all of the embezzled money. He was arrested in March while vacationing with his wife at Walt Disney World in Florida.

"I understand that what I did was wrong and for that I am truly sorry. The past year has been one of panic and fear. I'm glad it's over," Murphy said. "My life right now is basically ruined. I'd simply like to put the pieces back together."

Frank Lind, Murphy's lawyer, said his client was in a "panic" situation, trying to recoup earlier gambling losses, and said his lifestyle did not indicate there was "money to burn."

Nun charged with "spreading alarm"

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — An American Roman Catholic nun charged with "spreading alarm" in Rhodesia admitted Tuesday she supports black nationalist "freedom fighters" and indicated that if she were black, she would join them.

Sister Janice Ann McLaughlin, 35, of Pittsburgh, told a court hearing on her request for bail pending trial that she had compiled "fact papers" on alleged torture of blacks by army troops but that she would plead not guilty to charges against her.

A tall, bespectacled woman with a jutting jaw and an aquiline nose, the Maryknoll nun looked relaxed as she stood in the dock wearing a white and blue checkered dress, a blue sweater and sandals.

The judge said he would deliver his ruling on granting bail on Friday.

Sister Janice has been charged with "spreading alarm and despondency" in Rhodesia. The prosecution contends that the "fact papers" compiled for the Catholic Peace and Justice Commission violates the Law and Order Act.

The prosecution, seeking to deny the nun bail, entered her diary as evidence. The diary was confiscated from her apartment hours after she was arrested at the justice and peace commission offices Aug. 31.

Police superintendent Daniel D. Stannard quoted at length from the diary. In one passage, Sister McLaughlin allegedly wrote: "If I had a black skin, I would join the boys guerrillas."

Oct. 24 Vets' day

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter Tuesday proclaimed Oct. 24 as Veterans Day and asked Americans to remember sick and disabled veterans who are in hospitals.

In a proclamation, Carter said "no act of citizenship is more worthy of our respect than a willingness to serve in our armed forces and to protect and defend our ideals."

He said the blessings of liberty which Americans enjoy "have remained so because in each generation there have been men and women who have been willing to suffer the hardships and sacrifices necessary to preserve our rights for future generations."

Twenty die in Kansas flood, many homeless

Phil Travis, with suitcase in hand, takes one last look as he leaves his Heart Trailer Court in Kansas City underwater due to severe storms

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Rain-swollen creeks and rivers that surged over their banks and sent walls of water through sections of Kansas City left almost 20 dead, hundreds homeless and what one official called "total destruction" in some areas.

Rescue workers concentrated their efforts Tuesday on underground garages at a shopping center, pumping them out in search of additional victims.

§At midday, the official death toll stood at 18 and there were reports of other people missing.

"We have no idea how many cars there are or if there's anybody in any of them," said Frank H. Spink Jr., director of emergency preparedness for the city, discussing the pumping operations at three parking garages in the Country Club Plaza shopping center. Most shops and stores were closed when the flood struck, but restaurants and bars were open.

The floods, spawned by the heaviest recorded rainfall in the city's history, hit hardest at the shopping center in the southern part of the Missouri city and at a trailer park and industrial district in the east. Water rose to five feet and more in streets and buildings. Telephone and power outages were reported.

The rains started before dawn Monday, saturating the ground. When another downpour hit Monday night, the water ran off into normally placid creeks and low areas, causing the flooding.

"In all of my born days, in all of my experience on the job, I haven't seen anything like this," said Bennie Imperiale, deputy fire chief.

'It was total destruction — large cars floating down the street, large cars being stacked like cords of wood, cars being floated right into businesses, cars floating into people's basments," he said.

"The currents had to be very strong to pick up big cars like that. Until you see it, you would never believe it."

At the Country Club Plaza, flooding from Brush Creek formed a wall from six to 12 feet high, sending waters rushing through streets, shops and clubs. Customers in one restaurant fled hurriedly as the water level rose to five feet in less than 15 minutes.

On the east side of the city, the Blue River went out of its banks and forced evacuation of a 500-unit trailer park and caused damage in the Leeds industrial district.

Irish woman wins award

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Sadie Patterson won the World Methodist Council peace award Tuesday for trying to persuade her countrymen to stop killing each other. Then she learned a young relative had become the latest victim in war-torn Northern Ireland.

"I received a bouquet in one hand and inside the hour I heard how a boy of whom I was proud had died," said the 69-year-old trade union and peace movement organizer. "You have to take the kicks in life."

Robin Smyrl, the 25-year-old grandnephew of Miss Patterson, was gunned down in an ambush at a deserted country intersection Tuesday as he drove to his job in Plumbridge, 55 miles northwest of Belfast.

The young bachelor was manager of a women's clothing factory and part-time member of the Ulster Defense Regiment, an auxiliary militia force comprised almost entirely of Protestants.

The Irish Republican Army, the mostly Roman Catholic force seeking to wrest Northern Ireland from British rule and unite it with the neighboring Irish Republic, claimed responsibility for the killing.

Smyrl was the 1,779th person to die in the sectarian violence that has plagued Northern Ireland since 1969.

"The fight will go on to save our country in spite of the sadness I feel," Miss Patterson said at her home in Belfast's Shankill district after receiving word of her award and her Smyrl's death.

The peace award, acccompanied by a $1,000 prize and medallion, is given annually to a Methodist who has rendered distinguished service to the cause of peace in some part of the world.

"She has sat with the men of violence and dissuaded them from bombing and shooting and has been escorted back across the peace line to her home," the award citation read. Though her home is in an area often wracked by violence, it has not been hit by bombs or bullets.

Her mother died when Miss Patterson was 13, and Miss Patterson raised seve brothers and sisters while working in a factory.

"She has worked in factories practically all her life and has always been a champion of social justice," said the announcement in London. "She campaigned for women to be admitted to the police force and has worked among juvenile delinquents."

Miss Patterson was Ulster's first woman union organizer and in 1956 became the first woman chairman of the Northern Ireland Labor party.

When she began organizing textile workers, Miss Patterson recalled "it didn't matter whether you were a Catholic or a Protestant because we were all paid the same pittance."

In 1972 she helped found the Women Together Movement, an organization of Protestants and Roman Catholics seeking peace in Ulster. She chaired the group from 1973 to 1976, and also helped start peace groups in Rhodesia and South Africa.

Last year a group of youths knocked her down during a peace rally in Belfast and Miss Patterson still suffers from spinal injuries.

Thompson vetoes abortion decision in Illinois

CHICAGO (AP) - Gov. James R. Thompson, saying he was acting 'out of a sense of duty and conscience,' vetoed legislation which would have denied welfare funds to poor women who want abortions.

If the veto is upheld by the state legislature, Medicaid funds will continue to be used to pay for the abortions of women on welfare.

Last June, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that states have the power to prohibit public welfare funds from being spent on abortions, and at least 28 states have passed legislation to do so.

Oil companies consider drilling off N.E. coast

BOSTON (AP) — A new hurdle may be ahead of companies interested in drilling for gas and oil off the New England coast.

The National Marine Fisheries Service has recommended that the entire Georges Bank and the Nantucket shoals area off Cape Cod become a marine life sanctuary, the Christian Science Monitor reported Tuesday.

Enactment of the recommendation could mean a ban or restrictions on oil and natural gas drilling in those areas to meet conservation standards set by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, of which the NMFS is a branch.

The Monitor said the proposal may be a move to tighten NOAA's grip on fisheries management in the zone.

NMFS and the New England Fisheries Management Council have been wrangling over control of fish stocks since the 200-mile fish limit law gave jurisdiction to the Council, the Monitor said.

In a memo to the NMFS director in Washington, D. C., the regional New England NMFS director recommended that the area be turned into a marine sanctuary because, he said, the fisheries management council is too restricted to protect the bank's natural habitat.

Big-E starts today

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Although dwarfed by the Midwest's huge state fairs, the Eastern States Exposition is the largest event of its kind in New England, billing itself as the Big E - sort of a state fair for the region.

Beginning today, its 56th annual mix of agricultural competitions, midway rides, commercial displays and entertainment make this Springfield suburb a resort town for 12 days and nights.

Officials of the exposition, run by a non-profit organizatinon, say they hope attendance will hit the million mark for the first time, surpassing last year's 970,000.

New Englanders come from the far reaches f Maine and the suburbs of Boston, farmer mixing with suburban gardener to watch the cow judging and the horse show, to be jolted by midway rides and to tour the buildings sponsored by each of the six states.

Police here enlist some 120 auxiliary officers to help handle the traffic tieups and to watch for the occaisional outbursts of trouble.

Carter, aides knew of Lance overdrafts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter or his aides knew prior to Bert Lance's confirmation as budget director that Lance and his family had $450,000 in personal overdrafts, that he had campaign overdrafts, and that his bank had incurred loan losses, according to the White House.

In statements Monday and yesterday, Press Secretary Jody Powell acknowledged that:

—He, top presidential aide Hamilton Jordan and White House Counsel Robert Lipshitz saw a Jan. 6 FBI report on Lance shortly after it was issued. The report detailed how the Georgia banker, his family and his in-laws had run up $450,000 in personal overdrafts at the family bank in Calhoun, Ga., in 1974 and 1975.

—Carter learned two weeks before nominating Lance on Dec. 3 that Lance's 1974 Georgia gubernatorial campaign maintained overdrawn accounts.

—Carter accepts Lance's word that his Calhoun bank suffered loan losses which never were repaid in 1975 at the time Lance was chairman.

Besides making those disclosures, Powell on Tuesday detailed what Carter personally knew about Lance's financial problems prior to nominating him budget director.

He made these points:

—Carter knew only about Lance's problem with bank overdrafts related to his unsuccessful gubernatorial bid in Georgia in 1974. "The President reaffirms the only matter which stuck in his mind... was the matter of 1974 gubernatorial campaign overdrafts."

—"At no time was he (Carter) aware... of the existence of a Justice Department referral on this or any other matter. He cannot personally pinpoint the exact time he became aware of the campaign overdraft problems, but... assumes it was in his conversation with Bert Lance in mid-November."

—Carter assumed he learned the contents of a press release on Lance's financial problems — prepared in response to a reporter's request but never issued — in a Dec. 1 conversation with Lance. That release said the Calhoun bank had loan problems in 1975 "associated with the decline of the construction industry and related businesses," and that Lance's 1974 gubernatorial campaign had overdrawn accounts.

—Carter has read "at least portions" of an FBI background report on Lance since expressing wholehearted support for Lance Aug. 18 after a new report by the comptroller of the currency was issued.

Flood volunteers shunned

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Hundreds of volunteers who answered an early morning plea yesterday for boats and manpower to rescue victims stranded by rising floodwaters were amazed that some people did not want their aid.

Bob Bauer, a 23-year-old truckdriver from Kansas City, Mo., said he offered his help about midnight yesterday and planned to stay as long as he was needed.

"I been out there with the others, trying to get people out of their cars and off their houses," he said. "But some people don't want to come out, and some people we rescue want to go back right after. It's insane."

About midmorning authorities realized that a televised plea for help had elicited more than they could use, and declined any further offers. More than 400 volunteers already had converged on a service station across the street from the Truman Sports Complex, near the Leeds district, where the police had placed a mobile command unit.

An officer listening to a direct line to the police dispatcher downtown relayed distress calls to waiting rescuers, who sped off in all types of vehicles to snag people wherever they were stranded. Dozens of water-soaked persons, young and old, stood patiently beside the police vehicles, talking quietly while waiting for the next call for help.

Bill Papon, 23, from Prairie Village, Kan., said he arrived at the command post about 10 p.m. Monday and was almost immediately sent out.

The necessity of choice

By PETER COX

Implicit in political struggle and politics on the whole is the threat and use of force and power, often abusively. Unfortunately we cannot rid ourselves of these factors in politics. Power and force are a consequence of politics in that politics by its intent to preserve, attain, or destroy social order must have the means to reach its end. Power and force are these means. It is man's last resort after diplomacy, compromise, and negotiation have failed.

Most accept this depressing realization as (excluding those rare pacifists among us) inevitable. And by our ready acceptance as such, acknowledging the futility of making change, we legitimize the gross abuse of force and power, making a bad situation worse. Only only has to look, read, and listen how political power has sanctified itself, its violence and manipulation of people, be it terrorist groups, Mao's Red Guard, or any police force. Hemingway was right, ideology is what we have instead of religion. Any political justification is this new faith from which the most treacherous acts we see in the world today emanate.

commentary

This brings me to the topic of South Africa. As many may or may not know this is South Africa week on campus, with speakers and films appearing at the Campus Center, and a rally demanding UMass sell its stock in companies that invest in that country. I had an opportunity to attend one of the lectures and receive some first hand information on what is actually going on in South Africa today. Beyond being informed and enlightened on several issues, I was mildly disturbed when the discussion centered on revolt.

One speaker's feelings were that she expected much violence and terror in South Africa when the time of revolution appears, with the possibility of one million Black people losing their lives. When probed on the possibility of civil war when majority rule is reached, as was the case in Angola 1975, she responded that this was not her concern as yet. Even so, she added, civil war is most likely because of tribal rivalries and political factions. This attitude verifies the assumption in many people's minds that the masses cannot lead themselves but must be led by an elite even if it entails the death of a million of them.

The troubling aspect of this lecture was not so much the use of terms like "the necessity of violence" and "the inevitability of civil war" but rather the ready use to exploit and manipulate many lives for the sake of liberation — an idea. I am not naive enough to believe the Vorster government will yield to majority by mere compromise and negotiation. The Blacks there don't even have this alternative even if they were to choose it, because of South Africa's oppressive political environment where Black political organization, strikes, and lobbying are outlawed. So the use of violence to attain political ends is both necessary and valid. What one must be wary of is the extremity of use and the potential for abuse in "grabbing the gun".

But the Blacks have a choice here. As of now the students who are leading the revolt are generally disorganized, being wooed by two liberation movements in South Africa (who have organization). They may opt for one over another. Or perhaps choose between the two and thereby give rise to the potential of civil war. There is he likelihood as things become more volatile of Russian assistance through Cuban recruits (training bases, arms, money, etc.). There is even the remote chance of negotiation with the Vorster government; though authentic majority rule as an outcome of such negotiations would be doubtful. Still these are viable alternatives with room for new creative choice apart from organized politics. They need not accept the inevitable, and the futility of making change, vis a vis yielding to an elite party vanguard.

There is much in politics that relies on power and force. We will never eradicate that. I am inclined to believe though that politics is first and foremost a personal act. It is a statement (e.g. protesting) a process (e.g. voting) a stance (e.g. belief in democracy) by the individual. Through each man's acts, political or otherwise, the world is structured and defined. In this sense history is democratic. Every act has its consequence. We should never lose sight of that. I hope it is not lost by South Africa.

Revolution starts out initially with popular support, its actions at the beginning are legitimized. It is only when the masses abdicate their responsibility of direct participation in organization of revolution, and instead yield their individual power to an authority figure can centralization of power and dictatorship occur; hence the abuse of power and force we judge as inexorable.

The Blacks in South Africa have several choices at their disposal. What is significant is they realize they have a choice. And this choice is a manifestation of their power as individuals to decide between issues and courses of action. They face many obstacles. The demand for compromise is great. But the hard thing, the real hard thing is staying close to that base of power where each voice counts and each act makes a difference; where all recognize this and power is not usurped by any one group. In the end we always get what we choose. South Africa will get its democracy or bloodbath or whatever it decides. Let's hope their choice is a wise one.

The check cashing game

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

Just the other day while I was talking to my ex-roommate, I brought up the inconvenience of check cashing on campus. I, myself, dread going anywhere near Whitmore for more reasons than the check cashing lines, but that's another editorial. June, though, gave me another view on check cashing.

"You know Ellen, I went to Whitmore today to cash a check."

"You poor thing, you must be exhausted."

"What? Hey, I enjoy check cashing!"

"You've been standing in lines too long, maybe you should sit down."

"No, it's great; while standing in the check cashing line, I did my Rhetoric homework, talked to seven UMies, and went to coffee with one of them afterward."

Seeing extensive possibilities coming about from this kind of interaction, I present to you my list:

Things to do While Waiting for Your Check to be Cashed
(unabridged edition)

1. Learn a foreign language.
2. Do all your back reading (which is not to say, "read people's backs").
3. Write a Collegian editorial.
4. Read a Collegian editorial.
5. Knit a sweater.
6. Learn to read Braille.
7. Fill out a change of housing card leaving a male dorm room empty and send it anonymously to Housing.
8. Write that letter home you've been meaning to for two weeks.
9. Invent a new name and I.D. number.
10. Develop a new R.S.O. and draw up a constitution for it.
11. Try to get an honest looking person to hold your place in line for "just a minute" (caution; in trying this, you may very well be condemning yourself to the lines' end).
12. Write a novel.
13. Grow a beard (note: only males need try this).
14. Play the "Aren't you in my (insert name of their textbook) class?" (try to fake it).
15. Develop an elaborate "sob story" so people will let you ahead of them in line. (Remember, most stories have been heard before.)

And, if none of these appeal to you, and you really hate the lines, I still have an ex-roommate who loves cashing checks ... (for a price).

Violence at Kent State

To the Editor:

This past week, several events concerning the situation at Kent State proved to be extremely disturbing to me. The two main events that come to mind both occurred this past Sunday, and both events have a distinct foreboding taste. The two incidents to which I refer are the driving of a jeep into a throng of demonstrators, and the fence-destroying incident by the demonstrators.

The fact that these two incidents appear to have purposes that lie at opposite poles (the jeep incident was apparently an attempt to harm the demonstrators, while the fence-destroying incident was perpetrated by those very demonstrators) indicates the clear conflict that still exists at Kent State.

I in no way condone the killings of May 4, 1970, but moreover I in no way can condone killings of any kind, anywhere, and for virtually any purpose. That is why the events described distress me so — I feel that the whole Kent State situation will result in nothing but turmoil.

While the incident concerning the jeep, where it is apparent that blatant harm was intended certainly worries me, it in no way worries me as much as the fence-destroying incident does.

Why? It is simple. The people in the jeep who attempted to hurt the demonstrators apparently advocate the May 4 killings (they seemingly believe the killings were justified, and therefore there is no reason why a gym should not be built just to orate justified killings); thus, they advocate sheer violence. One would expect nothing less than violence from those who advocate it.

However, the fact that the demonstrators would reciprocate one act of violence with another purely mystifies me as well as scares me. According to the Collegian's report of the incident, this violence was spontaneous. But it was violence. I ask, then — why are the demonstrators at Kent State? Are they there to protest the building of a gym on the site where the "establishment" slaughtered protesters? Or are they there to protest the building of a gym on the site where one group of humans pitifully opened fire on another group of humans just like themselves?

If the latter reason is true — if they do just wish to commemorate the site where an odious crime was committed, a crime against all humanity — then I wonder how one can justify attempting to commemorate a repulsive act of violence with just another act of violence?

I believe that the objective of the May 4 Coalition can be achieved by peaceful means — without making hyprocrites of every one of the demonstrators opposing the gym.

So, once again I say that I am disturbed. When those who apparently advocate the violence of eight years ago display their violence now, and then those who supposedly detest that violence in turn resort to violence, what is left to happen? Direct confrontation again? And I ask everyone: if courses remain in the direction they are heading for now, will we form another Coalition to commemorate yet another example of man's inhumanity to man?

Everybody's money

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to the letter by Stephen N. Mathieu in Tuesday's Collegian (Mail to the Idiots!).

The money that the Student Senate controls is not your money. It has been paid by all of us and it belongs to all of us. You suggest that by allocating funds to certain RSO groups, money is being thrown away.

The People's Gay Alliance and the Lesbian Union do represent many students at UMass. They provide social interaction, political awareness, and personal support for a large number of gay people. I have paid my student activities fee, just as you have, and I have a right to see some of its usage directed toward my interests. You have that same right and through expressing your needs to your student senator and by participating in the election process, you can direct a portion of our money to be used for what you feel are worthwhile ventures.

Don't foster the illusion that everyone's needs are the same as yours. From the great diversity of people here at UMass, we all have the chance to grow through exposure to alternate thought. The allocations made by the student senate to various political and cultural groups serve to enhance our college experiences.

Puerto Rican independence

To the Editor:

It has been an important Summer for the Puerto Rican independence movement and supporters of it in the U.S. The economic situation on the island has gone from bad to worse: unemployment is now as high as 50 per cent in many cities. Repression against trade unions and independence militants has escalated. The colonial government of the New Progressive Party is now negotiating contracts with Mobil Oil, American Metal Climax, Kennicott Copper and other such corporations to exploit rich mineral and oil deposits off the coasts and in the central mountains of Puerto Rico. These contracts will result in still further profits being extracted from Puerto Rico at the expense of the Puerto Rican working class.

Here in the U.S., President Carter continued to pay lip service to the concept of self determination even as he gave a mandate to a high level government commission to study the feasibility of making Puerto Rico the 51st state after the 1980 elections.

Throughout the Summer as well Puerto Rican communities in Chicago, Philadelphia, the South Bronx and elsewhere faced increased police harassment, no jobs, and no possible hope for immediate change.

In Northampton, city administrators have played political football with every program designed to serve the Hispanic community. The bilingual education program, mandated by Massachusetts law, exists solely on paper. Input from the Hispanic community in regard to the hiring of teachers has been ignored. Other important programs, such as the New England Farmworkers offices in Northampton have been forced to operate with the threat of budget cuts and permanent phase outs always over their heads. Police harassment of the community persisted most of the Summer. Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton refuses to hire Spanish speaking people to assist in the medical treatment of the Hispanic population. This could result in the death or serious injury of somebody in the near future if a translator can not be quickly found in an emergency. This disregard for the health needs of the Hispanic community has already resulted in the callous treatment of many people.

On the brighter side discussion have taken place throughout the Summer in Puerto Rico on the need for forming a national liberation front of all political parties and organizations fighting for independence. Rallies were held in Puerto Rico by several thousand workers on May 1st, International Workers Day. And a major demonstration took place demanding the immediate release of five Puerto Rican political prisoners held in U.S. jails since the early 1950's. Here in the U.S. as well rallies and meetings were held to build a large movement in solidarity with the Puerto Rican independence struggle.

During the middle of September the Puerto Rico Solidarity Committee (PRSC) along with other campus and community groups will initiate a series of activities to discuss the political situation in Puerto Rico and the problems of the Hispanic population of western Massachusetts. On Friday, Sept. 16 at 12:30 the Cuban made film 'Puerto Rico' will be shown. At 8:00 that same day Roy Brown, one of the foremost cultural workers of Puerto Rico will perform in a free concert. On Tuesday Sept. 10 a recently released film "Puerto Rico: Paradise Invaded" will be shown as part of the Commuter Collective Film Series. A discussion with Akil Al-Jundi of Attica Now on political repression against the independence movement will follow the film. And on Friday Sept. 23rd, anniversay of the first declared Republic of Puerto Rico in 1868, the Northampton based Hispanic Council for Human Rights and the PRSC will host an educational activity and dance at Farley lodge. There will be poetry, speakers and music at this event.

We hope everybody will take the time to attend one or all of these programs. Increased knowledge is the first step in any process of political change.

Dismal science and dismal press

Economics, economics, ding ding ding, the cash register rings. The "dismal science" as Thomas Malthus so accurately and perceptively described it. I think I'll amend Mr. Malthus' definition by defining it as the study of slicing up the pork-barrel, ringing up the cash register and keeping the books. Anarchism, capitalism, communism, feudalism, populism, socialism, syndicalism, etc.; these words have great shock value. Good time socialism too. There will never be an economic system that is theoretically pure. The best one would be some kind of hybrid that serves the most people the fairest.

jim paulin

The hell with all these people foaming at the mouth against capitalism or communism-socialism. They all need many shots in the stomach with very long syringes.

And now the word is that the Department of Political Economy and Social Thought is mixing psychology with economics. So now it is going to start charging students $50 per class hour and a $100 per hour for consultation with the professors? Will tuition be covered by the medical fee? Are there more repressed individuals in a capitalist or communist society? If a capitalist society's super ego is in the advertising agencies, is a communist state's in the government news agency?

These and many more profound questions will have to go unanswered at the moment. Questions like will P.E.S.T. accept Blue Cross and Blue Shield in lieu of the medical fee? Or, should I have my wallet examined? MEDIA WATCH. Rolling Stone Magazine, the pioneer of the New Journalism is now getting into Princess Journalism. The person assigned to cover Elvis Presley's funeral was Caroline Kennedy. Probably because she's an authority on large funerals.

Centerpeace, "The Spirit of the Valley". Centerpeace is a fairly new monthly newspaper distributed free throughout the valley, like the Advocate. Its purpose is to help people to achieve and-or maintain "self awareness". (self absorbtion?) But if Centerpeace is the spirit of the valley, then the spirit of the valley must be the sandman. Reading Centerpeace is as boring as listening to Henry Jackson.

I prefer "The Spirit of New England," WBZ radio. Their motto is "We are you," and listening to them you get the impression that they do hear you, like Jerry Williams counseling someone threatening suicide on the air at three in the morning or Joe Green swooping down with his helicopter to rescue someone stranded on a rock on the Nashua River.

But Centerpeace seems to be saying that it is enlightened to sit around and masturbate.

It's probably the least read paper in the valley. According to one local merchant, from whose store Centerpeace is distributed, an advertising representative from Centerpeace came in to try to sell him ad space. Well, the merchant told him that practically no one ever took the paper. The ad rep's response was that though not too many people read it, everybody that does patronize the paper's advertisers, according to other merchants. Also, its ad rates are higher than both the Collegian and Advocate. It is unlikely that the "spirit of the Valley" will be able to survive much longer in pulp form.

Land of the drobs

There is a tale from the old country about "drobs". Drobs were people who were educated (or getting educated) with one goal in mind — to get jobs. Now these drobs in this old country lived in a society full of opportunity (so the politicians said) where anyone who worked hard enough could be successful. Even a loser named Rocky could make it.

lisa melilli

Now in this land, which I've nicknamed "Drobland" because of all the drobs living there, one was supposed to develop in all areas as best he could, to surpass himself in his talents, his creativity. The way to show such accomplishment was to be successful in the job market, commonly called the "market place".

But there was a contradiction with the "system" in the market place, for in order to be successful there, you had to fit in, do as others, not be different. Well, as one would guess, this contradicted with the system's purpose for full creative development. And instead of revolting or maintaining one's individual creativity, the drobs avoided the insecurity of being individuals and worked solely to fit into the marketplace, hoping and striving for success. The drobs became automatons and Drobland became a stagnant place because no one was willing to be different and create change. Drobland was finally easily defeated by barbarians to the north because no drob was creative or daring enough to try a new method, so all their methods were antiquated.

This may be a tale from the old country, but it is also a tale from the new country — now. Because you see, in a way, we are turning into drobs and soon enough we will live in a drab, unchanging society like Drobland. The problem is that too many of us are like the drobs, preparing ourselves to just fit in and nothing more, not risking to be different.

It's part of the reminiscence of the sixties and the cries of apathy — sure. But what I'm talking about goes even deeper. It has to do with people's attitudes and goals. It has to do with a disillusionment particularly with our legal and political system. But it has to do with that common defeatist phrase: "That's just the way things are." And simply that's not the way things have to stay. But not enough people remember that.

Creativity. Ralph Waldo Emerson says so eloquently that "man is the word made flesh". That word is the individual creativity — the difference between one man and another. But we have forgotten this and we have forgotten how to explore ourselves, our differences, our creativity.

Instead, as one friend of mine who recently graduated from UMass put it: "You have to train yourself to fit in. You can't risk being different. You can't create change or you'll be feared. You have to make yourself marketable."

But I don't think this is the purpose of a college experience, to teach yourself how to fit in with the status quo as so many college people are doing solely today. Part of a college experience has to do with this development of creative talents, this search for a better way. It's time to be an idealist; not to bust your brains out for marketable qualities, but make them grow out with a new way of looking things. It's time to escape from society and fitting into the status quo. But too many people aren't taking advantage of this.

James Baldwin, a ghetto-born Afro-American living and writing in France for the past thirty years, expressed a more positive view of the situation in a recent interview with the New York Times Book Review. Baldwin said: We hear that students have gone on to other concerns — themselves and their careers. But I have met many of them and hear by mail from others, and they seem bewildered, troubled, at a loss to know what to do, where to go. I'm not sure they're as passive and inert as some social observers say, or wish :.. Maybe those young people are trying to figure out what's right, what ought to be done, now that they've seen before their eyes what's wrong. Inertia, even despair, can be a stage in one's growth, a way of coming to terms with what one has gone through and learned."

Let's hope Baldwin is right. Maybe it takes only time to know how and where to improve the system. But so many people I know don't want to take the time. They're more interested in being drobs and creating a Drobland. That's giving up before the battle and creating a more difficult battle for everyone else.

Flash floods inundate KC

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI; — Flash flooding that sent crests of water surging into the metropolitan area Tuesday brought death and millions of dollars in destruction to the city and triggered power failures, gas explosions, and fires.

Rampaging river and creek waters, filled by up to 16 inches of rain Monday and early Tuesday, caused at least 18 deaths in the city's worst disaster since 1951.

Although the National Weather Service predicted the waterways would recede to their banks Tuesday night — barring further rain -- and allow thousands of persons to return to their mud-covered houses, Red Cross officials estimated 3,000 people would remain homeless.

The torrential downpours that caused the flash flooding ended Tuesday, but water remained high along the Big Blue and Little Blue Rivers.

"The destruction was so widespread it is still difficult to determine for sure how many people need shelter," said Bob Jones, Red Cross public relations director. "There were as many as 15,000 people displaced at one time or another and there are at least 500 families in the Heart of America Mobile Home Park who may not be able to return to their homes for another day or two."

John Burge, assistant city manager, said the city itself has incurred at least $4-$7 million in damages and cleanup costs, with $1.5 million of that figure to bridges and culverts and $1.4 million to storm and water facilities.

Burge said no immediate damage estimates have been compiled for the approximately 75 businesses in the Country Club Plaza are that were damaged by flooded Brush Creek, normally a trickle running on cement banks south of the Plane. Burge said preliminary reports indicated nearly 700 homes, apartments and mobile homes in the city sustained some kind of damage.

Earl Fleer, Kansas City, Mo., school district spokesman, said 20 of the 90 school buildings incurred major damage and the others suffered varying degrees of water damage that may exceed $750,000.

"We've had a thorough building inspection and all but one will meet safety requirements to resume classes Wednesday, unless the weather situation changes again," Fleer said, adding that one junior high school was inundated and will not reopen until Monday.

Many Kansas Citians responded to a call from the area blood bank that feared it would fall short of the 270 donations needed daily to meet demands of 66 hospitals in a 40-county region.

"With the media urging people to stay away from the Plaza where we're located, we were afraid donors would stay away," said Ann Cook of the blood bank. "We appealed to people who were out anyway to stop by and they did. We abated a potentially disastrous situation."

On the Plaza, the worst hit section in the metropolitan area about 50 blocks from downtown, volunteers and law enforcement officers labored to move automobiles strewn by the 20-foot crests of Brush Creek water. Others worked pumping out underground parking lots so rescuers could resume the gruesome task of searching for possible victims in the vehicles.

Five-foot flows along the Plaza's sidewalks and fountainlined drives had tossed cars like leaves in the winds. A Chevrolet Malibu teetered in the display window of one store and a Volkswagen was nestled between a tree and a building about five feet above the ground.

Kansas City man wades chest-deep in flood waters which poured over Kansas City yesterday. The disaster caused 18 deaths and millions of dollars of damage, amounting to the city's worst disaster since 1951. in the absence of further rain, water has levels have returned to almost normal. (UPI)

Prison protesters put on liquid diet

CRANSTON, R.I. (UPI) — Some maximum security inmates protesting a continuing lockup yesterday at the Adult Correctional Institutions were kept on a liquid diet to keep them from tossing food from their cells, Corrections Director Bradford Southworth said.

"We are having some problems with food being thrown around and so we are dealing with that by using a liquid food supplement," Southworth said at a news conference.

A modified lockup was imposed after a violent incident Aug. 26 in which 10 guards were injured.

Testimony resumes today in U.S. District Court on an inmate petition to end the lockup. Meanwhile, most inmates are protesting by refusing to leave their cells during the two hours every other day set aside for showers, exercise and visiting.

Southworth said that if the court ends the lockup, "we would have the same situation we had prior to Aug. 26 — a high number of assaults and the high cost of medical care for inmates who require hospitalization outside the prison."

He said only 66 inmates have left their cells since last Tuesday and only 22 have had visitors. He said the next step in easing restrictions will be to offer high school and college programs for inmates who want them.

"It's their prerogative to stay in their cells," Southworth said. "It's our responsibility to offer the programs and meet the requirements in the court decision. Our goal is to give every inmate something to do. Then there will be less violence."

He referred to a sweeping order from Chief Judge Raymond J. Pettine of U.S. District Court requiring immediate improvements in ACI living conditions and ordering the 100-year-old maximum security building closed in a year.

Pulitzer prize winner Robert Lowell dies

NEW YORK (AP) — A funeral service will be held in Boston on Friday for poet-pacifist Robert Lowell, who died in a taxicab on his way home from Kennedy Airport here.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning poet was returning from a trip to Ireland on Monday when he died of a heart attack.

During World War II Lowell was jailed for six months for refusing to bear arms. Characteristically, he described the experience afterwards in verse.

He emerged from prison to win two Pulitzer Prizes and recognition as the greatest American poet of his generation. But his abhorrence of war never left him and in 1965 he turned down President Lyndon Johnson's invitation to the White House because of his objection to the Vietnam war.

When he was stricken, the Boston-born poet was on his way to the Manhattan apartment of his second wife, essayist Elizabeth Hardwick, from whom he was divorced.

Lowell won his first Pulitzer Prize in poetry in 1947 at the age of 29 for his second volume "Lord Weary's Castle," which reflected his unsentimental attitude toward his New England roots.

The volume was dedicated to novelist Jean Stafford, his first wife, from whom he was divorced in 1948.

Lowell won the Pulitzer again in 1974 for "The Dolphin."

Born March 1, 1917, Robert Traill Spence Lowell Jr. was of a distinguished Boston family whose roots in Massachusetts went back to 1639. His great-grandfather, James Russell Lowell, was the foremost poet of his time, and a cousin Amy Lowell, won a Pulitzer Prize for poetry in 1926.

Cholera spreads through Mideast towards Europe

United Press International — A cholera epidemic that has stricken more than 2,000 persons and claimed 69 lives in the Middle East struck Europe Tuesday with cases reported in Britain, Italy, West Germany and Holland involving travelers from infected areas.

Health officials launched an emergency drive to stop the disease but warned Moslems on their annual pilgrimage to Mecca probably will spread it still further — possibly around the world.

Syria has been hardest hit by the amoeba, with 2,121 cases and 68 deaths reported there. Jordan has registered 200 cases, Lebanon 11 — with one death — and Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Iran and the Israeli-occupied West Bank of Jordan all have reported outbreaks of the disease.

One Beirut cholera specialist warned "things could get much, much worse" if the epidemic is not contained by the peak of the pilgrimage season in about two months.

At least a million pilgrims are expected to make their way to Mecca in Saudi Arabia, the holiest place is Islam, and they come from the Far East as well as the Arab world. Many are from underdeveloped countries with sketchy health precautions.

Even under normal conditions, such an influx can heavily tax sanitation facilities, although Saudi Arabia has some of the best health care personnel in the Middle East.

There is fear that when the pilgrims return to their home countries — some as far away as Indonesia, Pakistan and the Philippines — they will take cholera with them.

Jordan has barred pilgrims from entering its cities and announced it is setting up "health stations" for them on some desert routes to Saudi Arabia.

But despite health precautions in the affected areas, the disease has traveled as far as Europe.

Two cases have been reported in Britain — an Iraqi man hospitalized after arriving from Baghdad and an English woman who had just returned from a vacation in Turkey.

Italy reported one confirmed case — a Turkish woman tourist. West Germany said a 38-year-old truck driver from southern Germany who was in Iraq last month and drove his truck through Turkey on the way home had been hospitalized with cholera.

In the Netherlands, health officials said a Turkish woman who had just arrived from Ankara was hospitalized with cholera in the eastern Dutch city of Nijmegen.

What next?

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — The New Hampshire Commission on the Status of Women feels the women's liberation movement is causing a rise in wife beating and juvenile delinquency, Commissioner Frances Drown said Tuesday.

And the commission feels efforts to deal with such social problems should be made at the local level, not through federally funded programs, she said.

Mrs. Drown was commenting on the commission's decision Monday to study rather than act on her proposal for a local, voluntary aid program for battered wives, in which neighborhood families would provide shelter to women in danger of being beaten by their husbands. Mrs. Drown proposed the plan after attending a workshop last week on battered women.

She said the commission is opposed to much of what the feminist movement stands for, although it agrees women should have equal pay, equal education and a chance for careers.

"The major theme of the feminist movement is do your own thing. That's why it might be a seed to child abuse and other things," Mrs. Drown said.

Commissioner Gloria Belzil of Nashua said some wife beating might occur because "those women libbers irritated the hell out of their husbands." She said she knows a working woman who was beaten by her husband and suggested the woman "needed psychological care" because she upset her husband by spending most of her paycheck on herself.

Dr. Murray Straus of the University of New Hampshire nationally known for his studies on family violence, said even if feminism does irritate some husbands, "why should that give him the right to hit their wives, or vice versa."

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

From UNITED Feature Syndicate
For release TUESDAY, Sept. 13, 1977

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 14 — Born today, you are very action-oriented. You become easily bored when you are not actively involved in some endeavor. You believe in the ancient Greek ideal of a healthy mind in a healthy body, and toward that end you work consciously and consistently. And though you do not mean to intellectualize everything, that is often the result of your curiosity and your constant questioning.

Somewhat possessive as a child, you should find with maturity that you are able to share what you have without feeling either deprived or martyred. You enjoy helping others to attain their ends, whether or not you are rewarded for your help in any material way. You tend sometimes to devote too much time to your career — at the expense of your home life. You would do well to divide your time more evenly between family life and public career.

You have a great deal to give children in the way of a happy outlook on life in general. You are quick to discern any difficulties in a child's grasp of a situation; fortunately, you are just as quick to come up with ways of alleviating the difficulties so that the child can come to terms with his own life.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, Sept. 15

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Seek companions well suited to a healthy participation in your plans for the day. Involve yourself in a new activity at evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The Libra who loves deeply will live a charmed life today. All will be better than it was; laughter and tears bring understanding.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You have a great deal in common with a young friend. Take advantage of that fact and increase your knowledge of a new social scene.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You should be able to predict at least your immediate future today. Direct your attention toward the young — and the very young.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A highly improbable story will have you up in arms before day's end. You would do well to take the realistic view of things.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You may find yourself working against your own best interests today. Take care not to give too much time to seeking revenge on another.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Pride of spirit is essential to your success today. Don't allow anyone to take from you your enjoyment in your work. Progress well into evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Whatever you decide to learn about your next move, do it quickly and without looking back. You may discover facts you don't really like.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Persevere in your new interests; otherwise, you may find that they have faded into nothing by the time you get around to this.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Put into practice immediately new knowledge regarding a new activity. You will forget otherwise. and money will be wasted.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Aggressiveness is necessary if you are to succeed in a new phase of your work today. Try not to overdo it, however.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — The ways of young love prove extremely difficult today. Don't encourage another to involve himself in romance at this particular time.

Stokowski dies

LONDON (UPI) — Conductor Leopold Stokowski, who brought modern music to the United States and founded the American Symphony Orchestra to give blacks and women a chance at musical careers, died Tuesday at the age of 95.

A spokeswoman for CBS records said the white-maned maestro died peacefully at noon 7 a.m. EDT at his country home in Hampshire after a mild heart attack.

For the past week he had been under treatment for a virus infection "but his illness was not thought to be serious and he was thinking about still another record," the spokeswoman said.

His terminal illness began while Stokowski was recording in London under a six-year contract he signed with CBS records last year.

Born in London to a Polish cabinet maker and his Irish wife, Stokowski became a U.S. citizen in 1915.

He led the Cincinnati Orchestra from 1909 to 1912, the Philadelphia Orchestra from 1912 to 1938 and the Houston Symphony Orchestra from 1955 to 1960.

He founded the American Symphony Orchestra of New York in 1962, which he led until 1972. Stokowski established it to give talented youth, blacks and women a chance at orchestral careers which previously had been closed to them.

Age never drained his enthusiasm. But it did breed humility in the man who not in his early years had spotlights play on his flowing white hair while keeping his musicians in relative darkness.

He became one of the world's best-loved musicians who at the peak of his activity earned $250,000 a year from guest conducting fees with the New York Philharmonic and other orchestras, radio appearances, movies, record royalties and an occasional opera performance.

Forgotten were the years when he forced hissing and booing audiences to listen to avant-garde compositions a second time, both to irritate and educate them.

Between 1916, when he gave Mahler's 8th Symphony its first American hearing, and 1964, when he premiered Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, Stokowski spoon-fed Americans with new works by modern masters — Shostakovich, Stravinsky, Varese, Berg, Prokofiev, Schoenberg.

Like his methods, his mind was his own. "I will play modern music whenever I see fit to do so and I will play it twice for whoever cares to listen," he told the board of the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1932 after his programming had alienated many symphony-goers.

When he resigned in 1938, he left successor Eugene Ormandy one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The Philadelphia parting was an unhappy one. For years Stokowski never passed through Philadelphia on a train without pulling down the blinds in his compartment.

But he made up with Philadelphia in 1962 when the city honored him on the 50th anniversary of his debut there.

Stokowski, who studied at the Royal College of Music in London and in Paris, Munich and Berlin, went to the United States in 1908 as organist of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church in New York.

The following year a wealthy parishioner of Ohio origin suggested him as conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony. The job was a springborad to the Philadelphia podium.

One of th world's foremost experts on acoustics, Stokowski's great forte was his knowledge of the acoustical properties of music which gave him exceptional mastery of volume and color.

He dabbled in films, including Walt Disney's "Fantatasia" which pioneered multi-channel sound.

Death robbed him of one important engagement.

When he signed his six-year recording pact last year, he was also invited to conduct London's Royal Philharmonic Orchestra on his 100th birthday. Stokowski accepted.

Enterprise makes perfect flight

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (UPI) — The space shuttle orbiter Enterprise manned by two astronauts made "an essentially perfect flight" Tuesday in its second free flight, gliding to a powerless landing on a dry lake bed after being blasted loose from its 747 mother ship.

"That sure was fun," one of the Enterprises' astronauts quipped to Mission Control after the 75-ton space orbiter coasted to a stop after a flight of almost one hour.

Like the first free flight last month, Tuesday's maneuver was nearly perfect, though the critical separation between Enterprise and its Boeing 747 mother ship was delayed three minutes when Mission Control in Houston lost radar contact. The delay caused no problems and did not affect the 5 minute 28 second glide of the space shuttle to the landing strip.

"Everything went essentially perfect and continued that way through the flight," said Donald "Deke" Slayton, head of the approach and landing tests. "The ship is in good shape and we're ready to go again."

Astronauts Richard Truly and Joe Engle were at the controls as the strange-looking mated pair took off from this desert test site promptly at 8 a.m. PDT and climbed to an altitude of 28,800 feet where explosive bolts blew the two ships apart 49 minutes and 27 seconds later.

Enterprise then veered right an up and began a broad U-turn for its glide back to earth.

Engles described the Enterprise as a "perfect machine. It flew very well. I was impressed with the airplane.

Truly said, "it's an excellent handling machine."

The gliding spaceship reached a speed of more than 330 miles per hour and performed several maneuvers to test its aerodynamics and its flying ability before air brakes slowed it down to a landing speed of 212 mph. The touchdown at 8:54 a.m. PDT appeared perfect.

Engle and Truly alternately used both a control stick and a computer to test the ship's flight characteristics at various speeds.

Tuesday's flight had been postponed from Aug. 30 because of a tropical storm which drenched the desert runways.

A third free flight is scheduled for Sept. 27. A fourth test will be made in mid-October.

Patroits yank rug out; dump Rabbit, Briscoe

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — In a surprise move, the New England Patriots yesterday waived veteran wide receivers Randy Vataha and Marlin Briscoe to bring their team down to the 43-player limit for Sunday's regular season opener against the Kansas City Chiefs.

Vataha, 28, was a seven-year veteran who tied a club record with 51 receptions in 1971. The standout Stanford graduate was named to the American Football Conference all-rookie team in 1971. He led the club in receiving in 1975.

Many scouts thought Vataha wouldn't make it as a pro due to his relatively small 5-10, 170-pound frame, but he became of the most popular Patriots in the early 1970s after several long touchdown catches from former Stanford teammate Jim Plunkett.

After 46 receptions for 720 total yards in 1975, Vataha caught only 11 passes for 192 yards last season.

A Patriots spokesman said Vataha has been claimed by an unidentified NFL team. He has 24 hours to decide whether he wants to go to the claiming team or become a free agent.

Briscoe is a 10-year veteran from Nebraska who celebrated his 32nd birthday last Saturday. He has not yet been claimed by another team, Patriots head coach Chuck Fairbanks said.

Briscoe played for six AFL and NFL teams before the Pats acquired him last fall. In 1970 he was an All-Pro with the Buffalo Bills, catching a league-high 57 passes for 1,036 yards.

Fairbanks also placed two players, wide receivers Steve Burks and Don Westbrook, on the inactive reserve list.

Army's Leamon Hall, Shott named to ECAC All-Star team

CENTERVILLE, Mass. (UPI) — Leamon Hall of Army and Jeff Macerelli of West Virginia were named Players of the Week on the first Eastern College Athletic Conference Division 1 All-Star team.

Hall, a senior quarterback from Apopka, Fla., completed 13 of 33 passes for 310 yards and five touchdowns in Army's 34-10 win over Massachusetts Saturday. Macerelli, a junior linebacker, made eight unassisted tackles and figured prominently in two fourth-down drives that shut out Richmond, 36-0.

Others on the All-ECAC squad include Navy fullback Joe Gattuso; defensive back Bob Davis, Rutgers; safety Mike Galpin, Navy; fullback Steve Hunt, Holy Cross; quarterback Dave Kendra, West Virginia; defensive end Jerry Martin, Syracuse; defensive tackle Ray Linn, Colgate; defensive end Chuck Shott, Army; linebacker Rich Scudellari, Boston College, and end Melvin Martin and quarterback Bob Relph from William and Mary.

Ted Turner captains courageous to victory

America's Cup challenger Australia takes a 12 second lead at the starting line in yesterday's inaguaral race of the yachting classic. But Ted Turner's Courageous was able to sail back into contention, and eventually won. (UPI)

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Swashbuckling Ted Turner allowed Australia a 12-second lead at the start yesterday and then used superior seamanship to boost America's cup defender Courageous into a one minute, 48 second victory over the Aussie Challenger in the opening race of the world series of international yachting.

Precision sail trimming by the Courageous in the light rain provided the key to the United States win in the start of the best-of-seven series and skewered the Australian hope of a Challenger winning an opening race for the first time since Endeavor of England beat Rainbow in 1934.

The 12-meter craft, sailing at 8 miles an hour, covered the 24.3-mile course in about 3¼ hours after a 12:10 p.m. EDT start. The speed was extremely slow when you consider that an A.J. Foyt can go 500 miles at Indianapolis in that span of time.

Turner, the brash owner of the Atlanta Braves, sailed a conservative race after gaining a one minute, 18-second lead at the end of the first leg, a 4.5 mile windward dash on the olympic course laid out about 10 miles off shore on Rhode Island Sound.

Surprisingly, Skipper Noel Robins of Australia out-maneuvered Turner at the start and held a 12-second lead as the 30-ton craft headed into the first of three windward legs. Turner, sailing in 12.5-knot winds, began a series of brilliant tacks that pushed Courageous to a 20-boat length lead as the Defender began the first of two 3.2-mile reaches. The 400-yard distance separating the two craft was so great that aerial photographers had difficulty getting Courageous and Australia in the same frame.

From that point on, Turner played it conservatively, something he has complained about in his Atlanta baseball team. He picked up eight seconds on the second leg and seven more on the third, giving Courageous a minute and 23 second lead at the halfway mark.

Robins made his finest contribution to the Australian effort at the start of the second half as the Aussies chopped 11 seconds off Turner's lead to trail by 1:12 after the fourth leg as moderating breezes floated over the area and Australia took advantage with its light wind sails to close ground.

Alabama alumni active in pro football this week

ATLANTA (UPI) — The University of Alabama will have four alumni starting at quarterback when the National Football League opens its season Sunday.

Joe Namath (1 962-64) will be starting for the Los Angeles Rams against the Atlanta Falcons, who handed their starting assignment to Scott Hunter (1 968-70) when Steve Bartkowski reinjured his knee; Ken Stabler (1 965-67) leads the champion Oakland Raiders; and Richard Todd (1 973-75) has the New York Jets' post now that Namath has moved west.

Steve Sloan (1 963-65), who used to fill in for Namath when Namath was in Bear Bryant's doghouse and then led the crimson tide to a 9-1-1 season on his own, tried his hand at pro football for a while (Atlanta, 1 966-67), but then switched to coaching and now is the head man at 8th-ranked Texas Tech.

The present Alabama quarterback, junior Jeff Rutledge, was named Southeast Offense Player of the Week by UPI for his 7-8-215 performance last Saturday when the 3rd-ranked crimson tide beat Ole Miss, 34-13 ...

When Alabama plays Nebraska in Lincoln, Neb., in a regionally televised game Saturday afternoon, it will be the first time those two have met during a regular season although they have paired off three times in major bowls.

Alabama quickness overcame Nebraska beef in the 1 966 Orange Bowl (39-28) and 1 967 Sugar Bowl (34-7), but the cornhuskers got their revenge in the 1 972 Orange Bowl (38-6) ...

Mississippi State comes off probation this week, and from the way the bulldogs have started out (wins over North Texas State and Washington), they look like a sure-fire bet for a post-season bowl they were denied last year despite a 9-2 record.

LAS VEGAS, Nev.; Top ranked heavyweight contender Ken Norton pokes a little fun at his next opponent Larenzo Zanon, Milan, Italy. The Norton vs. Zanon bout takes place tonight as part of a 5 fight card at Caesars Palace. The event will be televised nationwide.

Norton, Young are big names in five bout extravaganza

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Ken Norton and Jimmy Young, the two top contenders to heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali are not expected to stumble Wednesday night in bouts scheduled as tuneups for their showdown meeting Nov. 5 here.

Norton battles Lorenzo Zanon of Italy while Young fights Jody Ballard of Houston in a nationally televised card of five heavyweight bouts from Caesars Palace.

The slate of four nationally televised 10-rounders also include Ron Lyle of Denver against Stan Ward of Sacramento, Calif., undefeated Larry Holmes of Easton. Pa. facing Fred "Young Sanford" Houpe of Los Angeles. Also on the program is a 10-rounder between LeRoy Jones of Denver and Greg Johnson of New York.

Norton goes along with the pageantry of Las Vegas when he says, "I have a formidable opponent."

But Norton makes no joke about wanting to fight Ali a fourth time. He broke Ali's jaw and won when they fought the first time. Then Ali won two close decisions in bouts Norton thought he won.

"I'm really not sure Ali will fight me again," said the ex-Marine, even though it was the champion who said he'd fight the winner of a Norton-Young battle.

Zanon, rated 10th among the heavyweight contenders, has a record of 20-2-1 but never has fought a rated American. The 32-year-old Norton comes off a one-round knockout over Duane Bobick.

Young lost a decision to Ali and holds a 21-5-2 record including an upset victory over former champion George Foreman, who then announced he was retiring.

The match between Holmes and Houpe opens the televised card at 5 p.m. PDT.

Ex-Olympians win

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Michael Spinks, 168, Philadelphia, the second Olympic champion from Montreal on the card, needed only 51 seconds of the first round to dispose of Ray Elson, 174, New York in a scheduled eight-rounder.

Spinks, now 6-0 as a pro, had Elson down twice, the second time from a sizzling overhand right. Elson couldn't get up.

Howard Davis, 135½, a 1976 Olympic champion from Long Island, New York, ran his record to 5-0 as a pro by making a punching bag out of lightweight contender Tury Pineda, 137, Mexicale, Mexico, before scoring a fourth-round knockout.

Sports in Brief

Cubans to tour

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Cuba's first athletic team to tour the United States since Fidel Castro became the Latin American nation's dictator will be a powerful volleyball squad, the Dayton Volleyball Association disclosed Tuesday.

The Cuban National team will play a United States all-star squad in seven Midwest cities, starting Oct. 13 at Dayton, Ohio, the training site of the American team.

Cuba ranks second in the world behind Russia and is co-favored with the Soviets to win the 1978 world championship. The United States team is rated tenth.

Olympic TV probed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Chairman Lionel Van Deerlin of the House Communications Subcommittee said Tuesday he would conduct a hearing in early October on broadcast aspects of the 1980 Olympic contracts.

Van Deerlin said "numerous questions have arisen" dealing with the games, especially due to huge increases in fees paid by ABC for the right to broadcast the winter games at Lake Placid, N.Y., and by NBC for the summer games in Moscow.

On Oct. 3, Van Deerlin said the panel, a subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee, will examine negotiations for the contracts including the role of individuals negotiating for the rights and the request for an "exemption" from anti-trust prosecution by the Justice Department.

He said other topics would include programming decisions "apparently made to influence the negotiations"; agreements covering additional programming commitments made by the networks, and assurances that the 1980 summer games would not be subject to improper Soviet control.

Van Deerlin indicated the hearing would be the first of a series dealing with relationships between the television networks and sports.

Buffalo trades pick; gets Willoughby

BUFFALO — Acquired forward Bill Willoughby from the Atlanta Hawks for their second-round draft choice in 1978.

Blazers tell Laurel "No play, no pay"

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — The Portland Trail Blazers said first-round draft choice Rich Laurel of Hofstra must make the team before he gets a contract.

"We're no further along," said Stu Inman, the Blazers' director of player personnel, of the contract talks. "Right now I'd have to say that it's very probable that we will not sign Rich."

Laurel stayed home in Philadelphia when the Blazers opened a pre-season camp for rookies, walk-ons and free agents in Salem, Ore., on Monday. His agent was reportedly demanding a guaranteed contract, something the NBA champions no longer feel is necessary for their success.

The first session turnout included rookies T.R. Dunn and Ricky Brown out of Alabama, veteran centers Tom Owens and Dale Schlueter, and free agent Jim Bradley. Owens is expected to have the best chance of making the club. Portland acquired him this summer from Houston for cash with Robin Jones, the Blazers' backup center last season, a throw-in in the deal.

Yanks topple Sox, 4-2

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ron Guidry pitched a five-hitter and Mickey Rivers hit a two-run homer to trigger a three-run fifth inning last night which enabled the New York Yankees to defeat Boston 4-2 and increase their American League East lead over the Red Sox to 2½ games.

Guidry, going the distance for the fourth straight time, completely overpowered the heavy-hitting Red Sox with his blazing fastball and gave up just three hits over the last seven innings to gain his sixth straight victory and raise his record to 14-6.

The Red Sox' only offensive effort against the slender southpaw came in the second inning when they scored twice to take a 2-0 lead. Carl Yastrzemski led off the inning with a triple off the right centerfield fence and scored the first run when Guidry uncorked a wild pitch with one out. Guidry then walked Carlton Fisk and George Scott in succession and Butch Hobson followed with a single to left that scored Fisk. The RBI was the 100th of the season for Hobson.

Rookie Mike Paxton started for the Red Sox and blanked the Yankees for the first three innings. But New York pushed across a run in the fourth on a single by Thurman Munson, a fielder's choice and singles by Graig Nettles and Lou Piniella.

The Yankees then chased Paxton in the fifth as they put together four hits to score three runs. Buckey Dent started the rally by blooping a single to center and Rivers followed with a line drive home run, his 11th, into the right field stands to put the Yankees ahead 3-2. With one out, Munson singled to knock out Paxton and Jim Willoughby relieved and got Reggie Jackson to hit into a forceout before Chris Chambliss lined a double to right to score Jackson.

The Red Sox looked as if they might get to Guidry in the seventh when Scott led off with a line single to left. But Guidry got Hobson on a lineout to left field and then struck out pinch-hitter Bob Montgomery and Rick Burleson to stifle the Red Sox' hopes. He then shut out the Red Sox in the eighth and ninth and finished with nine strikeouts.

Rivers saved the game for the Yankees in the ninth inning when he made a running one-handed catch to rob Fisk of at least a triple with a runner on first and none out. Guidry then bore down and retired Scott and Hobson to end the game.

The victory, which snapped the Red Sox' five-game winning streak, was the Yankees' fifth in six games against Boston at Yankee Stadium.

Sox let big one slip away

"Zimmer said if there's one game that's the key in this series, it's this one, the first one." — Red Sox color announcer Ken Harrelson.

It appears that if Don Zimmer's pre-game estimation is correct, then the Boston Red Sox are in for a dismal three days at Yankee Stadium.

As Yankee pitcher Ron Guidry was turning the Red Sox bats into sawdust, his starting counterpart, Mike Paxton, was making a slugger out of Mickey Rivers.

Everyone knows by now that the Sox were up against it last night. A good (not great) team, a smoking-hot pitcher, a lineup loaded with left-handed sluggers, a hostile crowd armed with firecrackers, and a losing tradition this season at Yankee Stadium.

But alibis are cheap and easy to come by. The fact of the matter is this: the potent Boston lineup, save for one inning, looked absolutely lost before the offerings of one Mr. Guidry.

The young man's statistics prior to last night's 4-2 Yankee triumph: 13 wins, six losses, and a 2.95 ERA. After the game: 14 wins, six losses, and an ERA down around 2.80.

Last night's log: two earned runs, five hits, nine strikeouts, and three walks.

Ah yes, one Ronald Guidry was clearly in command last evening at the Stadium. After a shaky second frame, when he allowed the only two Sox runs of the game, he baffled the famed Boston battalion.

Meanwhile, as Guidry took control of the proceedings, Paxton lost his touch in the fifth. Rivers drove a two-run homer over the right field fence. Jim Willoughby soon entered in relief, and Chris Chambliss promptly knocked home another New York run with a line double.

It is true that Boston had its opportunities. But the Sox could simply not take advantage of them.

—Rick Burleson left two runners stranded in a potentially bigger second inning rally when he struck out with two runners on.

—Butch Hobson hit a long drive in the fourth with a man on which was hauled down on the warning track by Rivers in right center field.

—And, most notably, player of the week Carlton Fisk slugged a 420-foot drive in the ninth, also with a runner on the basepaths. But Rivers made a nice over-the-shoulder catch in front of the warning track in left center field.

All right, so the Sox hit the ball hard on some occasions. But Guidry surely had it all when it counted most.

Just after Fisk's clout, he fanned George Scott and Hobson, the latter swinging at nothing but thin air as the heat from Guidry's fastball singed his lumber.

The Yankees received the clutch hitting they needed, the Sox did not, and that was a big determining factor in the way things turned out.

Act Two in the continuing melodrama takes place tonight, when Ed Figueroa and Reggie Cleveland stroll out to the mound to try to baffle their respective foes.

Act Three is set for tomorrow, before the Bostonians sojourn down to Baltimore for a three-game series with those Orioles, who are (pardon the pun) waiting inthe wings.

Then it's back to Fenway Park next week for another round of baseball with the Yanks. Think the heart can hold out 'til then?

Oh yeah, one more thing. While the Red Sox and Yankees were reenacting the Battle of Bull Run in the rebuilt palace down south of these parts, Baltimore was idle. No doubt the Birds were viewing last night's game with very critical eyes.

Earl Weaver, the best manager in the American League, has built a little-publicized, highly capable team from his wealthy minor league system. A couple of crafty trades also added some spark to his crew.

And, for some strange reason, I can't get Baltimore out of my mind. It's only a sneaking suspicion, but I get the feeling that the Orioles may just sneak in the proverbial back door and take the flag.

They may indeed, but one thing is clear. If the Red Sox don't get their act back together soon, the American League East race could become just a two team dogfight — between New York and Baltimore.

S. African stocks sold

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday in Memorial Hall voted to divest within 90 days University stocks in companies operating in apartheid South Africa.

The University owns stock worth $680,000 in 19 companies that operate in South Africa. The decision to divest holdings in all companies came after Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, trustee Daniel Dennis and Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks urged total divestment as a substitute to a proposed vote of partial divestment and retainment of several companies pending further review of their operating practices in South Africa.

The decision also came while 80 people demonstrated outside Memorial Hall for total University divestment. A spokesperson for the Committee for the Liberation of South Africa addressed the trustees prior to discussion and the proposal by Park while most of the trustees viewed the documentary film about apartheid South Africa during their early afternoon lunch break.

Committee representative Claudia Primeau, a junior from Chatham, Mass., told the board a vote to sell stocks in the three companies recommended by the sub-committee would be "a needless evasion of responsibility."

"The U.S. is the second largest investor in South Africa," Primeau said. The university is going against its own investment policy of taking "informed and ethical positions" in purchasing stock, she said.

The government in South Africa follows a policy of racial segregation and political and economic discrimination against non-whites, while upholding a white minority ruling class.

The committee appointed by the trustees last April to investigate the 19 companies proposed a three-part vote on the divestment issue yesterday prior to the decision of total divestment.

The committee had originally proposed to divest from three companies, Amax Inc., F.M.C. Corporation and Newmont Mining Corporation and to retain holdings in nine companies which it said "exceeded" University guidelines, and retain, but further review, eight other companies.

According to University policy, the trustees are to invest only in companies which commit themselves to the protection of the environment, public health, consumer protection, equal employment opportunities and compliance with national and international law.

While Amherst campus Student Trustee Marion "Pinky" Batiste, a member of the committee, read to the other trustees the three part divestment proposal, she told the board she personally would like to see total divestment.

"I'd like to divest from all corporations," Batiste said. "I feel this (total divestment) is in the best interest of those people in South Africa."

Bromery said the trustees have a fiscal and social responsibility when buying stocks and should not invest in companies with interests in South Africa.

The University, said Bromery, can invest in other companies with no interest in South Africa.

He said the trustees should consider using their investment council to invest in a portfolio of stocks in the market not interested in South Africa.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said he approved of the decision of total divestment and also of the manner in which the demonstrating students presented their case.

"I like it," Wood said. "I believe from the very beginning we had a sympathetic board over the summer. Pinky's (Batiste) committee worked very hard and very well."

Wood said Primeau's presentation and the showing of the movie to the students was a "terribly constructive way to express individual's concerns of the student body."

Batiste last night said she was "a little bit surprised" with the decision to totally divest.

Batiste said if the decision was not made yesterday, it would have come up in three months, when the committee was to finalize its investigation of the companies it wanted to further analyze.

West champion in SGA treasurer's bout

By DAN HUSE
and JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Priscilla West, calling for an increase in student services and representatives, defeated Jay Milander in the Student Government Association (SGA) treasurer election last night.

Preceding the election, the Senate approved outgoing treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins' report on expenditures for a student senate trip to Texas last August. The report had been previously vetoed by Student Government Association co-presidents Jon Hite and Marion "Pinky" Batiste.

In other business, the Senate heard unionization survey results from two groups; postponed a request for additional funds for a Kent State trip; and established SGA election dates for later in the month.

West, who was Assistant Treasurer under Kerrins, defeated Milander 27 to 13. She said she supported the plan for senate reorganization, and would work for greater student participation in the decisions of the university.

The new treasurer said she would "like to be known as a financial treasurer rather than a political treasurer."

In his speech for treasurer, Jay Milander said that if elected he would resign four weeks after the new senate was seated. He said he would lead the new senate (to be elected later this month) "through the financial forest", then resign allowing the new senate to elect a new treasurer.

SGA co-president Hite said he didn't think "this Senate should bind the next Senate (in the choice of treasurer)".

Kerrins submitted his resignation and a financial report at the Sept. 7 Senate meeting. The motion declaring a vacancy in the treasurer's office was vetoed by the SGA co-presidents. The report veto was made pending a detailed explanation of the National Student Association Congress trip to Houston. Kerrins submitted the report at last night's meeting.

In the discussion of the expenditures Senate Speaker Brian DeLima said, "I take full responsibility for projections for necessary revenue and for the operation of the trip."

The Senate approved the report on the August convention costs and thereby agreed to pay for the unexpected convention expenses.

Kerrins said he resented the accusation by the SGA co-presidents that "major discrepancies existed between authorized expenditures and what was actually spent." Kerrins said, "Mr. Hite's remarks were very inaccurate. The report bore out that there was no major dis-array of books."

The Senate finances he said, "are organized and very sound financially. He added, "I don't want to accuse him (Hite) at

Changing of the guard at Greek Affairs office

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

The Greek Affairs Office is undergoing a major change in personnel this week. Edward M. Bowe, director of greek affairs is leaving after four years of work with fraternities and sororities. Taking his place is Shannon Ellis.

Bowe, a 1970 graduate of UMass, will work at Columbia University for his master's degree in higher education and said he hopes eventually to earn his doctorate at UCLA. He will also work for the Consortium of Independent Colleges and Universities in New York, Bowe said.

Ellis is the first woman to hold this position. When asked how she felt about breaking tradition, she said, "I'm not out to prove anything."

"Without sounding sexist, a woman can often look at things from a different point of view," Ellis said.

The new director stated that she was glad to be the first woman, but feels she got the job because she has the "qualifications and personality" to fill the position.

"Keeping close contact with people has always been an enjoyable activity," said Bowe in an interview. As a student at UMass, he said he found himself loaded down with campus activities. Among these were student government, The Index, Student Union Program Council and fraternity functions. Bowe was a member of Beta Kappa Phi, served as chapter vice-president, rush chairman and inter-fraternity rush chairman. This experience led him to his UMass position, he said.

Bowe said, "Because I was so involved in activities on campus, I knew I wanted to get into something where I could be working with people."

His first job took him in the County College of Morris in New Jersey, where he was assistant director of student activities. Soon after, in a "more lucrative position" at the University of Nebraska, he was program adviser to the Student Union and a house father to the Nebraska chapter Kappa Sigma. When the position at UMass opened, Bowe said he felt it was time for a change.

"I love Amherst," said Bowe. He said he has seen a development of a "closely knit community — a real family" at UMass. His only regret is that more students do not consider Greek living as an alternative. He said he wishes "the citizens of the Commonwealth and UMass students themselves would realize what an outstanding school this is."

One person who appreciates the school's outstanding reputation is Bowe's replacement. A recent graduate of the University of Illinois, Shannon Ellis comes to UMass with a B.S. in journalism and a great interest in communications. Prior to this she worked as a public relations person for a Pennsylvania congressman in Washington, D.C.

Ellis, like Bowe, was involved with a number of activities at Illinois. The new UMass director was a member of Alpha Omicron Pi and was involved with the Sorority Council. In her sophomore year, she was council vice president and as a junior, president.

"Coming to New England from Illinois was quite a change, but I love it," Ellis said. The new director begins her job at the time of the "Greek rush"; a time she considers best to start because she will be meeting representatives from all UMass chapters. In addition, she said, she can begin immediately what she hopes will be a strong "internal and external relationship."

Ellis said she will work toward developing leadership in the Greek area and will serve as a liaison between town offices, UMass offices, alumni groups and national organizations.

Duke would veto anti-abortion bill

Compiled from Wires

Michael S. Dukakis yesterday said he would veto the $17.9 million supplemental budget if it includes an amendment banning the use of state funds for abortions except to save the life of a woman.

"The fundamental issue remains that the Supreme Court says the issue of abortion is constitutionally protected," Dukakis said. "To make those kind of exceptions is a denial of that right."

Anti-abortion forces in the House have said they will try to add a section to the budget halting the use of state funds for Medicaid abortions.

The supplementary budget includes $17 million in pay raises for the welfare department in their latest contract and $657,000 for the welfare department's administration of the food stamp program. Federal officials threatened to cut off funds to administer that program unless the state makes some effort to cut its error rate.

"I hope the raises for state employes will emerge as a priority and couldn't be stopped," Dukakis said. "They're entitled to raises and I want to see them get them."

The governor said his legal office is still looking into the possibility of vetoing only the abortion section, if it is attached to the budget. Although the governor has the power to line item vote an appropriation, it has never been used to veto a non-money section. That power is still untested.

Dukakis said he would prefer to use the line item veto on the abortion section, if he can. He added his only other hope is to pin down the members of the legislature.

"There comes a point in the process where a majority of the members of the legislature get tired of that kind of thing," he said.

House members caucused Wednesday in an effort to bring some order to Thursday's session.

The House is expected to first take up the governor's veto of a separate bill banning the use of state money for abortions. The Senate could take up that veto later in the day.

When it turns its attention to the supplementary budget, Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, has said he will offer substantially the same bill as a rider to the budget.

House members are also expected to propose a rider to reduce the state meals tax from 6 to 5 per cent as of January. The legislature cut the tax from 8 to 5 per cent in the 1978 state budget, but made the cut effective the first of next year.

Dukakis commented on the proposed additional cut saying, "I'd like to make very sure that we make a profit around here before we declare a dividend."

Police officer discharged

A Northampton police officer was discharged yesterday for beating two Northampton youths with a night stick last July 31.

Mayor David W. Cramer reportedly based his decision to remove officer Raymond L. Goulet, 30, from the Northampton police force on the "undisputed evidence" he struck Raymond J. Derovin, 17, and Raymond Catuono, Sr., 17, when responding to a complaint of a fight on Elm St., Northampton.

Goulet will appeal.

During a Civil Service hearing, Goulet admitted striking the youths, but claimed Derovin shouted obscenities and tried to strike him.

The officer with Goulet during the incident, Nicholas V. Divenere, 27, was reprimanded, but no further action was taken.

In other action concerning the beleaguered Northampton Police Department, officer Donald A. Roy, 31, pleaded innocent yesterday to charges of breaking into police headquarters last Sunday night and stealing money, and of stealing a revolver from the department in November 1974.

Judge Luke F. Ryan released Roy without bail and continued the case in Northampton District Court until Oct. 5.

Two days ago, Northampton Police Chief James J. Whalen and agents of the U.S. Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms arrested Roy on charges of possessing and transferring sawed-off shotguns, falsifying federal firearms records, and removing serial numbers from guns.

Roy, proprietor of the D & G Sporting Supplies store in Northampton, was temporarily suspended from the police force and released on $10,000 bail in connection with the federal charges. He was scheduled for a U.S. District Court hearing Oct. 3 in Springfield.

Roy's arrest, together with the beating incident, has brought calls from the establishment of a police commission from two mayoral candidates. Mayor Cramer is up for re-election this fall.

The police department is currently undergoing several internal investigations.

this time of political moves. The implication is there."

Hite said he didn't want the whole affair "to turn into a bloodbath." He continued, saying, "I'm not going to stab a guy in the back as he's going out the door."

There was some speculation that the vetos were tools for Hite and Batiste to put their own choice for treasurer in office.

"The accusation that the veto was a threat was bullshit. A veto is not a weapon," Hite said.

In the Student Senate, an SGA veto does not have the effect of a veto in the federal government. It can only be used to delay legislation, not to kill it. Larry Magid of the Student Center for Educational Research reported on the results of the on-campus Unionization Survey, which was distributed in dormitories last week. Some of the issues students expressed the concern were about quality of courses and teachers, check cashing, number of courses, and overcrowding in the dorms.

Susan Birmingham of the Student Organizing Project reported that students in Southwest dorms have been active in fighting the attempts of the administration to place extra students in already full dorms. Students in Pierpont, Cance, and Moore Houses have been turning to the SOP for the resources it has to offer. "It's really exciting," said Birmingham.

A group of students, who plan to travel to Kent State University in support of the May Fourth Coalition, requested that the Senate allocate funds for the transportation of about 50 UMass students. After heated debate about the support for this cause within the student body as a whole, Senator Jay Flynn called for a quorum, which was not met when the roll was called.

A group of 80 picketers gathered outside yesterday's board of trustees meeting to demonstrate against University stock holdings in corporations with interests in South Africa.

The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa, sponsors of the rally, presented the trustees with a 2,500 signature petition condemning UMass holdings in 19 international companies supporting the policy of apartheid.

Apartheid is a policy of racial segregation, and political and economic discrimination against non-whites, while upholding a white ruling class.

After news of the trustee's unanimous decision to divest the stocks reached the group, the committee said it would direct future efforts towards Amherst College, also a large shareholder of firms operating in South Africa.

"We're setting a precedent for the country, thanks to the students who got it started," said one committee spokesperson.

A police spokesperson said Saul Chafin, acting director of public safety, was pleased with the committee's cooperation and consideration during the rally. The spokesperson said Chafin hoped his department's help was acceptable to the group.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the protestors he was "surprised" at the trustee's action. He then thanked committee for their cooperation.

The group earlier in the day sponsored several speakers who addressed the question of South African racism. Committee member Steven Shulmen warned before the decision was reached, "If they don't sell the stock today, we're going back next week."

Trustees ask $124.5m from governor

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday approved a $980,000 renovation of University property in Boston to accommodate the president's office, which is being forced to move from its present rental space because of state legislative action this summer.

The board also approved a $124.5 million budget for fiscal year 1979.

According to the trustee decision, four floors will be permanently renovated on University property at 100 Arlington St. Boston which now houses the College of Public and Community Services of the UMass-Boston campus.

The state-senate this summer allocated only enough money to rent the president's five year old office at One Washington Mall until the lease runs out in October.

The University has been paying $143,600 annually to rent the president's office.

Until the Arlington St. space is ready for occupancy, the University will use money from its Trust Fund Interest account to rent office space on a monthly basis, according to Katherine Hanson, UMass vice president.

Money in this account is derived from gifts and interest returns, she said.

Two of the four floors being renovated in the 13 story Arlington St. building will be used for the presidents office and University administration, while the other two will be used by the Boston campus administration.

John Strange, dean of the College of Public and Community Services, housed in the building, said Arlington St. is a "fine location" for a University Center.

The 1979 budget for the University, as requested by UMass officials, is "not a great go-ahead budget," Hanson said.

The state senate this summer located $109 million to the University for it's 1978 budget.

Most of the increases in the 1979 budget, Hanson said, is in the personnel area. The University has to annualize salaries and also pay employes for an additional week in 1979.

Hanson said the University has to appropriate 12 month salaries in 1979 to employes hired midway in 1978. The University will also be paying it's employes for 53 weeks in 1979 because the state senate added the extra week to even off the fiscal year, which ends in June.

The UMass-Amherst campus is aiming for a six per cent vacancy rate in 1979, a nine per cent decrease from the last two years of budgetary crises, according to George Beatty, of the campus budget office.

Before the financial crisis, Beatty said there was a three per cent vacancy rate on the Amherst campus. This year the vacancy rate is down to 1 per cent, he said.

The Amherst campus has 3,706 authorized positions, of which 3,298 will be filled this year, Beatty said.

Vacancies were filled this year by using the $1.8 million additional allocations in the annual budget. Beatty said 3,509 campus positions will be filled in 1979.

HELP WANTED: A public institution of higher learning with little, if any, money — and no investments — seeks a person capable of mismanaging its operations in the role of president. Must be a political opponent of the governor.

Don't worry, Howard White, your ad seeking applicants for UMass president will not read this way. White, press aid to outgoing UMass President Robert C. Wood, yesterday purchased a $25 advertisement from the Collegian for the Sept. 20 issue.

White was on campus for yesterday's trustee meeting.

The ad for Wood's successor is looking for candidates "with recognized status in the academic community and broad experience in positions of leadership in university administration."

The president, the ad reads, is the executive office of the University system, to whom the chancellors of the campuses report.

A search committee, composed of University trustees, faculty, and students, has been appointed by Trustee Chairperson Joseph C. Healy to screen applicants and recommend a candidate to replace Wood, who in June announced he would resign his position effective Jan. 1, 1978.

Former Student Government Association co-President Paul M. Cronin is representing students at the Amherst campus while Lewis C. Mainzer of the political science department represents campus faculty, on the search committee.

As for applicants, the best person to know ... well, money will help. White has to pay for the ad somehow.

Plan proposes moving students out of hotel

By MARK LECESSE
Collegian Staff

A nine-point plan for relocating students now housed on the fifth floor of the Campus Center Hotel was issued yesterday by Robert L. Campbell, Director of Resource Management. According to Campbell, there are approximately 40 male students still living in the hotel.

The plan provides for two "satellite" employees of the housing office, Dennis Fenton, ex-UMass wrestling star, and John Ringle, to work out of the fifth floor of the hotel relocating students.

Fenton and Ringle are now living on the fifth floor in an effort to "establish a trust with the students there," said Campbell.

According to the plan, when the housing office discovers an open living space, either Fenton or Ringle would accompany the student to look at it. If the student decides he does not want to move into that space, he may return to the hotel.

Many students choose to move to a space that they understand is temporary, such as a dormitory lounge, just to get out of the hotel, Campbell said.

However, the student does not have the perogative, according to Campbell, to turn down any space that is classified as "permanent." These spaces include rooms or areas originally designed as permanent student housing but have been used in the past few years for other purposes, such as storage, a lounge or a weight room.

The only exceptions to this, said Campbell, would be if the space represented "an untenable living situation."

Dean of Students, William F. Field said last night the administrators "would hold the right to judge what is a 'real' room."

Campbell said the process of transferring students from the hotel into permanent quarters will be "inexorably slow", but also said, "there is no intention to leave these people here for the semester."

Police in Northampton digging for two bodies

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (UPI) — State Police equipped with a backhoe searched in a heavily wooded area yesterday for the bodies of two Boston women — believed slain because they witnessed a murder and secretly buried in western Massachusetts two-and-one-half years ago.

Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt identified the women as Susan C. Webster, 19, and Karen T. Spinney, 18, both of the city's Jamaica Plain section.

Delahunt said the women were last seen on the night of Feb. 21, 1975 in the Roslindale section of the city, when 22-year-old Ralph Cirvinale was shot to death outside a neighborhood bar.

Delahunt said the two missing women witnessed Cirvinale's murder. He said authorities believe they were taken to an isolated spot in the MDC Blue Hills Reservation. There they were stabbed several times, their bodies were transported to Northampton in a car trunk and they were buried, he said.

Police said the search by about a dozen men was concentrated on woods in the Leeds section of Northampton, northwest of the downtown area and near the VA Hospital.

"They are digging right now for the bodies," Delahunt's administration assistant Robert Dillon said yesterday afternoon. "They'll probably quit at dark and try again tomorrow morning."

Delahunt said witnesses have told Boston police the women were last seen in the company of Thomas Sperrazza, 26, and John J. Stokes, Jr., 25, both also of Jamaica Plain.

Sperraza was convicted of Cirvinale's murder and is serving a life term at Walpole State Prison. Delahunt said Sperraza has kept silent, but Stokes talked to police about the missing women.

Student senate hesitates funding Kent State trip

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

A request to fund a second trip to Kent State University drew mixed reactions from the Undergraduate Student Senate last night. No decision was reached on the request.

Jay Flynn, senator from Wheeler dormitory, asked for a quorom call when the issue came up. Flynn said his constituents questioned the worth of sending a van to Kent State to protest the construction of a gym near the site of the 1970 Kent State shootings.

"Questioning the quorom is legal and prevents a minority from taking action," said Brian DeLima, speaker of the senate.

Charles Bagli, who along with DeLima and Student Government Association co-President Jon Hite last week co-sponsored a telegram to the May 4 Coalition in support of the anti-gym movement said, he was displeased with the Senate action.

"The guy acted like the politicians in Washington; underhanded and deceitful. Hundreds of students from UMass signed the petition supporting Kent State. Where's he been?" Bagli asked.

A petition is being circulated by Bagli to call an emergency meeting of the state. Signatures of 25 senators are necessary to call an emergency meeting, according to DeLima.

Last week the Senate allocated $500 to send members of the May 4th Coalition to Kent State.

Another victim found in Kansas City flood

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — A 20th victim was recovered yesterday from the receding waters of the city's worst flood in 26 years and state officials warned damage to urban and rural areas could run into billions of dollars.

City and county officials estimated that 1,200 persons were still homeless because of the rampaging waters along Brush Creek and the Blue River.

The flash flood was the result of 12 inches of rain in a 24-hour period Monday. The water surged into Brush Creek, overflowed its banks along the fancy Country Club Plaza shopping center, and moved into the Blue — wreaking havoc all the way.

A spokesman for the American Insurance Association said very few businesses damaged by the waters were covered by flood insurance.

"As far as we can determine, there are only 1,358 flood insurance policies in the metropolitan area," said Frank Lewis, a regional manager. "Most of those are for private homes."

In a letter to President Carter requesting federal disaster aid, Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton said the loss "is likely to run into the billions of dollars."

The city's last major flood in 1951 caused an estimated $1 billion in damage.

City commissioners issued an emergency declaration yesterday, permitting use of $225,000 in community development funds to help low-and moderate-income residents of the flood-stricken Kansas City, Kan., area.

For farmers, too, the flood meant trouble.

"Some individuals probably will be knocked clear to their knees," said Raymond Ritchey, acting Missouri state director of the federal Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

Kent State president pushes ahead with gym

KENT, Ohio (UPI) — Kent State University President Brage Golding said yesterday he sees "no alternative" but to build a gymnasium near where four students were shot to death and proposed dedicating the building to all victims of the tragedy.

Golding told a news conference he had formally asked the university Board of Trustees to dedicate the $6 million complex to the "slain, the wounded, the National Guradsmen, the townspeople and the university community" in memory of those involved in the May 4, 1970, shootings which climaxed a campus anti-war demonstration.

Following Golding's news conference, the May 4th Coalition, the group opposing construction of the gymnasium at the proposed site, said it will use "mass action" to stop bulldozers from returning.

The Coalition also said it will attempt to reoccupy the site on Sept. 24. The Coalition had a tent city on the site for two months but it was torn down by authorities on July 12 and mass arrests were made.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, in a related development, was asked Wednesday by relatives of the slain and wounded students to issue a 10-day stay against construction of the building.

Golding said he had made tentative plans to meet with members of the Coalition but did not say whether he will accept a challenge to debate the issue.

"I see no alternative but to build the gymnasium on its planned site which is near but not on the place where the troops fired and the students fell," said Golding.

Golding said he will ask the trustees to establish a "quiet anniversary" ceremony for the university community "to dedicate the project on noon May 4, 1978."

Golding also said he will personally construct four benches to mark the place where the four students died.

He also said he will work to close the parking lot where the students died, substitute greenery for asphalt and plant individual trees where the nine students were wounded.

S. African death mourned by many

The Christian Science Monitor

The death in detention in South Africa of Steve Biko can only sharpen the tragedy and anguish already seeping into the fabric of that lovely land. Biko, a youthful man barely out of his 20s, was probably the greatest source of individual inspiration to other South African blacks to his generation.

He was a key figure in the founding of the black consciousness movement of this decade, the aim of which is to end automatic black servility before whites and develop pride in being black. And this, to the authorities, was his crime.

Just over a month ago, this writer was talking to the tall, sturdily built but quiet-spoken Biko in King William's Town, Eastern Cape Province, where he had in effect been banished and isolated by the authorities. Everything that he said confirmed what many others had said: Biko was a moderate who believed that black and white must live together in South Africa in a multiracial society.

He expected conflict in his country, he said, because of the way in which relations between the races had been imposed by the Afrikaner government. But his aim was to minimize the conflict. South Africa, he added, was "in a peculiar situation where black and white must live together. At the end there can only be non-racial government. Indeed, in the end there will be less conflict than anywhere else in Africa."

As he saw it, the situation now was worsening because the Afrikaners had still not got round to listening to what blacks want. "They won't listen because they believe it will be too much."

Shortly after this conversation in King William's Town, Biko was arrested under the Terrorism Act. He had been detained for 101 days in 1976.

Perhaps the greatest tragedy of all in South Africa today is that the Afrikaner government, so fearful for the survival of the Afrikaans-speaking people's identity and culture, does not recognize reason on the other side when it is voiced or uttered. And repeatedly this writer heard from moderate blacks the warning that if the moderates were liquidated or brushed aside, only wild men would take their place.

At the United Nations in New York, U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young issued the following statement:

"The sudden and tragic death of Mr. Steve Biko will prove to be a major loss for the future of South Africa. No nation can afford to lose its most dedicated and creative leadership and yet prosper. I know personally how much the United States suffered nationally as a result of the similarly tragic deaths of President John F. Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. These losses cost us nearly a decade of progress. Certainly a future nonracial South Africa will mourn the loss of a dedicated native son, Mr. Biko."

A brave and independent white South African newspaper editor, Donald Woods of the East London Daily Dispatch, wrote last year: "As a journalist who has interviewed politicians not only at home in South Africa, but in America, Canada, Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Israel, I have not met in any of these countries a man as gifted with intellect, personality, and human understanding as... Steve Biko."

Mr. Woods had tried earlier to get South African Justice Minister Jimmy Kruger to lift the restrictions on Mr. Biko — to ensure there was "articulate leadership" and "avoid a situation in which black frustration would give rise to mindless violence." Mr. Kruger's response? To increase the restrictions on Mr. Biko.

Monitor correspondent June Goodwin reports from Johannesburg: A new outburst of black fury against the system of apartheid or racial segregation could come with Biko's funeral, which will probably be held Sept. 25 in King William's Town.

If police try to regulate the people who show up, there could be violence, sources say. Memorial services will be held throughout the country.

Mr. Biko is the 44th person to die while in police hands during detention under security laws. He is the 20th to have died since March, 1976. Justice Minister Kruger said Mr. Biko died because he went on a hunger strike on Sept. 5.

Biko's death is likely to unite active blacks as no other issue would, according to one longtime observer of the black community.

Certainly the deepest effect will be on the students and other young people who are Biko's followers. The youthful Biko had mass appeal among the 15- to 35-year-olds. And given the high birth rate in South Africa, "That's where the guts of the protest are," said this observer.

The instant outpouring of emotion was evident in a spontaneous prayer service held in Johannesburg in the office building where the South African Council of Churches and the Christian Institute are located. About 250 people showed up only two hours after the news of the death became known. The 250 included many students from Soweto who were in the city.

Lance faces new charges as Senate inquiry opens

WASHINGTON (UPI) — On the eve of Bert Lance's long awaited public defense against awaited public defense against what he termed "allegations, innuendo and hearsay," the White House was embarrassed yesterday by a top staff member and new charges were floated on Capitol Hill.

The charges were made at a hearing of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee by a federal bank regulator. He said Lance may have illegally received $100,000 through bank overdrafts used in his unsuccessful 1974 campaign for Georgia governor.

Three lawyers who worked on the federal investigation of Bert Lance's overdrafts at a Calhoun, Ga., bank said yesterday the Justice Department should reopen the case.

Lance, who is scheduled to testify before the committee today, said judgments about his qualifications as budget director are being made on the basis of "allegations, innuendo and hearsay."

"Scrutiny, investigation — all that's fine," he said. "You ought to be able to go through that. But when you've gone through it, you ought to be able to present your side of the case in a sense of fairness — and be heard out before any decision is made."

White House Press secretary Powell said Carter still has confidence in Lance "but obviously, if he feels that he should ask for the resignation, of course he would do it. It would not...be any easy thing to do."

State banking officials and bankers say that Bert Lance's questioned banking practices would be illegal in most states. And they deny vehemently that the overdraft policies followed by Lance's Georgia banks are common practice.

The officials and bankers, responding to a nationwide UPI survey, used words such as "unbelievable," "not within normal ethical standards," — "poor management practice," and "excessive" to describe the overdrafts extended to lance by the banks he controlled in Georgia.

Shortage predicted for Boston area housing

BOSTON (UPI) — A regional planning agency says housing in the Boston area has dropped to its lowest point in 17 years and at its present rate will meet less than half the region's needs.

"If this trend continues, there is likely to be a housing shortage in the region coupled with increased pressure on existing housing supply," according to a Metropolitan Area Planning Council report released Tuesday.

The council said 7,300 new housing units were built in 1976 in Boston and communities bordering it within Route 495, the lowest number since 1960.

The region will need 18,000 to 23,000 new units a year to meet growing demand for housing, according to the study. From 1980 to 1995, the region will need 16,000-21,000 new units a year, the study said.

Council spokesman Leo Bogorad says the percentage of the population of homebuying age is expected to increase from 22 per cent in 1970 to nearly 31 per cent in 1995, putting increasing pressure on the housing market.

The study blames the drop in housing starts on scarcity and high prices of land, financing costs, zoning and other growth restrictions, lower government subsidies, and the cost of new housing, which has almost doubled since 1960.

The council study said about 75 per cent of new housing built in the Boston area since 1960 was in suburban areas, particularly southwest and south of the city.

Investigator may travel to South Korea

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House committee probing South Korean influence-buying met privately yesterday on "extremely sensitive" matters, including the possibility of sending investigator Leon Jaworski to question Tongsun Park in Seoul, sources said.

It also was learned that Park's American attorney plans to fly to Seoul Friday to meet with him. Park, a millionnaire rice trader, was indicted last week by a federal grand jury on charges of trying to influence congressmen on Korean issues with payoffs, gifts and favors.

The House Ethics Committee spent two hours secretly with Jaworksi, its special counsel. He said later he does not know whether he would accept if the South Korean government invites him to interrogate Park.

For now, he said, there are "no bags packed or anything." Committee Chairman John Flynt, D-Ga., said "the matters which were discussed are of an extremely sensitive nature and it would be nonproductive and self-defeating if they were discussed publicly."

Sources close to the panel's investigation said "the discussion we had about any possible Korean trip was very brief," but "it's under consideration."

A sampling of committee members suggested mixed opinions on the matter. Rep. Albert Quie, R-Minn., said, "I think it would be good if he went."

Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., said, "I would be all in favor it it, provided we can be assured he would get something worthwhile."

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said, "I would not favor his going immediately. Some things have to happen before he agrees to go over," including a South Korean promise a trip would be productive.

Park, who left for England when the scandal surfaced, has refused to return to Washington to face a 36-count indictment by a federal grand jury. He went to Seoul last month to visit his 80-year-old mother who was ill, according to his attorney, William Hundley.

The indictment was handed down while Park was in Korea and Hundley said he told his client to "stay put for the time being."

WASHINGTON — Two former Secretaries of State, Dean Rusk (left) and Henry Kissinger share a joke while testifying in favor of President Carter's Panama Canal Treaty before a House committee yesterday. (UPI)

Rusk, Kissinger back Carter's canal treaty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Secretaries of State Henry A. Kissinger and Dean Rusk said yesterday that the new Panama Canal treaty would give the United States more authority to keep the waterway open than the 74-year-old agreement under which the canal was built.

Firmly supporting the treaty signed by President Carter last week, Kissinger and Rusk sought to answer critics who say the Panamanians might seize early control, close the canal or exclude the United States or other nations from using it.

The treaty, which faces a ratification vote in the Senate early next year, provides for the United States to gradually relinquish control until the year 2000, when the waterway would be turned over to Panama.

While the two agreements that comprise the treaty provide for the withdrawal of all U.S. military forces from the Canal Zone, they also declare that the United States and Panama agree forever "to maintain the regime of neutrality established in this treaty."

"We have in the treaty the foundation for acting, if need be, to keep the canal neutral and open," Kissinger said.

He said that the 1903 pact under which the United States built the canal and established sovereignty "was not even signed by a Panamanian ... and is universally regarded as inequitable."

Rusk agreed, saying, "If, God forbid, it should ever become necessary for a president and a Congress to take strong measures to keep the canal functioning and safe, they would be in a far stronger position ... under the Treaties of 1977 than under the anachronistic Treaty of 1903."

In side-by-side testimony before the House International Relations Committee, Kissinger and Rusk said that, if the United States were forced to send troops to keep the canal open, there would be international support under the new treaty.

Without the treaty, Kissinger said, "it would be impossible for even our friends in the hemisphere to support us."

Rusk told the committee that the terms of the treaty negotiated with the government of Gen. Omar Torrijos are much more favorable to the United States than any agreement he could have reached with the more democratic regimes in power at the time he was in office.

"Opponents of these treaties object to our making such agreements with a dictator," he said, but, in fact, the more democratic the regime, the more pressure mounts for concessions favorable to Panama.

At the same time Wednesday, the State Department expressed gratitude over Panama's decision to permit the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to investigate the situation there. The commission's findings probably will undercut claims by antitreaty forces that negotiations with Torrijos were unwise, officials said.

A moment of triumph

With the help of considerable prodding from concerned students, the UMass Board of Trustees voted yesterday to divest all university-held stock in corporations operating in South Africa. The move represents a major victory for those activists who committed tremendous amounts of time and effort to the campaign against the stocks.

Particularly active in the effort was the Committee for the Liberation of South Africa, whose tactics ranged from workshops and letters to local publications, to last spring's march on Whitmore through a miserable April drizzle. For the Committee, and hopefully for the rest of us, this is only a moment of triumph in the ongoing struggle against South Africa's oppressive apartheid system.

The boycotts, workshops and protests will continue until the black and "colored" people of South Africa are liberated.

The trustees themselves should be commended for a decision that, although it could perhaps have come sooner, was sweeping in scope, proclaiming that all stocks involving operations in South Africa should be sold without further investigation.

The divestiture will, at least for the time being, put the university back in compliance with its own guidelines regarding investments. Those guidelines forbid investments in companies who do not commit themselves to various social goals, including protection of health and environment and equal employment opportunities. One hopes that future investments, particularly those which replace the ones being sold in the next 90 days, will reflect those values and eliminate the necessity for future protests.

Artificial additives and pigeon droppings

Pre-registering is no fun. It's like going to Mexico and instead of haggling over prices at a bustling, fly infested market you buy post cards and Montezuma Tequila T-shirts at Sears.

It is that time of year that course catalogues are used more than toilet paper — although they may be interchangeable. Just breeze through the book like my friend Jon,

"Duh, I want ah one o' doze, and ah one o' doze, and ah-ah g-g-gimme ah wa-wa-one a deeze."

Some forego conventional course listings and go directly to "the source" for information about classes, that of friends. They hear about courses by "word of mouth" (which brings up the question: What other part of your body can talk?). When suggesting these courses the description is usually, "It's a gut!" This means the course requirements are a pulse rate, a number two pencil, and an IQ not exceeding the number of floors in the library.

Now, when adding a course don't chase the chairman of a department around. Don't bribe a teacher by calling him — or her or it in many cases — professor or doctor. Go to the secretary and let her bum a cigarette off you. Let her keep your pen that she used to sign your form. Better yet go to the building's janitor and let him scrawl some kind of official looking signature onto your computer sheet.

When dropping a course auction it off to the people on the waiting list. Please, No Checks Allowed.

Personally I'm in a bind. By avoiding early morning classes and Core E requirements I'm left with twelve credits in gym and a psych course in motivation. The problem is my skin can't handle the six showers a day and I can't get excited about going to the motivation class.

My add-drop sheet is more spotted than a leopard. With all the erasure marks and rips it looks like the great white hunter got to it before the registrar.

All this signing in and signing out I feel like a guest on the What's My Line Show. Maybe I'll just audit the damn semester.

The formalized normalized

By MARK WILDING

The depressing word out of Washington these days is "normalize", as in President Carter's, "We seek to normalize relations with China." For those of you not versed in the normalizing ways of the world let me make clear that only relations can be normalized. Distant relations, blood relations, and near relations can't be normalized. Also, relations can only be normalized between two parties, such as Martha's Vineyard and Massachusetts, or Holboken and Mesopotamia.

From what I've gathered one normalizes relations by affecting a spirit of congeniality and compromise. For instance relations between Israel and the Palestinians would be forever normalized if the latter would agree to postponing Israel's destruction in return for an Israeli promise to give up the West Bank and lop two days off Chanukah.

Edwin Newman in his book "A Civil Tongue" claims that the use of ize as in politicalize, strategize, and maximize (and a slew of others the Carter administration has popularized) "is thought to have a business-like ring, or to sound technical. What those who use ize overlook is that it is a leaden syllable — and that it imposes monotony on the language by making so many words sound the same." Of course he's wrong. Problem children in school would be that much more impelled to their civic duties by a guidance counselor who advised them to metamorphize their ways and normalize relations with their teachers than a mentor who told them to shut up and tow the line. Boxers would also be grateful to a referee who made the pre-fight instructions sound like an address to the United Nations; "I'm here to normalize relations. Come out clean, any low blows or stray knees will be considered a breach of said such relations. Shake hands and will the most optimizing man win!

But it is in looking to the past that we see what might have been if ize had enjoyed the popularity it does today ... It is 1776 and Nathan Hale mounts the gallows.

British Commander — "Do you have anything to say, spy?"

Nathan — "I only regret that I have but one life to maximize for my country."

British Commander — "What a marvelous speaker! What a pity that relations between our two countries aren't normalized. Still your country has been radicalized and we must ferret them out. Mind you, you're a decent enough chap. And it would be a tremendous loss to the world to lose such a vitalizing speaker. All those who wish to commute the sentence — say aye! All those opposed — nay! Jolly good show, the ize have it!"

It is a century later as General Jackson's troops march into Frederick, Maryland on a cool September morn. Suddenly a Union flag is espied. It is being waved by an old gray head named Barbara Frietchie.

Troops — "C'mon you old gray head, give us the flag or we'll cut off your supply of hoochie."

Barbara — "Shoot if you must this old gray head, but spare your country's flag."

General Jackson — "Maam, we seek merely to normalize relations."

Barbara — "Well you tell your men to finalize our deal and the flag is yours."

General Jackson — "Seargent give her what she wants or I'll privatize you."

President Carter is a man of much influence. The ize of the nation are upon him and undoubtedly many admirers will emulate him in his izing of words and relations. I don't know about you but Ize sure do miss detente.

The use of violence against oppression

To the Editor:

Mr. Beck's letter yesterday characterized the events of May 4, 1970 as a case of "one group of humans" "pitifully" opening fire on another "group of humans". Well, in one sense he is right, because a group of National Guardsmen did open fire on a group of students. But there was nothing pitiful about it, it was vicious, unprovoked slaughter — it was murder. And now the same "group of humans" who sent in the Guard to perpetrate this crime are working overtime to obscure even the fact that four students were shot down, not to mention their own responsibility.

We would like to ask Mr. Beck why it is that the driving of a jeep into the demonstration, which could have resulted in serious injury or even death, "in no way worries" him as much as righteously angry students tearing down a chicken-wire fence?

We are not "advocating" violence; in fact, the May 4 Coalition has made every effort to settle this matter through "acceptable" channels — right up to the Supreme Court. The demonstrations at Kent State have been orderly — but militant, because the people are determined to prevent construction of the gym on that site.

It is not the demonstrators who are creating a confrontation — it is the Trustees of Kent State, the bankers and businessmen that they are and that they represent, who are confronting us with this outrage, forcing us to struggle against them to insure that justice is done. We live in a system that places the profits of a few above the needs of the many, that forces young men to fight and die in its wars to plunder the world, that slaps us in the face with its abuses day after day — and when the people rise up against all this, they risk being shot down, like they were at Kent State. Weren't the Vietnamese people justified in using violence to free their country from American control? Weren't the Black people of this country justified in their use of violence in the late 60's to defend themselves in the face of brutal police repression? So who is the real source of violence? The people? We think not.

The violence that the oppressed are forced to use against their oppressors is not equal to the violence used by the oppressors to keep the people down. The violence that the mugger employs to subdue his victim is not the same as that which the victim employs to rid himself of his attacker.

Teach-in article inaccurate

To the Editor:

I was appalled by the article which appeared September 13 entitled: "Southern Africa Teach-In Increases Sensitivity", in which a number of statements were erroneously ascribed to me.

Firstly, not once in my presentation did I use the word "Negro", a designation that seems dead and buried even for Eric Sevareids' vocabulary. Although the word did not appear between quotation marks, the attempted paraphrasing of my statements may cause many readers to attribute its use to me. Its repeated use was apparently not accidental but seemed rather related to a mental pattern or attitude.

Secondly, I did not say: "it would be suicidal to treat the issue in South Africa as Blacks did in America, by demonstrating and bombing." In fact my statement was exactly the opposite. I said — and the available tapes will bear me out — that the Boer regime's repressive acts and laws, have left Africans no constitutional or peaceful alternative to violence; that throughout our history, peaceful avenues of protest have been shut down with bullets, banishment, imprisonment and other assorted instruments of torture. Hence (I continued) it would be naive for anyone to insist on the prescription of nonviolent agitation as a viable weapon for change.

Thirdly, it is imperative that your newspaper send out reporters who have some background in the area they are assigned to cover. For instance, the Tomlison Report, the Native Land Act of 1913 or the Act of the Union of South Africa, were not humane acts designed to redress resentment to racist and capitalist exploitation, as implied by the article. On the contrary, they were acts coldly calculated to aggravate African exploitation and entrench white privilege.

Moore House cooperation

To the Editor:

We would like to express our sincere thanks and convey our gratitude to the staff and residents of Moore House for their patience and openmindedness throughout the duration of this housing crunch. The situation has not been as easy one for anyone involved. However, our job has been made far less difficult through the combined efforts of all residents. When emotions have run high within the University, particularly within Southwest, people of Moore have shown maturity and used consideration by seeking information as to the specific circumstances of Moore House, rather than reacting blindly to the overall mood of the campus.

Moore House has two of its floor lounges converted into temporary rooms to accommodate some of the male student overflow. The people on the floors involved have shown a remarkable willingness to accommodate and incorporate these students into the mainstream of dorm life.

We're proud of the residents of Moore House for not misdirecting their anger and frustration with the Administration by denying the victims of the crisis the experience of dorm life. We have no doubt, that by working with Housing, for the dorm, and with the continued support of the residents, we will maintain the exemplary community spirit so characteristic of Moore House.

Of life, death and New York

Belie your fears ye constituents of UMass. You no longer have to fear that your presence here might be unexplainable if you admit that getting an education is not the whole answer.

Through prolonged contact with some of the University's personal identity development resources and discussions with some of my friends (great commentators on the quality and status of existence and even better at assessing the whole essence of any individual — in a word omniscient), I have developed a radical yet true hypothesis as to why human beings are quixotically drawn to UMass and other institutions of higher learning, sometimes known as dispensers of higher education.

jerry rogers

University life is a point on a spectrum ranging from birth to death. Not a very interesting or particularly enlightening fact, this is true, but let's narrow and focus and see what we can see.

It is also a life that seems to rest, for those drawn to it, somewhere between high school and New York.

Throughout our lives we are constantly developing something or other. In childhood we develop a sketchy outline of our future social being. In high school this is narrowed to more intensive education and increased movement away from the family and toward social interaction. And physical fitness is big too.

And what about UMass?

Well, one of my omniscient friends, P.J. Prokop, the person who is just finishing up her assessment of one year of UMass' existence, points out, rather correctly that UMass is the zone between high school and real life.

Now, she's on the right track but falls a bit short. But before we can go on, let us contemplate what "real life" is. In the most extreme sense, New York is the most obvious example of real life. New York is the most confusing collection of diverse people and ideas in one place anywhere on the fact of the earth. If he, she or it exists as someone or something to be used in social interaction, he, she or it is also present in New York. So, if we substitute New York for "real life", it's then verified that University life exists between high school and New York.

To guage what this means we must look at what it means to live in New York, for we already know what it means to live through high school, and conduct some comparisons.

Another omniscient acquaintance of mine, Mark Danna, the International Frisbee Association's New York regional director and assessor of the state of Frisbee (fast becoming a popular way of life), spoke to me about a few of his friends from Frisbee Hill, just off 72nd Street in Central Park.

Speaking of their developing social beings, he pointed out, "Basically to live in New York, you have to be an anarchist."

Our society, the institution that exists so that individuals develop as social beings and form means of social interaction, demands rationality.

Anarchists are, if you stop to think about it, the most rational people around. They are intelligent enough and forthright enough to point out to us the arbitrary nature of all authority in any form. While most of us will never reach this pinnacle of socially interactive success, while we are at UMass, we head in that direction.

Think about it and it will all begin to make sense.

We all increase, hopefully, while we are here, the level of our intelligence. And the diversity of people and ideas here forces us to accept or reject ideas presented to us all the time. We do this, obviously, based on our own dearly held beliefs. The formation of beliefs and, subsequently, a personally tailored philosophy of life, is one of the most fundamental processes of human life and education. The more finely we develop our personal philosophies of life, the more we must reject ideas unsuited to our philosophy, and, therefore, the more anarchistic we become.

So, the real purpose of higher education then and our purpose here is to foster the development of anarchism. This must be true, because I say so.

Pot: the hypocrisy of decriminalization

By TOM DEVINE

There has been a lot of discussion lately over whether or not Massachusetts should become the ninth state in the Union to decriminalize the possession of small amounts of marijuana. Those who have been working for decriminalization, such as UMass co-president Jon Hite, deserve credit for their efforts to liberalize our state's repressive marijuana laws. After all, at least they are trying to do something about the problem, which is more than can be said for most dopers, who are content to get high and do nothing as long as the police aren't on their doorstep.

commentary

However, before everyone starts rallying behind decriminalization, perhaps we would all do ourselves a favor by considering what decriminalization really means and whether it truly serves the best interests of marijuana smokers.

At first glance decriminalization seems like a good idea; lower the penalties for possession to a simple fine, so that users won't have to worry about going to jail if caught off guard by the police. Marijuana would of course still be illegal and the fine (which would range anywhere from twenty to a couple hundred dollars) could prove awfully expensive if you were caught very often. Still, if decriminalization is not exactly ideal, almost any reform in the current law would be welcomed. However, the question still remains; is decriminalization really an improvement?

In all of the states which have thus far decriminalized marijuana none have lessened the penalties for the sale of it. In fact in California, where marijuana was decriminalized last year amidst much back patting among liberals, the penalty for dealing remains ten years to life imprisonment. One of the major arguments in favor of decriminalization (and which has won the cause the vote of many a conservative legislator) is that the money saved because of no longer having to track down and try small time users could then be spent on jailing dealers. By dealers I mean the friends and acquaintances that you purchase your marijuana from and who will be placed in greater danger the minute decriminalization goes into effect. In fact, in light of all the money decriminalization will save the state in enforcement, court costs, etc. it's hard to determine whether decriminalization represents the desire for any genuine reform or simply the realization by the government that it is more effective to concentrate on shutting down the suppliers than harassing the customers.

Decriminalization it seems, is little more than a smoke screen to divert the energy of reformers and to conceal the real issue in the marijuana question. That issue is why our government insists on keeping marijuana illegal. Up until the 1930's marijuana was always legal in this country. Unfortunately for the past forty years or so we've been in the midst of a bizarre prohibition that has ruined the lives of untold thousands who have wasted in jails across the country.

The Government has stalled in every imaginable way from having to face the marijuana issue head on. All manners of scare tactics have been used (such as the classically absurd allegation a few years ago that marijuana may cause men to grow breasts) yet despite years of intensive research on an international scale into the possible side effects of marijuana use (an investigation far more extensive than those given drums for use in our food) the overwhelming preponderance of evidence remains strongly in favor of its safety.

Of course only the most naive believe that the government is really concerned over whether marijuana is harmful anyway. How can our government, which unquestioningly permits the unrestrained use of two proven killer drugs (nicotine and alcohol), possibly claim with any credibility that our drug laws are designed to protect the public?

Unfortunately it was easier for the Government to get us into the present prohibition than it will be for it to get us out of it. If the United States ever decides to legalize marijuana (and we're a long way from that point yet) few people realize the incredibly complex legal process involved before legal marijuana can reach the marketplace.

The United States has many anti-narcotic treaties with foreign countries which include agreements that neither nation shall legalize marijuana. These must be amended by international negotiations before the U.S. can even consider legalization. Then the Congress must repeal the federal statutes before finally the state legislature can begin legalizing marijuana once and for all. This process will take years to complete, and then only after we decide to start the procedure in motion.

It's obvious then that we can hardly afford to settle for so small a so-called reform as decriminalization, a reform that places our suppliers in even greater danger than under present laws once the police are freed to direct all their energies against them. Time spent struggling for decriminalization is time wasted since all our energy should be directed toward the ultimate goal, the too long delayed return of legal marijuana in America.

Decriminalization is not the answer, short term or otherwise, for as long as anyone is being arrested the issue is not resolved and the injustice is not corrected. If only common sense would be allowed to prevail in this all too emotional issue then we could put an end once and for all to the tragedies our hypocritical drug laws are responsible for every day.

News in Brief

Cholera breaks in Middle East

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI) Jordan yesterday reported 28 new cholera cases in the past 24 hours but said it was "on its way" to turning back an epidemic that has killed 68 persons in neighboring Syria and one in Lebanon.

Jordan has now reported a total of 289 cholera cases. Other cases have also been reported in Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan and Kuwait.

Britain, Italy, West Germany and The Netherlands also have reported single cases of cholera from travelers from the Middle East.

But cholera deaths mostly have been limited to Syria, where over 2,100 cases have been reported since late last month.

"Jordan is on its way to controlling the cholera epidemic," Health Minister Abdulrauf Rawabdeh told reporters.

The remarks came as Jordanian health officials worked overtime to keep the disease from spreading during the three-day holiday marking the end of the Moslem holy month of Ramadan.

Complaints heard on Women's Year

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Jesse Helms called a hearing yesterday to hear complaints from women contending that taxpayer-financed International Women's Year conferences across the nation were dominated by radical feminists.

Helms, R-N.C., who opposed the $5 million allocation Congress game the Women's Year commission, scheduled the hearing without Senate sanction to review complaints he said he got from all parts of the country.

The hearing room was jammed with an audience dominated by middle-aged women who applauded anti-feminist comments made by witnesses, and congressmen who watched the proceedings.

Most witnesses complained that the 56 IWY meetings — held in preparation for a national conference in Houston Nov. 18-21 — denied access to opponents of the Equal Rights Amendment, abortion and government-funded child care centers.

Chemical tagging may catch bombers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Chemical "tags" in explosives could speed investigation of terrorist bombings, an expert told Congress yesterday.

A. Atley Peterson of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms told a Senate Judiciary subcommittee explosive manufacturers should be required to include chemical additives which can survive detonation.

Such chemical tagging, Peterson said, would provide vital clues to the source of the explosive and held lead investigators to those responsible for bombings.

While the agency traces about 100 explosives each month, suspects in criminal bombings are arrested only about one-third as often as in firearms crimes, Peterson said —largely because detonation destroys evidence.

Compromise passed on minimum wage

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Senate committee yesterday approved a compromise minimum wage bill worked out by the White House and organized labor. The House finished general floor debate on the increases and will vote on amendments today.

Before reporting out the bill, the Senate Human Resources Committee defeated, 10-4, an amendment by Sen. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., to allow employers to pay teenagers less than minimum wage.

Another attempt at the special youth differential — 75 per cent of the minimum for the first six months of employment — was planned on the House floor.

The legislation would raise the current $2.30 an hour minimum wage to $2.65 next year, with further automatic increases yearly geared to average production wages. It also would cut what employers can deduct from the minimum wage for employes who receive tips.

Originally the AFL-CIO sought a $3 minimum compared — to $2.50 by the Carter administration.

X-ray benefits may outweigh hazards

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A leading cancer specialist said yesterday X-rays offer the first real possibility of reducing the death rate from breast cancer, but a government researcher warned the radiation risk might outweigh the benefits for some women.

The pros and cons of breast X-rays were debated at the opening of a three-day meeting sponsored by the National Institutes of Health to evaluate the benefits and risks of the mammograms when used to search for breast cancer in women without symptoms.

Breast cancer is expected to strike one of every 14 American women sometime during her lifetime and the disease is estimated to claim 33,000 lives this year.

Dr. Benjamin Byrd, chairman of the American Cancer Society task force on breast cancer, said mammography is the first significant modern advance in detecting early breast cancer when doctors say it can most successfully be treated.

"Mammography offers the first real possibility of reducing the ever constant mortality rate from breast cancer," Byrd said. "If indeed presumptive risks do exist, this should not nullify the lifesaving potential of low dose mammography."

Kiddie porn against the law

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously approved legislation Wednesday setting harsh fines and prison terms for persons who produce, sell or distribute pornography featuring children.

The legislation also would outlaw transportation of young boys across state lines for prostitution.

The bill, sent to the Senate floor, makes the growing child pornography business a new federal crime under obscenity statutes. In addition, it broadens the existing law prohibiting interstate transportation of minor females for immoral purposes to include children of both sexes under the age of 18.

The bill subjects those who originate or distribute so-called "kid porn" to a $10,000 fine, 10 years in prison or both for the first offense. Second offenders could be fined $15,000, imprisoned for 15 years or both.

Maine balloonist tries for first

BAR HARBOR, Maine (UPI) — Dewey Reinhard, hard at work preparing for his attempt to be the first person to cross the Atlantic Ocean by balloon, said Wednesday he wasn't discouraged by this week's failure of New Mexicans Max Anderson and Ben Abruzzo.

Reinhard, who will launch from Bar Harbor perhaps during the coming weekend, said he hopes he has learned from the Anderson-Abruzzo flight, which came to an end when their balloon "Double Eagle" came down in the north Atlantic off Iceland.

He will attempt to follow the shipping lanes, Reinhard said, staying farther south than Anderson and Abruzzo.

Environmental research funds available

The Advisory Office of the Institute for Man and Environment has announced that Undergraduate Research Funds are available for environmental projects. Grants range in size from $25 to $200, and cover transportation, postage, small equipment and other research costs. Proposals are due at the Advisory Office, IME, by Oct. 7.

Last year, 14 proposals were submitted. Research topics included silviculture and forestry, fecal pollution, ozone injury, vegetational analysis, land use impact on water quality, solar collectors, anaeorobic methane converters, petrography in the Keene Valley, the bottle bill, asbestos hazards and frog aquaculture. Seven proposals were funded.

An Undergraduate student interested in applying for funds must submit a research proposal, itemized budget and a letter of endorsement from a faculty sponsor. Last year, faculty supporting proposals came from eight academic departments and MassPIRG. At the conclusion of the research, the student must submit a Research Report.

Awards for the year will be announced by Oct. 28. Additional information is available from undergraduate advisors in most departments or from G. Anderson, IME Advising Office, Blaisdell House (behind Thompson Tower), 5-0648.

N.H. commission rejects program to aid battered wives

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The New Hampshire Commission on the Status of Women doesn't want to help battered wives, a position that has angered other women's groups and may prompt a new legislative effort to abolish the agency.

Rep. Gale Morrison, R-Hudson, said yesterday that Gov. Meldrim Thomson should remove the commissioners who rejected a program to aid battered women.

The commission, she said, "has a two-year history of ignoring its legislative mandate and the needs of the women of New Hampshire."

The New Hampshire Coalition of Battered Women scheduled a news conference for Thursday on the steps of the statehouse.

John Artemis, head of the state chapter of the National Organization for Women, said, "The commission doesn't care how many battered women cry themselves to sleep tonight after being beaten one more time."

The commission this week rejected a plan to help battered wives, calling any such program "an invasion of privacy."

Commission members, appointed by Thomson, said wife-beating is caused by the rise of feminism.

"Some women libbers irritate the hell out of their husbands," said Commissioner Gloria Belzil of Nashua.

But the NOW chairwoman said, "It's dangerous and appalling that a government commission condones wifebeating."

Frances Drown, a dissenting member of the commission who had proposed the program to aid battered women, said she would pursue her project. She said several women's group representatives would meet in Concord on Wednesday to discuss the proposal.

Isabel Archey, a spokeswoman for the Nashua NOW chapter, said, "If anything, feminism has helped to bring that age-old horror to light."

Rep. Susan McLane, R-Concord, chairwoman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said the commission action and statements were "worse than absurd."

"They practically said a man has the right to beat his wife," she said.

Jagger denies Trudeau rumors

LONDON (UPI) — Rolling Stone Mick Jagger — whose name was once linked romantically with Margaret Trudeau, wife of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau — said yesterday he "wouldn't go near her with a barge pole."

Jagger also said in an interview with the London newspaper The Evening Standard, "I think she was just a very sick girl in search of something."

Jagger said it "would have been difficult to kick her out" of the Rolling Stone night club appearance last March that touched off rumors of a Jagger-Trudeau liaison.

"She had six security men with two guns each. No thank you. She was a very determined young lady ... er ... older woman," he said.

Gossip columnists were quick to note that Mrs. Trudeau had attended the Stones' night club appearance in Toronto on her anniversary — March 5 — without her husband.

"I wouldn't go near her with a barge pole," Jagger said.

Mrs. Trudeau, the 28-year-old mother of three young sons, separated from her husband last spring. However, she still spends time with him and the children in Ottawa although they don't live together.

She also spends a good deal of time in New York, where she is frequently seen on the social circuit.

Jagger also emphatically denied that his marriage to his wife, Bianca, was about to break up.
